Science Budget

[Relevant documents: The Second Report of Session 1993-94 from the Science and Technology Committee on the Forward Look of Government-Funded Science, Engineering and Technology 1994 (HC 422), the First Report of Session 1994-95 on the Efficiency Unit Scrutiny of Public Sector Research Establishments (HC 19) and European Community Document No. 10564/94, relating to co-ordination of research and development]

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Wells.]

7.12 pm

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (Mr. David Hunt): The date 2 February is fast becoming an important day in the science calendar. On this day last year, we debated the orders creating the new research councils. This year, again, we have a welcome opportunity to focus on the Government's science policy. Today we announce a science budget that is a blueprint for the future—£1.3 billion, which will keep Britain in the premier league for research and ensure that British scientists and engineers remain some of the best in the world.

Today also gives me the chance to pay tribute to the work of the Science and Technology Select Committee, under the admirable chairmanship of my hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw). The Committee has made a prominent contribution to debate on science policy, not least through its report on "First Forward Look", to which the Government responded earlier this week.

Last November, the Government demonstrated yet again that science and engineering were among our highest priorities when we were able to maintain the science budget at its current record level, despite the pressures on public spending. In allocating that budget now, I plan to build on the principles of the 1993 White Paper "Realising our Potential".

When I became Cabinet Minister with responsibility for science, I said that I wanted to build on the work of my predecessor, who performed such an outstanding job in putting science and engineering at the top of the United Kingdom political agenda. In doing that, we must ensure that we sustain the excellence of our science base, that our intellectual resources are harnessed to improving the country's economic performance and quality of life and that we promote partnership between the science base, industry and Government.

We must also retain our strong commitment to curiosity-driven research. We do not want university departments to become short-term problem-solvers for industry. The science base must concentrate on its proper role, which is the training of highly skilled men and women and research at the frontiers of knowledge, but those frontiers are expanding and we cannot possibly cover everything. We need to focus our efforts on the areas that we judge most likely to bear fruit. That is what the UK's first technology foresight programme is all about. It has provided a unique opportunity for Government, industry and the science base to pool their best people and to ensure that we pull together. Overall, some 10,000 people have had the opportunity to take part. The outcomes of the programme will be published this spring. I believe that they will set a challenging agenda for the future.

We also need to work across national boundaries. We cannot maintain high standards by working in isolation. We are committed to effective international co-operation in appropriate areas. That is why we have worked so hard to ensure that the individual programme lines within the fourth European framework programme reflect British priorities. That is why we worked so hard in negotiations on the large hadron collider at CERN to secure British involvement in the world's leading particle physics experiment and a budgetary framework that reflects our commitment to efficiency and value for money.

Sir Giles Shaw (Pudsey): On the point about funding for the LHC, has any progress has been made on shared funding between other European states to enable that project to proceed correctly?

Mr. Hunt: Thanks to the tremendous efforts of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, we were—at last—able to reach a satisfactory conclusion to the negotiations with an effective stand for a much more cost-effective regime, which will save considerable sums of money for the United Kingdom over the next 15 years. It will also mean that there is much more effective participation in an exciting programme that is affordable and can give good value for money.

Mrs. Ann Taylor (Dewsbury): The right hon. Gentleman says that he has saved a considerable amount of money. Is that a saving to the Government or will it be redistributed within the science budget?

Mr. Hunt: It is a saving to the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council. Our subscription to CERN is paid through that research council, as is our subscription to the science programme of the European Space Agency. I cannot predict what will happen in future public expenditure rounds, but it is a substantive saving of £5 million a year for 15 years. That will very much strengthen our ability to focus on the right priorities. I cannot predict what the exact global figure will be, but some guideline figures were announced last November. The project will release additional funds in the PPARC budget.

Sir Gerard Vaughan (Reading, East): Will my right hon. Friend expand a little more on what he means by effective participation in the European science scene?

Mr. Hunt: Probably the most effective result of the negotiations is that we know that the project will be completed and will happen. I was delighted with the agreement that was reached. As a result, the UK and other member states will benefit from an overall reduction of some 1 billion Swiss francs in the cost of the project over its lifetime from 1998 to 2008. That is worth some £70 million to UK science.

Mrs. Anne Campbell (Cambridge): Has not the considerable delay in reaching agreement on the funding of the CERN project possibly damaged the prospect of involvement from other international concerns in Japan and the United States of America?

Mr. Hunt: I do not think so, although I understand why the hon. Lady puts that point. We have now achieved a much stronger project. It was essential to establish a realistic, fair and sustainable financial and planning framework for the project. Let us not forget that we are talking about a total cost of £1.5 billion. With costs at that level, it would have been irresponsible of the Government to give approval to the LHC without that necessary framework. CERN, like all other institutions that are competing for the limited resources that are available to science, must demonstrate that it is providing the best value for money. To be assured that the LHC would be completed within the resources that are likely to be available, tight cost control was essential.

I expect that the anticipated additional contributions from non-member states will enable the LHC project to be accelerated. The current timetable, however, would still enable world-leading science to be carried out from the year 2004. In many ways, we now have a much stronger project as a result of all that has happened. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Technology led a trade delegation to CERN and a great deal of progress has been made, especially for British interests, now that the budget has been agreed.

Mr. John Denham (Southampton, Itchen): Before the right hon. Gentleman leaves the issue of international collaboration, does he agree that the position does not seem quite as rosy for working scientists? I refer, for example, to the integral project led by the astronomy department at Southampton university. Over three or four years of close technical assessment, that project has been developed in collaboration with other countries, and the European Space Agency has agreed that it is a priority project; yet PPARC has been unable to guarantee the funds to enable that international collaboration to continue. Despite the Minister's words, from the working scientists' point of view, it seems that a major opportunity for Britain to contribute to an important international science project may be lost. I fear that the problem faces scientists working in other sectors as well.

Mr. Hunt: We have moved from CERN to the ESA, but we are dealing with subscriptions and with the ability to fund those subscriptions. I shall make an announcement in a moment on making that possible. The hon. Gentleman raises an important point. I know that he is in correspondence with my parliamentary secretary about it. The Government have found the resources to fund a real terms increase in science spending in this financial year, and to maintain it in the next, but budgetary constraints require difficult decisions to be taken all the time on funding priorities.

We already devote considerable resources to astronomy. The astronomy community has no less duty to demonstrate that it is securing best value for money than any other community. Real opportunities exist to make the necessary savings in the ESA, which would improve the balance between domestic and subscription spend. There is every encouragement to ensure that we achieve the best value for money in all these programmes.

Mr. Denham: Is the Minister saying that, if savings in ESA subscriptions can be achieved, money would be recycled back into the programme to enable projects such as the integral project in Southampton to continue?

Mr. Hunt: It is for PPARC to decide how best to deploy the resources available to it. If it decides not to fund UK participation in such an integral project, it will be because it believes that other research opportunities offer better scientific value for money.

Mr. Spencer Batiste (Elmet): Will my right hon. Friend confirm that his Department will continue its strongest support for the space agency, which is such an important ingredient in ensuring that British space policy is focused, and that a proper balance exists between science and other commercial programmes that are run in the space community?

Mr. Hunt: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary, whose responsibility this is, has heard what my hon. Friend said. I am sure that the agency will work with all the others involved to ensure that we maintain a viable programme. I expect PPARC, in association with the British National Space Centre, to make strenuous efforts to obtain the best possible efficiency savings from the ESA's science budget.

We have demonstrated already that PPARC has benefited to a substantial degree from the excellent deal struck with CERN on the LHC, which will result in those financial savings. It is possible, therefore, to reduce mandatory subscriptions to the ESA by as much as £10 million a year. That gives opportunities to achieve spend at the right level. We must achieve the right balance between the domestic and the subscription spend.

Mr. John Battle (Leeds, West): So that I am absolutely clear on this issue, will the right hon. Gentleman explain whether the Government will top slice international subscriptions from PPARC's budget so that the whole cost does not fall on PPARC, half of whose budget has been taken up with paying those subscriptions? If that happens, will any benefits gained be distributed across the whole sector or will they go back to PPARC?

Mr. Hunt: The hon. Gentleman has raised an important new point. As I have already explained, our subscription to CERN is paid through PPARC. Taken together with our subscription to the science programme of the European Space Agency, those subscriptions cost some £100 million a year, but they are determined in foreign currency. Modest changes in exchange rates and in the relative economic performance of organisations' member states can have a significant effect on the sterling cost. Of course, the Government's tremendous success in putting Britain on top of the premier league for growth in Europe also has an impact. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving me the opportunity to demonstrate one of the consequences of the Government's successful economic policy, but difficulties exist for PPARC.

I am pleased to be able to inform the House that, in announcing the allocation of the science budgets, we have agreed with the chief executives of all the research councils that, where such fluctuations occur, the cost will be taken as a first charge on the scientific budget. In 1995, the cost is estimated at around £8 million, but that will not fall solely on PPARC. Because of the agreement reached right across research councils, it is taken as a first charge on the science budget.

Mr. Battle: Is the Minister saying that any surplus created as a result of fluctuation is the cost that will be shared but not the initial subscription, which will still be borne by PPARC? Is that correct?

Mr. Hunt: Yes, it is. To make it quite clear, we are talking about the fluctuations which presented such a problem for the research councils, but I hope that we have now dealt adequately with that matter. I congratulate Sir John Cadogan and all those responsible in all the research councils on having reached an agreement that removes the difficulties caused by the fluctuations.

Mr. Alan W. Williams (Carmarthen): If costs escalate during the construction phase of the LHC and it is found to be 20 per cent. or 50 per cent. more expensive than currently estimated, what guarantees are there in the agreement that it will not be an extra cost to be taken out of the research councils' budget?

Mr. Hunt: There are some very tight guarantees within the very satisfactory agreement. I have all the details here but, rather than taking up further time, I am happy to supply them to the hon. Gentleman later.

Let me put it around the other way. There are prospects for other countries to contribute to the LHC project. I look forward to key non-member states, especially the United States, Japan and Canada, participating scientifically and financially in the LHC project because I feel that they have much to offer. The agreement reached provides the best possible incentives to those nations to join the LHC project. CERN member states have made a clear commitment to build the LHC and any non-member states' contributions will be used to accelerate and enhance the project. I understand that CERN management has already initiated discussions with potential partners, and the United Kingdom remains ready and willing to offer every possible assistance. I understand that the prospects are encouraging, and I greatly welcome that.

I have today provided a written statement on the overall allocation of the science budget for 1995-96.

Dr. Michael Clark (Rochford): While my right hon. Friend is talking about particle physics, may I remind him that molecular chemistry is also very important? The Royal Society of Chemistry is concerned that, as large sums of money are spent on expensive physics experiments, some of the more basic needs of chemistry departments in universities are ignored. Will he assure the House and the Royal Society of Chemistry that he has taken ncte of those needs?

Mr. Hunt: I have had a fascinating time visiting key chemistry departments across the country. I visited a number of those operating at the leading edge of chemistry and I hope that they will take from today's announcement a clear message that we are committed to maintaining our leading edge in chemistry.

In the past week, I managed to visit Imperial college and—I have to think carefully about where I was every day of the week—on Monday I was in Sheffield. Last week I was in Warwick, and I have also been to Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburgh, Loughborough and Durham. I have found it fascinating that the original divide between chemistry, physics and biology is fast becoming flexible. We have to capture the imagination of the moment when looking ahead, and to some extent the old disciplines are becoming increasingly out of date. Although they are important in certain material respects, we have to raise our sights, as my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford (Dr Clark) said, to highlight the important of key areas. I hope that when my hon. Friend has a chance to read the booklet that deals with the science budget, a copy of which I have placed in the Library and which is also available on Internet through the CCTA Government information service, he will appreciate the priority that we attach to science.

Mr. Patrick Thompson (Norwich, North): My right hon. Friend mentioned the CCTA, which has just established its new headquarters in my constituency. While he is touring the country, will he visit CCTA in Norwich before too long, and the university of East Anglia, which is doing excellent science research?

Mr. Hunt: I shall be in Norwich next Friday on my tour of the United Kingdom. I am primarily going to look at the work of the John Innes centre which is doing pioneering work. I must talk to my hon. Friend about visiting CCTA, which was opened by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, and about seeing the interesting work being done by the university of East Anglia.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): I have also been able to make a visit, but to somewhere even more exotic than Norwich. I visited the Faraday base in the Antarctic last week. The base is due to close in 1995-96. What guarantee can the Chancellor give that the very valuable research into the ozone layer will not be lost when it closes? When was the decision taken to hand over the Faraday base to the Ukraine?

Mr. Hunt: I hope that when the hon. Gentleman was on the Faraday base, he was able to talk to the British Antarctic Survey, because it decided to close the base. He can obtain all the information that he needs from the BAS.

Mr. Banks: Indeed, but I was talking to the scientists based there. I think that there might be a divergence of opinion between the BAS in Cambridge and the scientists on the Faraday base. I understand that the Chancellor is not able to answer my question now, but will he perhaps consider it and let me have a response so that I can pass on the information?

Mr. Hunt: I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman has chosen to come to the House in the course of his world tour. If he has a little more time, I would be happy to see him and hear his report from the front line.

Let me recap. We have now made available £1,281.675 million for distribution. That very high figure demonstrates the priority that the Government attach to science, but that priority can never be taken for granted. There are always other deserving calls on public expenditure, so we have to use whatever funding we have to the best possible effect.

I am delighted to have Sir John Cadogan, the first Director General of the Research Councils, to advise me. He has carried out a detailed review of research council activities. He of course wanted to hear a wide range of opinion, to hear the voice of scientists at the bench and the voice of the user community, so he visited a total of 76 scientific groups in receipt of research council funding. Users' views were explored in a series of informal discussions, and Sir John has also had meetings with the chief executives of the research councils, who are themselves highly eminent scientists. In total, he listened personally to the views of around 300 people, as well as being a member of the foresight steering group.

The White Paper anticipated that the director general would be aided by a small advisory group, a sort of inner circle. I believe that my predecessor, now the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, shared the view that that was perhaps not the best way forward. Sir John has demonstrated that we can improve on my right hon. Friend's prediction. He has created not an inner circle but an open circle, into which people from right across industry and the science base have been able to feed their views. Sir John has also worked with the chief executives to establish a set of high-priority initiatives, for which I am pleased to announce that we have been able to make available £67 million from the science budget. Those programmes will be targeted on three main areas.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: Does my right hon. Friend agree that he has effectively answered the recent criticism in the New Scientist about the openness of the consultation and what Sir John has been doing?

Mr. Hunt: Indeed, there has been some misunderstanding. I did my best to clear it up when I was giving evidence in another place. My effective answer is, as my hon. Friend says, the immense amount of work that Sir John has done in consulting such a wide group of people.

The three main areas—

Dr. Jeremy Bray (Motherwell, South): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hunt: I shall first tell the House that the three main areas identified as targets for the programmes are support for interaction with industry, the maintenance of top-class people, and strategic and underpinning science. I shall go through each in turn, but first I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Dr. Bray: The document outlining the allocation of the science budget is similar to what has appeared in previous years, but any account of the process is missing. The right hon. Gentleman has just outlined what Sir John has being doing and I am sure that it has been very thorough, but there is no public record of it. In particular, there is no advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. Would it not make much more sense if we had a public record of that consultative process? For example, do the priority initiatives, which were allocated some 5 per cent. of the science budget—not a large percentage—represent initiatives that the research councils would not have taken, but were, in some way, imposed by the right hon. Gentleman on the advice of Sir John, or do they represent shifts from some consensus process? Research councils are bodies with their own royal charters, they have a statutory basis and they are bound to report. What is their advice and what is the advice of the advisers to the right hon. Gentleman?

Mr. Hunt: I was not in post when the decision to abolish the ABRC was taken, although I strongly supported it. As I understood, it was supported by the former Labour spokesperson, the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms Mowlam), who said that the Labour party happily acknowledged that the ABRC needed to be abolished. Having made that decision, the White Paper then trailed the notion that there should be an inner circle.

Dr. Bray rose—

Mr. Hunt: I would answer the hon. Gentleman's point if he could contain himself. We moved on to the process which I have outlined. The public record of that will be found in the work of the research councils. They have discussed with Sir John the way in which they saw their priorities. Of course, it will also be revealed in the work of the technology foresight panels. I make it clear that I intend to publish the reports of the 15 panels, which contain work on identifying key priority areas. That has been a tremendous exercise in consultation and I undertake that those reports will be published. They will give hon. Members the opportunity to see processes through which we have been able to identify priorities.

We fed the emerging conclusions from the technology foresight panels into the consideration, too. The private discussions between Sir John Cadogan and the scientists in the laboratory are not a matter of public record. However, in a debate of this nature, I am happy for the hon. Gentleman to ask questions and we will do our best to answer them. The great strength in the science, engineering and technology base lies in consensus and extensive consultation; we just need to build on that.

Dr. Bray: There may be greater agreement, but there cannot be consensus unless the views of other people are clearly stated. Although I do not know the precise source of the Opposition statement to which the right hon. Gentleman referred, it was nevertheless the Government who combined the roles of the two advisory bodies in a single council. The right hon. Gentleman has not dispensed with the advisory council altogether. What is that council's role in the allocation?

Mr. Hunt: The Director General of Research Councils advises me on overall priorities for the best application of the science budget. In reaching his conclusions, he does many things. Perhaps the most important work that he does is to consult with the research councils. He has been conducting a review of research council activity, and his report of the review will be included in the forward look document, which we shall publish in May. His report will then be available for debate and discussion.

The priority initiatives, I am advised, are, in the main, those of the individual research councils. I understand that, last year, the 5 per cent. figure, to which I referred, was 1 per cent., so there has been a substantial increase. That means, as the hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) said, that 95 per cent. of the budget is still very much linked to the research councils decision-making process. The initiatives have been allocated money, but the decisions on who won support on which projects were supported were still a matter for the research councils.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: Would not it have been much more useful to hon. Members if the research councils' advice to Sir John Cadogan, on which today's decisions are based, had been published before the debate, instead of our having to wait until May when the decisions will have been enacted?

Mr. Hunt: I do not want to mislead the hon. Gentleman. I was talking about the Director General of Research Councils' review of research council activity, on which he will report later this year. The hon. Gentleman is referring to the internal advice that I receive as Cabinet Minister responsible for science, to which I pay attention and which, of course, has never been published. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will accept that I am explaining, as best I can, the detailed process behind Sir John giving me his advice.

Mr. Alan W. Williams rose—

Mr. Hunt: I am talking about the internal advice, which has never been published. The internal advice comes to the chief scientific adviser, Sir William Stewart, and me. We deliberate on it and reach our decisions. Our decision is based on conclusions from several sources, including those from the technology foresight panels and their final report will be published. Consultations are conducted in the research councils, in which Sir John is of course involved. The way in which research councils view their priorities will be published in their reports, and there is a range of considerations in the Director General's review of research councils. He will make his report available to me and I shall publish it in the "Forward Look" document.

There are a number of different aspects to consider. I think that the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) was referring to the internal advice, which, of course, as Ministers know, is not published.

Dr. Bray: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Hunt: I should like to make a little progress, or Madam Deputy Speaker will disapprove of the length of my speech.

The first of the three themes to which I have referred, interaction with industry, means not getting the science base to do industry's work for it but working to ensure that the science base and industry have a better idea of each other's strengths and needs and determine where co-operation may be to their mutual advantage.

My top priority is to build on our tremendous response to the scheme initiated by my predecessor known as the ROPAs—the "Realising our Potential" awards. Under that scheme, 239 projects have been funded by three research councils. I am pleased to announce that the ROPA scheme will be extended to cover all the research councils. I have decided to allocate additional funding of almost £15 million in the next financial year, implying a full-year spend of £35 million.

Let me remind hon. Members briefly of how the scheme works. Our premise is that industry has already identified many good researchers in the science base and is funding them to carry out basic or strategic research. Researchers in receipt of appropriate funding from industry can apply for a ROPA if they would like to pursue original research completely of their own choosing—true curiosity-driven research.

"Realising our Potential" awards are not subject to conventional peer review, but proposals must be practical and original. Such awards will not replace the traditional grant award, but should serve to refresh the parts the peer review system sometimes fails to reach.

The LINK scheme is altogether different. It provides an excellent framework for jointly funded research between the public and private sectors. To date, more than 550 projects worth nearly £300 million have been supported, many of which have led to new products being marketed by United Kingdom companies.

The LINK scheme will be an important vehicle for implementing the foresight outcomes and I am therefore setting aside £3 million to stimulate new programmes in priority areas. Contributions from LINK partners should result overall in an additional £12 million being spent on new programmes in 1995-96.

The second theme is support of top-class people, which is another clear priority. We announced an expansion last year of the Royal Society's prestigious university research fellowship scheme from 200 to 240 places, and we shall expand that scheme still further to 255 appointments.

The Royal Society also plans to launch a pilot fellowship scheme for top-class younger scientists who are trying to get on to the research career ladder. I am delighted to announce additional Government support for those fellowships, which will be known as the Dorothy Hodgkin fellowships. They will be targeted at scientists who have just completed their PhDs.

Dr. Lynne Jones (Birmingham, Selly Oak): I am sure that those schemes are very laudable and I am pleased that the Government recognise the importance of encouraging top-class scientists and attracting more good people into science, but is not the Chancellor concerned about the general poor career prospects for Government scientists and, in particular, the large increase in the number of workers on short-term contracts and the low salaries of Government-funded scientists?

The Chancellor recently took credit for several people returning from abroad to work in this country, but they have done so largely as a result of work by charities such as the Wellcome Trust, which have identified the problem and have attempted to provide better career structures for research scientists? Should not the Chancellor be considering the matter to discover whether such schemes could be introduced into the generality of Government-funded science in this country?

Mr. Hunt: The hon. Lady is right. When my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and I visited the Wellcome Foundation, we met several scientists who had been attracted back—in a brain-gain dimension—to the United Kingdom to work here as a result of a combination of factors. We discussed those factors with the scientists.

The factors included issues such as a free enterprise society, a society that takes scientists seriously and a society in which scientists can work among the best in the world. I vividly recall a series of reasons. Quite often, scientists had taken a drop in earnings to work among the best in the world. They explained that money was not a consideration because they were forgoing money. They could perhaps earn more money elsewhere, but they wanted to work beside the best in the world. That carries with it an obligation on all of us who are involved with the science base to ensure that there is adequate remuneration for the people involved in leading-edge research.

I have been considering ways in which we can improve the situation and I will refer to them in a moment. However, the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) should be aware that remuneration and contracts are matters for the research councils, which take the decisions that they believe result in the best targeting of resources.

When I visited the laboratories, I found that there was much concern about the £400 grant for laboratory equipment. I am therefore pleased to announce that I shall increase that by 50 per cent. so that £600 will be available. I will consider how I can help to get money through to the laboratories and to the people who need the money to purchase equipment.

Remuneration is a matter for the research councils. Of course we give guidance, but ultimately remuneration is a matter for the research councils.

I hope that the Dorothy Hodgkin fellowships will assist scientists who have just completed their PhDs. I recall that "The Rising Tide" report showed that that was a point at which women tended to drop out of science. By targeting the fellowships, I hope that we can find ways of enabling women to continue in science so that they have real equality of opportunity with men in the science world. The hon. Member for Selly Oak may be aware that I have asked Lynda Sharp to head a special unit in the Office of Science and Technology to ensure that we have a broad cross-section of women and men giving their talents to science.

Dr. Lynne Jones: Will the Chancellor give way?

Mr. Hunt: I would like to make a little more progress. I have been speaking for nearly 45 minutes and I have a few more points to cover.

I am pleased to announce funding to enable the Royal Academy of Engineering to introduce a programme of secondments to industry for academic engineers. Greater interaction between our universities and industry is just as important for engineers as it is for pure scientists. I look forward to real benefits deriving from that programme.

The third theme is basic and strategic science. Last year, we announced additional support for chemistry. I am now extending support to mainstream physics, mathematics and medicine. I will be launching a pilot programme to provide, through three of the research councils, additional funding to universities for equipment to match funding from industrial partners. As I have already said, I intend to increase the research training support grant from £400 to £600 a year for 11,000 students. That includes the increase in grant from £75 to £125 for social science and economics students.

We have identified several areas where additional support for first-class strategic science should make us better placed to respond to new opportunities. Details of that are set out in the allocations booklet. However, I would like to give the House a flavour of some of the work that we are supporting because I believe that it is work that will make a real contribution to wealth creation and the quality of life and a real difference to our lives and to the lives of our children.

I am allocating additional funding to the Medical and the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Councils for the genome initiative. They are doing ground-breaking work, which will result in a comprehensive understanding of our genetic make-up, which in turn will provide the platform for a step-change in the quality of diagnosis, treatment and prevention of disease as we move into the 21st century. The gene responsible for cystic fibrosis has already been identified, and new treatments are being pursued in Edinburgh and at the Royal Brompton hospital.

The Medical Research Council has developed an effective partnership with the Wellcome Trust. Individually, these organisations have a very strong track record, but together they make an even bigger impact. I was delighted to hear a few moments ago that, following my announcement earlier today, the Wellcome Trust is planning to increase its own commitment to genome research.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and I recently visited the Wellcome Trust to meet a number of the top medical scientists who have been attracted to work in this country by our outstanding reputation for medical research. We have also visited the Institute of Psychiatry, which is attached to the Maudsley hospital in south London and which was voted by its peers in a survey last year to be the best of its kind in the world.

My right hon. Friend and I are absolutely committed to maintaining the highest possible standards in medical research, and to ensuring that the results feed effectively into day-to-day practice in the national health service.

The NHS R and D strategy is the first of its kind in the world. The Cochrane Centre, which performs systematic reviews of health research, was highly praised this week in the report by the Health Select Committee. My right hon. Friend has announced that she will implement the key recommendations of the Culyer report, which will place the funding of medical research in this country on a secure and stable footing for the future.

Medicine is advancing at lightning speed. It is vital that the NHS keeps up with the pace and that the treatment it provides is as effective as possible, based on the most up-to-date knowledge. Our policies are working successfully towards that objective as well as boosting the UK's deserved international reputation in this field.

I intend to provide additional funds for the Natural Environment Research Council's work in environmental diagnostics. This will enable the council to carry out further comprehensive environmental audits, and help to develop sustainable business strategies for waste management in manufacturing industry in close co-operation with users and the regulators. That will bring benefits for business and local people.

We are putting additional money into the work of the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council on producing industrial materials from plants. That will meet with approval from my hon. Friends.

I have, of course, been necessarily selective. Indeed, there was much more that I wanted to say, but I wanted to follow the practice of giving way to interventions. [HON. MEMBERS: "Go on."] I am being tempted to continue, but I will not. I want to hear what other hon. Members have to say.

We are supporting tremendous leading-edge developments, with huge potential benefits for all of us. I want that to be more widely understood. We must encourage appreciation of the contribution of science and engineering to our economic and social well-being.

I am therefore very pleased to be able to announce an increase in the central public understanding of the science budget. Thanks in large part to the work of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, the first national science week last spring was a huge success, and I intend to make it an annual event. This year's science week will run from 17 to 26 March. I remind hon. Members that they have until only next Monday to suggest experiments, for which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary has volunteered to be a human guinea-pig. May I express the hope that all hon. Members will make a particular effort to support events taking place in their constituencies?

The Government are willing to devote substantial funds in support of our excellent scientists and engineers. We are determined to do so in ways deliberately designed to bring good returns to the economy and people of the United Kingdom. That is the philosophy underlying the allocation of the science budget, which I commend to the House.

8.4 pm

Mrs. Ann Taylor (Dewsbury): I am pleased to be able to take part in this short debate and I shall try to keep my remarks brief, as I know that a number of hon. Members want to contribute.

Many people who work in technology, science and engineering will be pleased that this debate is taking place at all. We can discuss the science budget which the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has announced, but also the direction which policy in this area should be taking.

The debate is important because science is not always at the centre of our political debates. It is an issue which tends to intimidate people and put them off. It can sometimes get pushed to the sidelines, because many of us do not have the scientific grounding that might be necessary to participate in such a debate. I absolve all my hon. Friends who are in the Chamber this evening from that charge, but some of us who are lay persons may feel that, on occasion, jargon can dominate these debates.

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan (Chesham and Amersham): Will the hon. Lady confirm that science has not always been at the centre of debates within the Labour party? Did not the Labour party propose at the last general election that the science Minister should be demoted from Cabinet rank?

Mrs. Taylor: I am sorry that the hon. Lady has chosen to intervene right at the beginning of my speech on such a note. I must perhaps give my age away by saying that I first became interested in politics at school in the early 1960s when, with a general election pending, Harold Wilson excited many people with talk of the "white heat" of the technological revolution.

Mr. Nick Hawkins (Blackpool, South) rose—

Mrs. Taylor: I do not want to labour this point, as I want to be brief. All of us have the responsibility for generating not only interest in science, but some hope for the future. I am sorry that the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan) has chosen to try to make this a partisan issue, as that was not the spirit in which the Minister spoke.

Mr. Hawkins: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Mrs. Taylor: I will, but then I must move on.

Mr. Hawkins: The hon. Lady may be interested to know that I, too, recall the days of the 1960s, when both my parents were research scientists. Many of those scientists of the 1960s and 1970s remember the extent to which the promises of the white heat of the technological revolution were so badly betrayed by every Labour Government.

Mrs. Taylor: I shall give the hon. Gentleman an example later which will show that many opportunities which were taken up under previous Labour Governments have been missed recently. Government assistance to industry was very productive under Labour Governments, and that is something of which we can be proud. As someone who has spent many years studying or teaching economic history, I have no doubt of the importance to our future of investment in science, technology and engineering.

The Chancellor of the Duchy mentioned economic development and medical research, and he also referred to the vital area—which I think still does not get sufficient attention—of environmental protection, which does affect the quality of life for us all. We all have the responsibility to make sure that decisions in this area are made on a long-term basis, so that we get the full benefit of all the decisions that we are talking about this evening.

We must emphasise the need to get away from the short-termism that has dogged so much of British politics, and the British economy, in recent years. While there was much in what the Chancellor said with which I agreed and welcomed, there is something of that short-termism that is endemic to the Government's attitude to science. The right hon. Gentleman, who wants to look ahead, must be wary of that.

The Chancellor gave us some details—great detail in some areas—about the proposals for the science budget that he announced today. There may be other questions, such as whether the factor for inflation is as high as it should be, but I welcome some of the questions that he mentioned.

For example, the Chancellor referred to the improvement in spending on environmental diagnostics, which I very much welcome. It is important, however, that research in that area should not merely focus on waste management, but on a range of environmental protection issues that will be important as a way of improving the quality of our environment and will have important economic benefits. The amount of environmental regulation will intensify, at a European and an international level, and the countries that get ahead with monitoring equipment and technological development in that field will have significant markets on which to draw, and there could be some important economic benefits. I welcome some aspects of the Minister's proposals.

The hon. Member for Reading, East (Sir G. Vaughan) and some of my hon. Friends mentioned the report in today's issue of the New Scientist headed, "Former science adviser slams secret carve-up". In his answer, the Minister did not take the charges as seriously as he should. They were the comments of someone who served as the chairman of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils for 11 years, who was close to decision making and who knew the pressures on Ministers and what had been promised, for example, in the 1993 White Paper.

[Mrs. Taylor]

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is responsible for science policy and for open government. He has a responsibility to consult and I agree with what he said about consulting a wider circle than the inner circle, but he has to be seen to be making his decisions as openly as possible. I trust that, when he has been in the job longer and is not bound by decisions made some time ago, his responsibilities as a science Minister will not conflict with his responsibilities as the Minister for open government. It is important that we establish the principle that there should be as much openness as possible.

On the specifics of the science budget, the Minister outlined the ways in which the departmental budget has been increased this year. He should not adopt such a blinkered attitude, or regard the science budget as simply the budget that goes through his Department. I understand that he cannot say so publicly this evening, but I hope that he shares my concern about the fact that, while his departmental science budget has increased, albeit temporarily, the total of the science budgets in all Government Departments has decreased, which is causing much concern.

I could go into detail and give the figures for the Department of Trade and Industry, or state what has happened to the research and development budget in defence—the fact that no one is taking up the opportunities that exist for defence diversification. Before the Minister boasts too much about his departmental successes, he should consider what has happened to science budgets overall.

I do not want to spend the whole evening bandying about figures that relate to the Chancellor's announcement. I hope that he will acknowledge what his Cabinet Office press release said at the end of November. It made it clear that the science budget for 1994-95 has increased by 1.9 per cent., but that it will be frozen in cash terms next year and that, between 1994-95 and 1997-98, his departmental science budget will decrease by 1.1 per cent. I am sure that the Minister will understand that any welcome with which we greet the fact that his departmental budget has increased this year must be muted because we know what is in the pipeline.

I hope that the Minister will share my concern about the figures published by the Royal Society of Chemistry. As has been said, it produced an effective briefing for the debate. Its figures show that research and development expenditure in the United Kingdom has declined in the past five years and that Government spending on research and development has declined as a proportion of all that spending. The figures in "The Forward Look of Government-funded Science, Engineering and Technology 1994" look show that the Government provided £5 billion out of £11 billion spent on research and development in 1985-86, but the figure was down to £4.3 billion out of £12.2 billion in 1992-93. I do not for one moment say that all research and development should be Government-funded, but that is a worrying trend and one that the Minister glossed over.

Although we welcome aspects of the Minister's statement, such as the fact that his departmental budget has improved this year, it is not good enough to look at one narrow departmental budget alone. We must consider the Government's attitude across all Departments. Ministers and Departments are clearly pulling in different directions. Also, the chopping and changing is worrying to all people involved in scientific research and development. The fact that the Minister's budget is increasing this year, but will be frozen next and then reduced is sending the wrong signals to those involved in scientific investigation.

An obsession with market forces or market-based research should not blinker the Government, when it comes to investing in this country's future. The Minister mentioned his discussions with scientists—as he toured research laboratories—about the free enterprise society. Many other countries regard themselves as free-enterprise models, but they do not ignore or marginalise the critical importance of Government investment. They regard Government spending in that field not simply as expenditure, but as investment in the future. That thinking is essential as part of the longer-term perspective. Even the Minister's figures in the forward look prove the need to think in that way.

I mentioned short-termism, which is a major problem that should concern all of us. Short-term funding, whether by Government, industry or in universities, can threaten and lead to the break-up of research teams. We have witnessed much uncertainty, and university programmes have been cut. My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) mentioned one important problem at university level—the rapid and incredible growth in the number of short-term contracts, which should worry hon. Members on both sides of the House. That feature is very worrying. Ten years ago, 11,000 people were on short-term contracts, recently the figure was 22,000 and it is growing all the time. Clearly, that is no good for the staff concerned. It worries them greatly. Nor can it be good if research projects and those working on them are under a cloud as regards future funding. The Minister could have dealt with those difficulties in his speech this evening.

Short termism has jeopardised the benefit to the British economy of British inventions. We could all give long lists of items, such as liquid crystal displays, developed in Britain but manufactured abroad so that the benefits have gone to other countries. Another item that was mentioned is transputers. The advanced microprocessor chip, which was developed by a British company, INMOS, is a good example of co-operation between Government and industry. Some of us remember that INMOS was supported by the last Labour Government through the National Enterprise Board. The Conservative Government sold INMOS to Thorn EMI, which quickly sold it on to a French-Italian group. That was clearly a missed chance for Britain and it did us a great deal of harm.

However, that is in the past. The serious point is that this country is still missing opportunities for the future, particularly in terms of potential for developing information super highways. Those present enormous opportunities for Britain in terms of potential for educational programmes, which would give our children access to information and new experiences in education that were never dreamed of in our youth. The development of information super-highways would also bring enormous economic development and benefits, were Britain to get ahead.

Britain possesses some fantastic advantages. We have some of the world's leading talents in television and film production, and outstanding talents in educational publishing and writing, animation and computer games programming. Wonderful opportunities exist, not least because 80 per cent. of electronic information stored in the world is in English. We have hardware and software industries; we are a small island that could easily be cabled; and our private sector is eager to invest. So what is holding us back?

The report of the all-party Department of Trade and Industry Select Committee said:

"There is concern that government policies could be hindering or not sufficiently encouraging the development of the most advanced infrastructure and services, and that this could result in the UK falling behind other countries, with damaging consequences."

The danger is that, instead of grasping the opportunity to become the world's leader with all the consequential economic and educational benefits, unless the Government change their policy, Britain will fall further behind. The Minister has shown that he takes those matters seriously. I hope that he will lobby and talk to his right hon. Friends to get a change of direction in some crucial areas.

We also need a change of direction on post-16 qualifications in education. The number of young people taking science A-levels has decreased, yet more people than ever are taking and succeeding at GCSE. We must reform A-levels and have a broader educational base post-16, as other countries do. If we moved in that direction, it would strengthen our educational base and scientific awareness. In the long term, that would benefit everyone.

I should have liked to raise many more points. I hope that the Chancellor accepts that the temporary increase in his science budget, welcome though it is, should not allow him to become complacent. He still has much work to do, especially to counter the problems in so many areas and other Departments. I hope that he will take on board in particular the points that I have made about information super-highways and the need for change in education.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. Before I call the next hon. Member to speak, may I point out that there is a great deal of interest in this short debate. I therefore make a plea for short speeches.

8.26 pm

Sir Giles Shaw (Pudsey): In that case, Madam Deputy Speaker, I shall get rid of my first page for a start.

I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, not only on how he handled the introduction to the debate, giving way with such generosity that little time is available for the rest of us, but on the fact that he has achieved, in an extremely difficult year, an increase—albeit modest—in the science budget.

We must restrain ourselves from believing that we are discussing the tenth year of a long-term plan for science and development. Sadly, that is not the case. We are in the early stages of a significant shift in how we organise, handle, fund and distribute a new sense of direction for science and investment. We are all committed to the general objective of raising our total investment in science and technology to ensure our competitive place in the world. The Select Committee and the House agree that the long-term future for UK plc depends on that, so anything that my right hon. Friend can do to increase the commitment, even if his Department has been unable to break free from the problems of public expenditure restraints, should be welcomed. What we are and must remain concerned about is the long-term directions which the Government have planned through the active work in my right hon. Friend's Department.

On the specific proposals, I shall leave on one side the flak which Lord Phillips raised on the consultative process. The hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr Bray) is heavily engaged in that matter.

On distribution, I welcome the fact that my right hon. Friend has secured an increase of £14.95 million for the competitive scheme under the ROPA initiative. That is particularly welcome because, as my right hon. Friend said, it helps to improve interaction with industry, which must be right. The shorter time span between scientific research and innovative technology in any of the industrial sectors contacted must be welcomed. I trust that that increase means that many more researchers will qualify to be funded for strategic research in industry, which will help to alleviate some of the anxieties expressed by the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor).

I am particularly glad to note that, in the section entitled the Medical Research Council is to be awarded an additional £4 million for research into the genome project. The Select Committee is currently engaged in that issue, and this is a suitable time for my right hon. Friend to decide that that vital international research should have a boost in funding.

I welcome, too, the additional funding for the bio-processing industries, which, as far as I can understand them—it is a complicated industrial activity—are at the leading edge of international competitiveness. They have been Cinderellas in their part of the industry. I am glad to see that that has been acknowledged and that they, too, are receiving a further increase.

It is clear that the increased amount available from a lower-than-forecast inflation factor have, by and large, benefited all the research councils in some way. Equally, I am absolutely clear that although research councils' chief executives have had the good grace to welcome the modest addition, the total expenditure must be of concern to the House.

The hon. Member for Dewsbury mentioned science spending by other Departments. The core role of the Office of Science and Technology is to re-organise the mission, composition and chairmanship of the research councils. In the barely 12 months in which that has been done, it has achieved a major breakthrough in the structural organisation of science. "Realising our Potential", the White Paper on which all those initiatives are based, made it clear that science funding should be largely directed to projects that "improve our national competitiveness and the quality of life."

That means science funding throughout and beyond Government into industry and the world at large. I am anxious that the direction of OST policy in helping that enormous objective to go forward must include more influence on departmental budgets and how they enter the Government's priority.

I suspect that we shall battle it out when we come to the first technology recommendations that my right hon. Friend said would be introduced in due course from the 15 panels. If the four sites initiative means anything, it must mean that there should emerge from the assessment an agreed national series of objectives that should lead to the prioritising of scientific endeavour and, thus, scientific expenditure. I hope that my right hon. Friend will have that firmly in his eye. When we discuss total scientific objectives, we must mean a complete science base—Government, all Departments, industry, the Confederation of British Industry and other organisations. The engineers are always active in such matters and I am sure that Sir William Barlow will be glad to hear of the small amounts that my right hon. Friend has been able to offer today. That is where the crunch will come.

I hope that later in the year we shall have more time than is available now. As I recall, the Select Committee's report, "The Forward Look of Government-Funded Science, Engineering and Technology 1994" recommended that we should have an annual debate. I am happy to say that my right hon. Friend has now responded to the report and it looks as though he is prepared to use what he encouragingly describes as his best endeavours. I wish to see my right hon. Friend's best endeavours deliver a full debate on science when the "Forward Look" report is published in May.

I welcome the initiatives taking place in the research councils to ensure that industry's views are represented on the councils, which must be helpful. That is one reason why we are keen to know how the priorities in the council budgets were chosen. We must also encourage the initiative manufacturing programme which was launched in July 1944 and the ROPAs—"Realising our Potential" awards—to which my right hon. Friend referred.

I shall skip much of the next two pages of my speech and mention one or two other aspects of general science. One of the problems touched on in the exchange of questions on the LHC was the issue of attribution and European Union funding. Although the exercise conducted on the LHC was to discover how to recover our money from fluctuation, the Select Committees of both Houses have criticised the practice of attribution of European Union receipts to domestic budgets.

The Parliamentary Secretary may not be able to comment on that subject today, but it is worth further examination by the OST. The Department appears to show that receipts from the EU are, in some cases, attributed to the science budget, which is consequently adjusted so that overall spending remains as planned. We cannot welcome that as an old Chinese custom continuing when talking about the new priorities that we attach to science. I think that in the current year, £12.5 million of such provision comes from the EU, although the future year's figure is slightly lower. If he has the time, the Parliamentary Secretary might say how much EU money is generally additional to the science budget. In its first report the Select Committee commented on that.

The efficiency unit scrutiny has also exercised the Select Committee recently. The Government have set in place measures to encourage the science base in the desired direction, while leaving research councils the autonomy to determine how to spend the funds allocated to them. That is welcome, but the inclusion of research council institutes in the recent efficiency scrutiny of public sector research establishments was regrettable. Such institutes are funded by research councils because they perceive a need for them—it is not for the Government to try and second-guess those directly involved. There has been some duplication and it is no doubt wise to try to restrict it. But if there is a desire to avoid duplication at all costs, research councils should have their entrepreneurial instincts restrained rather than encouraged.

I am glad that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has agreed to respond to many of the recommendations in the Select Committee's report. I hope that my right hon. Friend will feel that it is consistent with our view that there should be a comprehensive statement of all the scientific investments being made and all the scientific endeavours to match the investment. We require plenty of information. We look forward to the time when the Office of Science and Technology fulfils the Select Committee's long-term objective to become the Government Department for all science, however funded.

I am glad that the Government will keep under consideration the extent to which additional information on university research should also be included in the "Forward Look". In the section on my right hon. Friend's response, dealing with the reduction in Government spending on civil research and development, the Department states that the fall of expenditure on civil research and development is largely due to the fast breeder research being wound down. I am not certain that that equates entirely with the position of the advanced technology programme in the Department of Trade and Industry. I suspect that changes in that are not adequately matched by the receipts from the DTI's launch aid initiative. I should be grateful to receive any information on that.

I note that the Government agree with the Select Committee's view on the development of output measures, the effectiveness of research and development and the co-ordinating role of the OST as the effective guardian of the Government's science policy. We anticipate seeing that role positively developing in the "Forward Look" report due out in May. I believe that the Select Committee will welcome a wide range of agreement with the recommendations in our report.

The main theme, which no debate on science and technology can avoid, is that it is essential that we lift the total national investment in the nation's science base and the nation's competitive technology. The OST is to be congratulated on the efforts that it has made in a relatively short time to start gathering in all the structural information necessary to lay the foundations for future development. The Department is becoming, not only an important custodian, but a generator of our science expenditure and the way in which it should be spent—although I accept that that is primarily related to Government expenditure. Ways must be found to broaden the initiative and I welcome anything that the Department can do to stimulate, if not to be responsible for, new scientific endeavour on a larger scale.

The new-look research councils are flourishing. They are now able to make recommendations to the OST. Sir John has done admirable work in trying to co-ordinate that policy in a way that leads to effective leadership. The "Forward Look" and technology foresight will develop in the future.

The Department has to take the lead in the promotion of science and technology to the public. Clearly, the Department for Education has now accepted that science has a significant role to play in the curriculum, which is beginning to make its mark in our schools. But universities, industry and industrial associations should recognise that they must play their part in lifting the national level of knowledge so that, in time, we may reap the reward of improved technology and improved competitiveness in all the markets of the world.

Mr. Alan W. Williams (Carmarthen): I am grateful for the chance to make a few remarks on today's debate on science. While preparing for the debate I read the briefing from the Royal Society of Chemistry—I was at one time a chemist. It gave a sobering account of the feeling in chemistry laboratories in our universities and institutes of higher education, particularly among the staff. My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) earlier mentioned the number of short-term contracts. The lecturers at higher education institutes on short-term contracts have doubled in number in the past 10 years—from 11,500 to 21,500.

The briefing also mentioned the structure of buildings. Many chemistry laboratories were built in the 1960s, when universities were expanding and new universities were being built. The fabric of many of those buildings is in disrepair and needs refurbishment. The numbers in higher education have expanded enormously in the past 10 years, for which I pay tribute to the Government. But, unfortunately, the staff and equipment have not increased pro rata. The figures given show that the spending on equipment per academic has fallen from £1,850 in 1987-88 to £1,193 per academic in 1992-93. Equipment has been cut by one third per staff member despite the fact that there are more students.

Any briefing on science research contains figures on the country's expenditure on research and development and it shows how we lag behind our industrial competitors. The most recent figures that I have are for 1992 when 2.12 per cent. of our gross domestic product was spent on research and development compared with Japan at 2.8 per cent., the United States at 2.68 per cent., Germany at 2.53 per cent. and France at 2.36 per cent. When we discount the part of the budget which goes on defence, we are lagging 1 per cent behind Germany and Japan in our expenditure on civil research and development. All the members of the Science and Technology Committee know, as do all scientists and engineers in this country, that we should devote substantially more resources to research and development.

I think that my colleagues are being a little generous in congratulating the Minister on an increase in the science budget. My understanding of his letter of 29 November is that in this financial year the budget is £1,217 million at 1993 prices, in the coming financial year it will be £1,217 million, and it will drop to £1,205 million and £1,204 million in subsequent years. Over a three-year period, the Department's budget at 1993 prices will fall by 1 per cent.

Added to that, as my hon. Friend the Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) pointed out, are the cuts in research in the Department of Defence, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and so on. Across the board it is a picture of continual belt-tightening and of a very difficult time for research scientists.

In the interests of allowing other hon. Members to participate in the debate, I will skip a few pages of my speech, as the hon. Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw) did earlier.

I turn now to a matter that is outside the science budget. I know that the Glaxo-Wellcome bid is strictly a matter for the Department of Trade and Industry, but I think that it is of interest to the Office of Science and Technology. I invite the Minister to give us his Department's view on the takeover when he replies to the debate. Perhaps it does not have a view on the matter.

In a takeover bid worth £8.9 billion, the world's second largest pharmaceutical company is seeking to take over the world's 20th largest company. It would form not only the largest company in Britain, but the largest pharmaceutical company in the world, with a turnover of £28 billion. Britain has an excellent record in the pharmaceutical industry; it is the one industry sector where Britain is a world leader. We invest heavily in research and development and the industry's primary customer is the national health service, which provides a very large home market.

Glaxo and Wellcome invest about 15 per cent. of their yearly sales in research and development. In commenting on the takeover, a newspaper article has said that there certainly will be job cuts in research and development if the bid goes through. I know that the Wellcome Trust supports the takeover as it could mean an increase in research. Combining the two companies would mean a rationalisation of facilities and production and a rationalisation of large areas of research.

In the New Scientist of 26 January, Sir Richard Sykes, the chief executive of Glaxo and its former research director, admits:

"the planned 'rationalization' and streamlining of the research teams of the two companies, one of the main factors being used to generate support for the take-over among shareholders, will inevitably lead to job losses among researchers."

If that is true, we will lose PhDs and post-doctorate research workers from our industry to the United States. More importantly, it will have an adverse effect on the morale of scientists working in that sector, in higher education and throughout the scientific community. Any job losses in production and research which result from the takeover will hit morale hard in our leading industry sector.

I ask the Office of Science and Technology to look at the takeover bid very carefully. Is it in the interests of British science and our pharmaceutical industry for the bid go ahead? I would be grateful if the Minister would comment on that in his reply. It is not good enough for the Government to sit back and say, "No, this is a free market and that is the way it operates; it is not for us to comment or have a view about it", when research and the morale of many of our best people may be affected by the takeover.

8.45 pm

Sir Gerard Vaughan (Reading, East): Mr. Deputy Speaker, as I am mindful of the time and your call for short speeches, I will make only a comment or two. I will also refrain from reminding my right hon. Friend that he is welcome to visit Reading university in my constituency whenever he wishes.

Mr. David Hunt: I arranged today to visit Reading university. I shall suggest a number of dates to my hon. Friend so that I can ensure that the visit takes place at his convenience as well as mine.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should explain that I did not raise that point by prior arrangement with my right hon. Friend. I could easily make a whole speech congratulating him not only on his success in raising extra money for the science budget, but on the enthusiasm and clarity with which he presented the situation tonight.

I was glad that he referred to the "Realising our Potential" awards scheme and the excellent work performed by the Royal Academy of Engineering. I also pay tribute to the work that has been done by the Office of Science and Technology. I believe that the briefing notes which it has produced for hon. Members have resulted in a greater understanding of the subject.

I shall pick up on two points which are not meant to be viewed as criticism. First, I agree entirely with the remarks of the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones): it is a very serious situation. I think that part of the problem is our culture in this country which makes it difficult for us to appreciate the feeling of those in the science field. We have to raise the general image and standard of science and engineering throughout the whole community. It begins in our schools where I am afraid that the standard of science teaching and interest remains deplorable in many cases. It is an urgent situation with which we must deal immediately.

I am very pleased that extra money is to be allocated to the LINK programme. However, I ask my right hon. Friend to look seriously at some of the LINK programmes. While the concept of the programmes is welcomed by all, some of them appear to be over-bureaucratic and they are not producing effective results—in fact, I think that some of them are a total waste of money. That does not mean that the concept is at fault; it is a very good idea.

I realise that there are difficulties, but I ask my right hon. Friend to examine ways in which long-term development facilities could be made available for research and development in this country. Other countries, such as Japan and Germany, have achieved it very successfully and I think that we should re-examine the issue.

8.49 pm

Mr. Nigel Jones (Cheltenham): I thank the Chancellor of the Duchy for the way in which he presented the report and for his announcements. He clearly acknowledges that investment in the science base is money well spent—there is no difference between any of us in that respect. We may differ on the scale of investment required if British people are to enjoy a decent standard of living now and in the next century.

Britain is good at invention. On a visit to the science museum last year its director, Sir Neil Cussons, told me that more than half the exhibits and papers it contains are associated with the inventions of British scientists. Dr. Richard Roberts, one of two Nobel prizewinners in 1993, described Britain as an "unbelievably fertile ground for ideas."

Given the flooding in some parts of the country, that may be due to our weather—it keeps us indoors many months of the year.

Sadly, Dr. Roberts left Britain with a PhD in his twenties, for North America. He commented at that time that in Britain

"funding for research is really quite appalling and scientists are undervalued."

Those are strong words from a Nobel prizewinner.

An article in The Independent on 8 November 1994 stated:

"Britain's best chance of again winning Nobel prizes in science would be for the Germans and Japanese to take over some of our high-tech industries."

That is a radical proposal, and not one that we should adopt.

There have been two Nobel prizes for British-based research in the past 10 years, compared with 11 the preceding decade. Over the years, Britain has suffered from the brain drain. Andy Coghlan of New Scientist pointed out that "many of those who leave are high fliers, and their departure is depriving Britain of its top talent."

Typically, overseas researchers tend to enter Britain on short-term contracts, while British emigrants leave this country for ever. I welcome the allocation report's section on enhancement of people-related programmes, and the recognition—I nearly intervened on the Chancellor on this point, but he made it eventually—that more women must be encouraged to enter science, and to remain after completing their PhDs. As members of this House, we ought to know that women have just as much to offer as men. As a nation, we must make use of all our talent, and women are a vital part of our future.

When the Prime Minister visited Japan in 1993, he said:

"We have undervalued science and the application of science in the United Kingdom over the past 20 or 30 years."

He was right. Since 1981, Government spending on research and development has fallen by one third and is now a lower proportion of gross domestic product in the UK than in the competitor countries of France, Germany, Japan and the United States. Departmental spending has fallen and is expected to continue doing so.

Figures released by the Department of Trade and Industry last December and published in the Financial Times show that its research and development expenditure will fall to £245 million in the present financial year, from £310 in 1993-94 and £500 million a year in the late 1980s.

Britain cannot compete with the low-wage economies of the Pacific rim, but it can through technology. That was recognised as early as the 1930s. A year ago, the eminent journalist Will Hutton wrote:

"It is common knowledge that the British economy has been in relative decline for more than a century, but what is less remarked upon is that had Britain stayed wedded to its textile, coal and heavy engineering economy of the 1920s, the decline would have been even more marked. Yet from the early 1930s to the early 1950s, there was a transformation in the country's economic base. This was led by technology and, in particular, by state support of science.

Since then, we have seen the squandering of this inheritance through the insistence that a free financial system and reduction of state support will be enough to drive innovation."

I hope that that is changing, and I know from the comments by Conservative Members that they want change as much as I do. The best way to secure Britain's survival as a modern, industrialised nation whose people enjoy a high standard of living is to invest in the future.

I congratulate the Minister on listening positively to the wishes of the science community. I welcome the allocation paper's reference also to public understanding of science. It is no use pretending that we are not technical. This week, I attended an interesting meeting of the all-party group on cable and satellite, of which the hon. Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) is chairman. As I left, I heard one hon. Member—who I am glad is not present—say to his researcher, "You put that on the computer, because I'm not very technical." We must change that attitude. British people are good at invention and technical innovation; we should be proud of that and shout it from the rooftops.

Last year's science week was worth while, and I am pleased that it is to become an annual event. I remember being at the science museum at the crack of dawn with the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), to give a live interview on BBC breakfast television. A 1920s steamship engine was working behind us. It is fitting that that hon. Gentleman went on to become shadow Secretary of State for Transport.

One cannot overemphasise the importance to the nation of placing science policy high on the Government's agenda. Without properly funded research, there will be more debates of the sort that we heard yesterday, concerning further cutbacks in the country's social, education, health and police services.

Can the Minister say the extent to which research grant applications will be tied to the rigid goals of wealth creation? Is not it the nature of pure research that it must often be undertaken without achieving a specified profit? Sometimes there is no product—or if there is, that is serendipity and long into the future. How will the Government ensure that total research is maintained when departmental budgets rise and fall? It seems likely that money spent on military research will further decrease.

Baroness Thatcher once said:

"Transistors were not discovered by the entertainment industry seeking new ways of marketing pop music, but rather by people working on wave mechanics and solid-state physics."

That shows the value of the basic research that was done in inventing transistors in those days. The reality of the problem—I think all hon. Members know this—is that funding could be limitless. I am sure that, between them, research councils could dream up projects worthy of investment that would far outstrip the budget of any party in the House but I believe that there is a shortfall now that is damaging Britain's future.

The importance of encouraging industry to invest cannot be over-emphasised. I am pleased to see the description of the multiplier idea in the paper released today. It is important that the Government, research councils and industry work together, provide the funds, to work on specific projects of interest to all of them.

A second problem was identified in the Select Committee's report last year, and it was mentioned by the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor). The problem is also exposed in Will Hutton's new book entitled, "The State We're In"—short-termism. Giles Coren's article in The Times this week tells the story of the British inventor and designer, James Dyson. Mr. Dyson is the man who invented the ballbarrow. I do not know whether you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, have one of these at home, but it is a wheelbarrow based on a ball, which never gets stuck in the mud and does not make marks on the lawn. He also invented the dual cyclone vacuum cleaner. His inventions have achieved worldwide sales of more than £1 billion. But despite the success of his inventions, Mr. Dyson could find no one at home to back his efforts with cash, which is a perennial problem for British inventors. The article says:

"Instead he sold licences to America and Japan".

James Dyson says:

"British industry's attitude to development and designers is blighted by short-termism . . . You have to show a quick turn-around and immediate profit. Engineering is not about that—it's a long-term way of regenerating a company,"— and a country.

"If the City-boys and the banks . . . demand an instant return we just sell our products better, we don't improve them. Advertising is the British answer to everything. But that is the way to a fast buck, not real money."

Mr. Dyson went on to point out that "The best . . . business is one where you can sell a product at a high price with a large margin . . . and make an enormous amount of money,"—

Here's to that.

A third problem is that of the gap between the skills that we have and the skills that we need. Cuts in education, about which we talked yesterday, are the greatest betrayal of our young people. Throughout the country, school budgets are being cut.

We have talked about a proper career structure for scientists. I fear that the Government will put short-term political considerations before the long-term goal of providing for Britain an adequate research base to keep our brightest brains in Britain and to maintain and improve our quality of life. The Government's strategy seems to be to cut back on investment in key services now to create enough elbow room for a cut in income tax before the next election. That is not only short-termism but cynical short-termism, because one person's tax cut in 1996 could result in that same person's job loss in 1998-99.

When the Minister replies, I hope that he will be able to provide some answers to the questions raised in the debate. I wish him and the Chancellor well in the task of persuading his colleagues of the importance of research in this country. If they can persuade the Government to invest more in the future, they will receive enthusiastic support from me and from my right hon. and hon. Friends.

9.2 pm

Mr. Simon Coombs (Swindon): I am happy to follow the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones), who, like me, is a supporter of Swindon town football club, but I do not agree with his latter remarks. I believe that the Government's proposals this year, following, as they do, the White Paper on science and technology, show that the Government are indeed looking to a long-term future for science, and are approaching the need to avoid short-termism in a positive way.

I welcome what I hope is now an annual debate. It has been held on 2 February 1994 and on 2 February 1995. I put it to my right hon. Friend that if the next debate occurs on 2 February 1996—a Friday—we could have a five-hour instead of a two and three quarter hour debate on science.

I welcome the opportunity to say something about science, particularly the science research councils—five of the six of which are located in my constituency. They have been through a substantial sea change over the past 12 months as a result of what I believe were right decisions taken on the reorganisation of some of them. I pay tribute to the efforts made by the management and staff of the research councils in bringing those changes to fruition, working them out and making them effective. I am pleased to tell the House that, in general, things have settled down well and the research councils are now getting on with the job of administrating British science.

At the time of the White Paper's publication in 1993, and again in the debate a year ago, I asked for assurances from my right hon. Friend's predecessor as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster about the position of staff of the research councils. Those assurances—that the changes would not lead to significant alterations in staff—were given to me and they have been kept.

However, since that time, a decision has been made to undertake a review of staffing levels in the research councils and that has led to some concern among my constituents who work at the research councils. Once again, reassurance has been offered by Sir John Cadogan in a letter to staff representatives and it would be helpful if my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, in his reply to the debate, would reiterate the reassurance that what is looked for is improvements in efficiency but not the drastic reductions in staff number that were suggested by union representatives in Swindon at the end of last year. Staff in the research councils have a strong commitment and they deserve our support. I trust that my hon. Friend will feel the same and be able to give further assurances to my constituents tonight.

I want to make brief reference to one or two of the issues that were raised at the beginning of the debate in exchanges between my right hon. Friend and several hon. Members. The reference to the international subscriptions which fall within the remit of PPARC strikes a strong chord with me. I have raised the matter on many occasions in the past in the House. I look forward to the announcement of the mechanism—in section 6 of the White Paper—to be established to protect PPARC's budget, now a little under £200 million, but more than half of it devoted to the two subscriptions to CERN and ESA.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has said tonight that the fluctuations in those two subscriptions will be a first charge upon the totality of the science budget and that is obviously good news. It would be helpful if my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary could tell me, either at the end of the debate or, because I appreciate that he will have many things to do at that stage, perhaps later in a written reply, whether there will be a pro rata allocation of the £8 million between all the research councils budgets on the basis of their share of the total expenditure on science. That would mean that PPARC would still have to find about £1.5 million in addition as part of its contribution to the fluctuations element.

We welcome the improvement that has been made possible in the overall cost to Britain of the LHC at CERN. I have a figure of about £70 million over 10 or 12 years, which is a substantial sum. That money should be fed back directly into domestic programmes, which support the international projects. Again at some stage, I hope that my hon. Friend will be able to say that he agrees with that.

Furthermore, savings are now being talked about on the administration costs of ESA. It would be helpful to know whether the intention is to recycle those to UK science in general terms or specifically to PPARC projects, so that they may be the direct beneficiaries, bearing in mind that over the years first CERN and now PPARC have had to bear the total cost of the subscriptions, which have been a large drain on their respective budgets.

The two subscriptions buy only the scientific infrastructure in those overseas locations. The real value of our membership of CERN and ESA comes from the domestic research that we then undertake and that has to be separately funded. It is not clear to me at this stage whether the allocations announced by my right hon. Friend today will provide adequate funding for the domestic science base to enable Britain to obtain full value from continuing membership of those two European projects. Again, it would be helpful if my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary could clarify that point.

It was brought to my attention that ESA is concerned about the integral astronomy mission. It was made clear by my right hon. Friend that that was a matter for PPARC, but I hope that he will continue to support the belief that the UK is strong in the subject of astronomy. The hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) made that point in an intervention. We must stress how good we are at astronomy, and the fact that we lead Europe in that subject. It is vital for PPARC to finance the mission; failure to participate would deal a serious blow to those abroad.

I welcome the general increase in funds for this year, which is above the inflation rate. It recognises the desire of hon. Members on both sides of the House for more to be spent on science. I particularly welcome two projects. The first is cognitive engineering: an additional £1.2 million is to go to the Economic and Social Research Council. Interaction between humans and computers strikes me as one of the most crucial areas of advance for the country: I would hazard a guess that it will provide Nobel prizes here in years to come. Major breakthroughs may not be far away, and I am very pleased that support for cognitive engineering is continuing and increasing.

I also welcome the additional allocation of £2 million to the Natural Environment Research Council for environmental diagnostics, on which a number of hon. Members have commented. It is all very well for the Government to hit industry with the principle that the polluter pays, but it is equally right for us to give what help we can to industry to enable it to deal with such pollution problems as waste management.

I am pleased to learn that a new research council, the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, is to be given generous funds for a number of new projects. The council will welcome those funds, and I look forward to visiting it before long to hear more about its plans.

Finally, I am delighted that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary has agreed to visit Swindon soon. That is an exercise organised by my hon. Friend and me—unlike the sub-plot of which we heard earlier, involving my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, East (Sir G. Vaughan) and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary will be very welcome in Swindon, and I hope that he will arrive there in the next couple of months to see for himself the excellent work being done in the research councils. That work is leading British science towards a future which I believe is very bright, as a result of the allocation and all that has gone before it.

9.12 pm

Mrs. Anne Campbell (Cambridge): I must declare an interest: I am a non-executive director of the Welding Institute, an independent research and technology organisation that will benefit from some of the new schemes announced by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The Chancellor has made promising sounds about real increases in the science budgets, and if we did not know the whole picture it would look very rosy. I do not want to sound sour, but I feel that the true picture of science and technology spending should be shown. Between 1986 and 1992, spending by the Office of Public Service and Science increased by 21 per cent., but in the same period spending by the Higher Education Funding Council fell by 7 per cent.; civil Departments' spending fell by 29 per cent.; Ministry of Defence spending fell by 20 per cent.; and total Government science and technology spending fell by 13 per cent. Moreover, if we take into account projected spending to 1995-96, we find that total Government expenditure has fallen by 23 per cent. in real terms in the 10 years since 1985-86.

I accept that there is a real case for cutting MOD research expenditure, but why is the money not going into civil research? Instead, civil Departments' expenditure is being cut by an even greater amount than defence research spending.

I quote from a letter I have received from the head of a science department at Cambridge university. He said:

"In the USA there have been large cuts in the defence research budget but a substantial amount of these funds have been transferred to civil research, i.e. there has been a real peace dividend. In the UK there has been no peace dividend. You could ask why not. In aerospace, for example, I have been told by senior officials in the USA that not a dollar of the research budget has been lost: all the cuts in the defence aerospace budget have been transferred to the civil aerospace side. This is not a direct civil aerospace subsidy . . . but is a clearly constructed indirect subsidy via . . . joint university-industry aerospace projects, etc. In the UK, both the defence and the civil aerospace government R & D budget have been cut and hence British Aerospace, Rolls-Royce, etc., are really suffering (hence the recent Rolls-Royce redundancies in Scotland and there are more aerospace redundancies to come). The savings from defence research cuts should be transferred to the civil sector, and joint industry-university research, with the university side funded by EPSRC, would help to restore a level playing field and would help to save our aerospace industry."

Unfortunately, many British companies follow the British Government on research and defence spending. The Central Statistical Office review of industrial research in 1992 shows that funding for civil research has reached an all-time high of £7.8 billion. That is good news, but it is still only just over 1.25 per cent. of gross domestic product. France's 1.4 per cent., Germany's 1.7 per cent., the USA's 1.8 per cent. and Japan's 2.1 per cent. make British business expenditure on research and development look pathetic.

Long-term industrial competitiveness depends on our ability to use our scientific inventiveness to make new and improved products. A lead from the Government is needed to convince our industrial companies that investment in research and development is important, not only for their own competitiveness but for the future prosperity of the country.

Another head of a science department at Cambridge university has expressed concern about the way in which the Government are providing funds for industrial research and development. He wrote:

"All of us here appreciate the over-riding importance of a healthy industrial base. Government needs to provide encouragement for industrial investment in research and for Universities to collaborate in the projects. So far however, most of the funds for this endeavour seem to have been produced from the Research Council budget and not from the DTI budget or the MOD budget."

It is true that the cuts in the DTI budget have meant cuts in the advanced technology programme to which the hon. Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw) referred. That money has not been replaced.

It would be helpful for the independent research and technology organisations to know whether they will be able to apply for funds from the research councils. Perhaps the Minister could tell us, when he replies, whether that money will be available.

My constituents are concerned about a number of other points. I refer to the short-term goals, especially the short-termism within the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council. That is a matter that comes up again and again in conversation with research scientists in my constituency.

Yet another head of a science department at Cambridge university wrote saying that he was worried about the short-term goals being pursued by the EPSRC

"in contravention of the Minister's own pronouncements and of frequent warning from the House of Lords Select Committee. This is particularly annoying, as many parts of the remit of EPSRC . . . are involved with fundamental science just as much as the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council. Yet there is a repeated confirmation of the idea that EPSRC is concerned with wealth creation and the quality of life, and fundamental science of the blue skies kind must be pursued through PPARC."

He is asking the Minister to assure the country that vigorous support for high-quality fundamental science will continue to be provided, not just by the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council, but by all research councils. He asks:

"can the Research Councils—all of them—be again required by the Minister to take a long-term view of such things as the applicability of research?"

In the past two years, one of the changes in funding has hit Oxford university and Cambridge university, in particular, very badly. I refer to the dual support transfer system, which has been a uniform disaster for the major research universities. It was supposed to be an overall neutral operation, solely connected with research. How the best research universities could be so badly damaged must be questioned.

I have learnt that another department is in deficit to the tune of £500,000 this year because the funding in the transfer system has not been replaced in the way that it was supposed to have been. Oxford university has compiled a dossier on the ways in which the research councils have failed to do what was required of them, and have failed to apply the funds transferred to them from funding councils to the support of specific costs associated with research grants.

Research council panels have memberships from around the country. They naturally seek to make the money go as far as possible and they are inclined to say, in particular, that the major research universities are well enough resourced anyhow, and that this or that direct-cost request can be deleted in favour of giving another research grant somewhere else. Each of the major research universities has suffered a loss of several million pounds from that, and the country should be told that the shift of funding, allegedly to make the costs of support research more transparent, has been a disaster. I hope that the Minister will take that on board. I know that he recently announced a review of that system, but it is extremely important that those serious concerns are dealt with.

Difficulties are being experienced by some of the research institutes. A director of a research institute associated with crop research complains that he has already received

"two letters from BBSRC in the last few months . . . asking how we would deal with funding cuts because the Director General of Research Councils . . . wants the money for a range of short-term funding schemes."

I know that additional funding of £15 million has been announced today. That is not new money. It is coming from the fundamental and basic infrastructure of some of our best research institutes. If that is allowed to continue, it will seriously damage the research institutes because they need leading scientists, not only to find short-term contract money on which they depend, but as a basic structure for them to continue. I hope that the Minister will take that into consideration.

Mr. Patrick Thompson (Norwich, North): I shall try to be as brief as possible so that it is possible for the Front-Bench spokesmen to allow further speeches in the debate. This debate is of interest to all parties. I do not regard the support for science as a matter of political controversy. After all, it is well known that we need to support science as much as possible.

In a sense, therefore, I follow the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) in that she referred to what has turned out to be the theme of the debate—the new concept about which we have all obviously been reading in our briefs from various sources. That theme is short-termism, a phrase which has cropped up in speeches by hon. Members on both sides of the House. I have been fascinated by the number of times reference has been made to short-termism.

I have been most encouraged by the opening speech of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. I have also been encouraged by the fact that he will visit Norwich on 10 February, and I know that he will enjoy that visit very much. I was encouraged by his remarks when he dealt with the problem of short-termism. Although he may need a little more pressure from those of us who are keen on scientific research, I have a feeling that he is on the right track. I was certainly very encouraged by his opening speech.

At a recent meeting of the new Council for Science and Technology, the Prime Minister said that science was at the heart of government. Of course, it was the Prime Minister who provided us with the new Office of Science and Technology, so there is no doubt about the Government's commitment to science, which I support.

We could have a lengthy debate about figures and the sums of money provided for science. The trouble with such debates is that they depend on which figures are cited. I shall not enter into that argument, but it is at least of some encouragement to me as a physicist that the Royal Society of Chemistry has given some welcome to the Government's statement on science funding. It seems that the message is getting through that we need to continue to provide substantial sums for scientific research.

I am one of those who will always want more resources for such research, and that should not be a matter of controversy. However, the mechanisms applied to funding are often controversial. Members of the Opposition Front Bench will be disappointed to learn that I shall not go into more detail because that would take too much time, but, clearly, we want more resources and the Royal Society of Chemistry has been encouraged by the Government's announcement, which is good news.

There is a tradition of pure research in this country. I remember my time at the Cavendish laboratory in Cambridge when I was struggling to get a degree in physics. Of course, that was where Rutherford and other great scientists split the atom—to use very simple terminology—using basic equipment. They had no idea that it would lead directly to such things as nuclear power. This week, Lord Wakeham came to East Anglia to start up the new Sizewell B nuclear power station. That is an example of a direct application of pure research, although originally no one had any idea to what it might lead. I pay tribute to all those in Suffolk, Norfolk and elsewhere who were involved in the Sizewell B project. It is a great success and I hope that it will run successfully after its opening this week.

The Times wrote about "1,188 MW per day", but that is wrong—The Times gets a lot wrong. Any scientists here will know that "megawatts" is power, so one refers simply to "megawatts", not "megawatts per day". In any event, it is an enormous amount of power, which will probably be good for the environment given the carbon dioxide emissions that will be prevented.

Many hon. Members have spoken about short-termism in terms of not only finance but research. I do not have time to develop that theme, but my right hon. Friend the Chancellor and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary will understand that I appreciate that an important debate is going on in the background.

I especially congratulate the Government on their support for initiatives to raise public interest in science—that is good news and has been welcomed by hon. Members of all parties—including the national week of science, engineering and technology. I was rather surprised that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has delegated the guinea pig idea to my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, but perhaps I can find out more about it later.

Many organisations in East Anglia are involved in national science week. There are many projects in Cambridge, Suffolk and Essex, but I am disappointed to learn that there is only one project in Norfolk, unless I am out of date. I put it on record that that is not good enough and I shall be getting in touch with my constituents and others to see whether we can improve the situation. The engineering education scheme in Norwich is to be commended on its work, but I hope that we can do better in Norfolk by the time of the great event in March.

Once again, I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the Parliamentary Secretary and their colleagues on their clear commitment to science, although, like other hon. Members, I would push them a little further and a little faster.

9.29 pm

Mr. Andrew Miller (Ellesmere Port and Neston): I thank right hon. and hon. Members for squeezing their speeches and enabling me to be the last Back Bencher to speak in this debate.

I praise the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, even though he may think that that is a little odd, coming from a constituency neighbour. I praise the Government's development of national science week—an excellent initiative which needs pushing harder. In our area—that represented by the right hon. Gentleman and by me—a number of exciting projects include one involving our respective borough councils of Ellesmere Port, Wirral and Chester and the Natural Environment Research Council. Many exciting projects at Ness gardens have received a staggering response and I hope that the Minister notes the commitment there.

My disappointment is aimed not at the Government but at the private sector. I am extremely disappointed at the lack of response by some of the major science players in the private sector in relation to the Cheshire and Wirral areas. If the Parliamentary Secretary wants something to do in the next few days to promote national science week, he should get hold of private sector research laboratories and science-based companies and ask them what they are doing. Nonetheless, the House ought to congratulate the British Association for the Advancement of Science on its work to ensure the success of national science week.

Several hon. Members have referred to short-termism and relative expenditure and to whether the budget has been increased. I bring to the attention of the House the document in the Vote Office under the signature of Karel van Miert, which I found extremely interesting, although I had too little time to read it. Pages 55 and 64 draw comparisons between expenditure on science research in the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany. The most staggering comparison is of the number of scientists and engineers engaged in research and development per thousand of the labour force. In the United Kingdom, it is 4.5, yet in Germany it is 6—an extraordinarily large gap. Some of the figures are extremely worrying.

The percentage of gross domestic expenditure spent on research and development financed by industry in the UK is 49.7 per cent., yet in Germany it is 59 per cent. The only area in which we seem to be ahead is in comparisons of military expenditure. I know that that creates all sorts of confusions in the figures, but the two countries are worth comparing. They illustrate the fact that, while the right hon. Gentleman, with his specific responsibilities for science and technology, is trying to do well with a limited budget, the overall commitment of the Government and the private sector is not as good as it is in Germany, one of our key comparators. That positive message should be sent from this debate.

The documents include an bemusing reference to subsidiarity which includes the sentence:

"Greater transparency in the research policies and activities of Member States would also enable individual States to develop their policies in the light of others' experience."

That is an interesting point.

"The Union must speak with a single voice on international bodies in order to participate in worldwide programmes."

If the Government are serious in that regard, they must get their act together in terms of the way in which they conduct themselves in European affairs and, in particular, the role of their own Back Benchers.

In responding to the comments of the Select Committee on Science and Technology with regard to "Forward Look", the Chancellor included a sentence that is perhaps in line with the definition of subsidiarity to which I have referred, and I welcome it. In his letter to the Chairman of the Select Committee, the hon. Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw), the Chancellor stated:

"Finally, 'Realising our potential' intended that the Forward Look would open up for public scrutiny and debate the current plans and priorities for publicly-funded science, engineering and technology."

I hope that that is a conversion to the definition of subsidiarity as far as it applies to science. I hope that the Chancellor recognises that, in the spirit of this debate, which has been quite supportive of Britain's need to develop a proper science policy, there is still room for improvement in some areas.

With regard to comparisons with other European countries, one obviously comes very rapidly to the issue of short-termism. It is important to consider the figures and then stand back and say, "Well, it is not really solely the responsibility of the banks and the financial institutions. If the infrastructure of support for science and research and development from the Government is not there, is it reasonable for the banks and financial institutions to take more than a short-term view?" Such issues must be part of a jigsaw. All the parts must be brought together and we will then see the explosion that we would all welcome.

I will conclude my rapid run through what was going to be a lengthy speech by referring to defence expenditure. Clearly, some of the important areas of research conducted under the auspices of the Ministry of Defence will result in potential for activities in the civilian sector. We should encourage the whole principle of diversification.

I challenge the Chancellor to look very carefully at page 17 of the Select Committee's second report. He should consider the exchange between his predecessor and the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet), who is not renowned for being a left winger on the Select Committee. The Chancellor will see from the language of that exchange that his predecessor was extremely muddled about the relationship between the Office of Science and Technology and the MOD.

There must be clarity because, without it, we will not have a structured transition from areas of research expertise in the MOD which could, in the post cold-war era, translate into civilian activities. That needs a carefully thought-out strategy, and I hope that, in the months and years to come, the Government—it will not be the present Government in the years to come—will engage in that debate seriously. That will give us the potential to release moneys to allow us to get on to the same league table as the Germans. Together with other constructive changes, that will create an initiative that will move the private sector and the financial institutions in parallel and help us to generate a science base in the interests of Great Britain plc in the longer term.

Mr. John Battle (Leeds, West): This brief, but important, debate has proved to be more of a Government statement on the allocation of funding for science than anything else. Science has suffered some neglect in the House since the Science and Technology Act 1965 aroused such great interest, and we all ought to welcome the fact that it is moving up the political agenda.

This is not the annual debate on science—we have that to come on "Forward Look"—but we do need an overall debate on the Government's budgets for research and development and future policy. Part of the frustration of hon. Members taking part in the debate this evening has been caused by the lack of time, and let us hope that more hon. Members join in when we have a full debate.

Although the emphasis of this debate has been on the science Budget, we must keep the debate in the context of the Government's overall spending, and I hope to refer to that during my brief remarks. A briefing based on "Forward Look" figures which I received from the Library on 1 December after the November Budget stated:

"The 1994-5 total Government spending on science and technology was planned to be £6,106.5 million . . . This was lower than the estimate for 1993-4 by some £160.3 million . . . As you suspected this planned reduction in last year's plans, last year, is greater in size than the increase in the science budget announced in the budget statement."

In other words, the science budget has effectively been undermined by other Departments' spending cuts. The Chancellor of the Duchy may claim to be holding his science budget, but it has been dramatically undermined by falls in departmental spending elsewhere. Departmental spending equals only 63 per cent. of the Government's total spending for science.

The Government's record is not good. Publicly funded research and development fell from 43 per cent. of the UK total in 1989 to 35 per cent. in 1992. In 1992, the UK spent 2.12 per cent. of GDP on research and development—lower than Japan, America, France and Germany. Hon. Members have referred to the dramatic reduction in civil expenditure, which is mostly attributable to the Department of Trade and Industry.

DTI expenditure has fallen in real terms from £900 million in 1984-85 to £245 million in 1994-95, and it is planned to go down further to £237.5 million in 1996-97. The DTI has withdrawn its joint programmes with what was formerly the Science and Engineering Research Council. The Department ended the advance technology programmes in high temperature superconductivity research. DTI money was lost from the joint framework for information technology, and from the advanced manufacturing technology committee's research into advanced robotics and computer-aided engineering. Even the smaller scale computer-integrated manufacturing was chopped by the DTI.

I put it to the Chancellor that that cannot be helpful when he is trying to co-ordinate a Government-wide strategy. There is a distinct lack of enthusiasm from the President of the Board of Trade; indeed, on the very day in June 1993 when the Chancellor's predecessor was launching the White Paper on science, the President of the Board of Trade ended the DTI's collaborative research programmes, and effectively withdrew the joint funding programmes with what was then SERC. It was a loss of an estimated £40 million, which the Government withdrew from science support. Perhaps the Minister will confirm that in his reply, and tell us how much has been lost from research programmes that were jointly funded by the Department of Trade and Industry and the research councils. Is it not about £40 million, which would wipe out any claimed increase in the support for the science base?

Will the Office of Science and Technology, via the research councils, be the main source of all Government funding for the support of research in industry and elsewhere? Will the OST guarantee to replace what has been lost by reductions in other Departments?

As we all know, it is not merely a case of reductions in the Department of Trade and Industry. That same downward trend, although less marked, is evident in other Government Departments. They are all forecasting reductions in expenditure for 1996-97 of between 8 and 17 per cent., compared with 1992-93. The Ministry of Defence and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are forecasting reductions. The Department of Transport is forecasting a £2.5 million cut in expenditure on engineering policy by the end of this financial year, compared with 1992-93. That cannot contribute to an integrated, co-ordinated departmental policy.

We need a strategy of interdepartmental thinking and action from the Government—some transdepartmental action and co-ordination, so that there is a thrust for a science policy throughout all Government Departments.

We have heard international comparisons. My hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) asked whether the private sector would fill the gap. Paragraph 3.2 of "Forward Look" states:

"with private sector contributions growing commensurately."

That implies that if the Government withdrew support, it would be matched by the private sector, but that is not happening. In 1991, British companies funded only 69 per cent. of their research, which is a lower proportion than in any other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country, bar France. Research and development by British industry is a lower percentage of the gross domestic product than that of our competitors and we are losing ground. Employment in industrial research fell by 46,000 between 1986 and 1992.

As Dr. John Mulvey said in a letter in Physics World in August 1994:

"Compared to Germany and Japan, where expenditure by industry per head of the labour force is at least twice the UK level, the gap has widened to nearly 1 per cent. of GDP or about £6 billion per year. It is indeed asking rather a lot of the science base to compensate for this enormous deficit by providing better value for money."

In September, the Prime Minister promised the Parliamentary and Scientific Committee:

"Despite the absolute necessity of restraining public expenditure we expect spending on the science base to rise in real terms next year and science will remain a high priority in future."

There seems to have been a decline in real terms even in this year's figure. It seems to be up £13.9 million, but with inflation at 2.4 per cent., it ought to have increased by £28.9 million. On page 2 of the Minister's press release, the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council claims that the budget has increased by £4.5 million, but compared with last year's figures, it has been reduced by £10.2 million from £171.8 million. Perhaps the Minister can explain that. Obviously, tonight we are discussing not new money but the earmarking and sharing out of a fragment—5 per cent.—of the science budget.

It is good to see that the underpinning of strategic science is underlined in the report and we wholeheartedly welcome that. I was especially glad to see the reference to work on protein structure, which is to be supported. We all remember the observations of Sir John Kendrew, when he was speaking of his early work at Cambridge with Max Perutz, which led to the first identification of a protein structure. He said that they had achieved no results in more than 10 years of research and that experts claimed that they were doomed to fail. The message is clear to all of us: we should support the science base.

Let us not get the debate out of perspective. The Government have spent nearly a quarter of a million pounds simply on the citizens charter for British Rail. That sum is equivalent to what they spent this year on the public understanding of science. Is science a real priority when the Government spend £208 million simply to advertise the sale of British Rail? We are forced to ask whether the Government have put science, and spending on the science base, at the heart of their agenda. Savings could be made elsewhere and that money spent on the science base.

The Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science (Mr. Robert G. Hughes): I enormously welcomed the eight Back-Bench contributions to the debate. I welcomed not necessarily their content but the fact that so many hon. Members wanted to take part in this important debate. Hon. Members on both sides of the House may be disappointed to know that, although I have agreed to become a guinea pig in the Megalab 95 competition, I stipulated that testing should be non-destructive. I should add that it was not my idea but that of Roger Highfield, who did not ask me but just put my name in print. But I am happy to go along with it.

Many hon. Members, particularly Opposition Members, concentrated on money. Although it is important to discuss every aspect of Government research and development programmes, hon. Members must be patient and wait for the publication of "Forward Look", in which the Government will detail where we are going, what we want to do, the sums that will be spent and the process by which we have reached those conclusions. "Forward Look" is the largest explanation that a British Government have ever given about what they seek to do, so it is yet another example of the open government policies for which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy is responsible.

Mr. Battle: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Hughes: I shall give way just this once, in affection to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Battle: It might be in affection, but I should prefer a guarantee from the Minister that the Government will set aside time for a full day's debate on "Forward Look" in June or July.

Mr. Hughes: That is a matter for the Leader of the House, but my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates), who represents the Patronage Secretary, will have heard the hon. Gentleman's request and will no doubt report it in the right places.

We have heard a few Jeremiahs in the debate. The speech by the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) was somewhat lugubrious. I do not know what makes him happy, but today's science budget should have done so because it has been maintained at a record level. I remind hon. Members that, in real terms, it is 30 per cent. above its value in 1979-80 and that the revision of the GDP deflator—the accurate forecast of what the money is worth—has increased the value of this year's science budget by about 2 per cent. That is good news.

We can all bandy figures about. If one is in Opposition—I have served in opposition on councils—one tries to find the worst figures, while if one is in Government or in charge, one tries to find the best figures. Let us not forget that the UK is an average spender among G7 nations. Government funding for research and development in the UK is higher than in Japan, Italy and Canada and our spending on high-technology industries stands up well to international comparison. So we are doing well by international standards and this year's figure for the basic science budget, which is, after all, the subject of tonight's debate, stands up extremely well. The figure for total Government spending on research and development will be contained in "Forward Look".

At the beginning of her speech, the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) spoke about environmental protection. I am glad that she did so because this is a tremendous opportunity. If we are to have high environmental standards, it is vital that they be science-based. A distinct fear came through from the research councils, scientists and industrialists that much of what they were being asked to do was not based firmly enough on good science. The money that we are making available will ensure that it is based on good science. That is good for all of us—it is good for the economy, the country, industrialists and the environment. If we are to lay down a strict regime, it is important that it should be the right regime and that we do not think, in a few years' time, that if only we had had better science, we could have done a better job. I look forward to the results.

Hon. Members suggested that there had been a secret carve-up. But the Director General of Research Councils has consulted widely. He has had extensive discussions with all the research council chief executives. He consulted more than 300 science practitioners before he reached the recommendations that he made to my right hon. Friend and me. Of course, my right hon. Friend listened carefully to what people said to him when he visited the universities.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Hughes: If I give way to the hon. Lady I shall not even reach the points that she made in her speech. I normally give way when hon. Members ask me, but I think it will be more courteous to answer as many questions as I can.

Sir John Cadogan, the Director General of Research Councils, is a civil servant and it has not been the practice to publish the advice of civil servants to Ministers under any Government. We are at pains to say that plans will be published in the allocation booklet announcing the basis on which we arrived at the decisions that we took.

Several hon. Members spoke about short-term contracts for researchers. That is an important point and the research councils, with the OST, are developing a concordat on contract researchers. They will soon be discussing it with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, which represents the universities and the employers of contract staff. New initiatives have been introduced and the Royal Society has increased the number of long-term personal fellowships. Warwick university has introduced 50 six-year fellowships.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw), the Chairman of the Select Committee, mentioned ROPA. I am glad that he did so as I think that ROPA answers the question raised by the hon. Members for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones)—on behalf of the Liberal party—and for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), on behalf of the Labour party, about blue skies research. I do not mind if the Labour party calls it red dawn research—we know what we mean. We mean research that has no direct industrial application at the time—not making widgets for industry and not necessarily knowing what one will get out of the research. That is precisely what the ROPA scheme does.

We should remind ourselves of the success of ROPA. Some 239 awards worth £5 million have been made in the past year and the scheme has been viewed favourably. We had to find extra money in the existing year and, together with the figures announced by my right hon. Friend, the money will be spread across all the research councils.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey spoke of the European Community money and receipts. The science research councils received£12 million from the European Community in 1994-1995 and none of it is deducted from the science provision. I commend to the House a piece that appeared in the current edition of Director magazine. Michael Kenward, former editor of the New Scientist, said that £9.6 billion over the next four years would be spent on the fourth framework programme. He kindly says that, because of the negotiations that we carried out, the figure accurately reflects the United Kingdom's competence in a number of sectors. He says that it gives United Kingdom companies a distinct edge over their European competitors when meeting the European Union's needs. We received more than our just returns on the third framework, and I am confident that British industry and academics will take up the challenge and do at least as well this time.

My hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs), who is the host Member of Parliament for most of the research councils—I look forward to visiting them with him—sought an assurance that we are looking for efficiency and not drastic cuts. I am happy to be able to give him that assurance. We are not pursuing job cuts for their own sake and we are committed to ensuring that as much of the science budget as possible goes into science. I think that the whole House will welcome that.

We do not want money to go to administration; we want it to go to the sharp end for good scientific research. It is the Government's duty to ensure that the research councils remain fit to fulfil their future purpose and we remain committed to that duty. The hon. Member for Cambridge asked whether independent research organisations can apply for grants. I will get back to the hon. Lady on that point—

It being Ten o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Patricia Anne Hall

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Bates.]

10 pm

Sir Giles Shaw (Pudsey): It is with considerable regret that I bring this particularly tragic case to the Floor of the House. I am most grateful that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department is in his place to respond to it.

Mrs. Patricia Hall lived with her husband, Keith, at 11 Moorland drive in Pudsey and was thus a constituent of mine. She has not been seen by anyone since Sunday 27 January 1992. The inquiry into her disappearance was led by Superintendents Stainthorpe and Hudson of the West Yorkshire police, who were stationed at Pudsey, and the evidence uncovered led to Mrs. Hall's husband, Keith, being arrested, charged and tried for the murder of his wife.

His trial lasted nine days and he was acquitted by a majority verdict of 10 to two almost one year ago. This is not the place to go into the detail of the trial; suffice to say that the main prosecution evidence rested upon a tape-recorded confession obtained by an undercover WPC, which was subsequently ruled inadmissible and unreliable by the trial judge.

However, in response to an application by Gilbert Gray QC, the judge allowed the transcript of the tape recording to be published. The case of Patricia Anne Hall and the surprising conclusion of the trial has become very much a matter of public concern and interest, both locally and nationally. With the acquittal of the accused, the incidents which gave rise to the alleged death of Mrs. Patricia Hall have not been proven to a point where her death might be formally recognised and so registered.

On the other hand, although the taped evidence was declared inadmissible as the basis for prosecution at a murder trial, it is possible that incidental information contained in the transcript which was published may provide circumstantial evidence to a coroner.

It is against that background that both the west Yorkshire coroner in post at that time and his successor, Mr. David Hinchliffe, the current coroner, considered that an application to the Home Office for an inquest to be held under section 15 of the Coroners Act 1988 should be made. As I understand it, section 15 of the 1988 Act permits the Home Secretary to direct an inquest to be opened to permit registration of death to take place under certain specific circumstances. It states:

"Where a coroner has reason to believe—

(a) that a death has occurred in or near his district in such circumstances that an inquest ought to be held; and

(b) that owing to the destruction of the body by fire or otherwise, or to the fact that the body is lying in a place from which it cannot be recovered, an inquest cannot be held except in pursuance of this section . . . he may report the facts to the Secretary of State".

This application was made by the west Yorkshire coroner on 7 April last year. The reply from the Home Office dated 22 July stated that the Home Secretary had decided not to direct an inquest under section 15 of the Act. The main reason was that any finding as to the cause of death, which section 16 requires, could not be inconsistent with the outcome of the criminal proceedings. He stated that it would be intolerable if any finding of an inquest should state that Mrs. Hall was "murdered by her husband" when he had been acquitted of that charge in criminal proceedings. Moreover, the Home Secretary did not think that there was a public interest matter at stake here.

On 31 August, the coroner wrote to the Home Secretary again enclosing a further copy of the transcript and renewing his request for direction under section 15. In October, the Home Office asked the coroner for further information to show that he had reason to believe that a death had occurred. A mere disappearance of a person would not be regarded as sufficient.

In particular, the Home Office stated that more evidence must have been laid before the Crown court independent of the confession, to establish the death of Patricia Anne Hall. As a consequence of the coroner's application to the Home Office, I became involved by receiving requests from relatives and other concerned constituents to support the coroner in his endeavours to hold an inquest.

If such an inquest were held, it could determine for registration purposes that Patricia Anne Hall was dead. The family might then with dignity draw a line through their grievous uncertainty. Moreover, I believed that the case had aroused substantial public interest and that that should be taken into account—supported by a strong local press campaign that an inquest was desirable.

To fulfil the Home Office request for evidence outwith the transcript, the coroner requested West Yorkshire police to provide such evidence that they could obtain that Patricia Anne Hall had died. Senior investigating officers of West Yorkshire police provided a report to the coroner dated 10 November 1994, which sought to meet his request. It concluded:

"In the light of all the evidence gathered it remains the unanimous view of the inquiry team that Mrs. Hall was killed at 11 Moorland Drive, Pudsey, on Monday 27 January 1992."

Accordingly, the coroner wrote to the Home Office on 21 November setting out the revised evidence that, in his view, would support the case for a section 15 application. He concluded with this summary:

"(i) The enclosed report from West Yorkshire Police demonstrates the likelihood that Mrs. Hall is dead.

(ii) Mrs. Hall's home address, which is the place where she likely met her death, is within my jurisdiction.

(iii) The enclosed report from West Yorkshire Police refers to the likely circumstances of the destruction of the body.

(iv) I refer to my previous correspondence regarding my concern for an inquest to be held, which is stated in detail in my letter of the 7th April 1994."

I wrote to the Home Secretary in support of that application, and I consider that it would be in the best interests of all parties that such an inquest should be held. An inquest could determine, for registration purposes, that Patricia Anne Hall is dead. An inquest would provide substantial relief to Mrs. Hall's relatives and might enable a settlement of her affairs. It would also meet substantial public interest supported by a strong local press campaign and, above all, would allow the coroner to discharge his perceived duty.

As yet, there has been no reply from the Home Secretary on that matter. It is time that such a reply was made, and that is why I applied to Madam Speaker for this Adjournment debate.

I recognise that that request has caused—and probably is causing—difficult legal issues to be raised within the Home Office. The jurisdiction of a coroner is somewhat constrained. Although the acquittal of the man accused of murdering Mrs. Hall has already determined that particular line of inquiry, it does not seem to me impossible that a coroner's verdict could be arrived at which in no way either involves the taped admission itself—deemed unreliable and inadmissible by the trial judge—or conflicts with the verdict of the higher court. It seems to me that a verdict such as "killed unlawfully" or an open verdict would certainly not conflict with the Crown court. The cause of death could be described in medical terms as "unascertainable". It also seems to me that the Home Secretary has received sufficient additional evidence to demonstrate the likelihood that Mrs. Hall is dead, and there is no doubt that if that evidence is accepted the death clearly occurred within the west Yorkshire coroner's jurisdiction. The report from the West Yorkshire police team indicates the likely circumstances of the disposal and subsequent destruction of the body and shows that such actions would have been practicable.

I deduce from that, therefore, that all the requirements of the coroner by the correspondence with the Home Office and the answers to all the questions that it set down for elucidation before arriving at its decision have now been fully and fairly delivered and that the answers should enable the Home Office to make a recommendation to the Home Secretary that a direction be issued under section 15 of the Coroners Act.

I said at the outset that this is a tragedy—for the family and for the Pudsey community. It should be brought to a fair and final conclusion.

I therefore think it right to ask my hon. Friend, who is responding to the debate on behalf of the Home Secretary, to accept that he has a duty to allow the west Yorkshire coroner to proceed to an inquest, which would be the proper fulfilment of his professional duty to the public whom he serves with distinction. It would also bring one element of justice, so far denied to the devastated family of Patricia Anne Hall.

10.13 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Nicholas Baker): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Sir G. Shaw) for raising this important and tragic case and I pay tribute to the zeal and persistence with which he has pursued it over several months. It is a case that my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and I have considered extremely carefully, because we recognise its importance to the family of Patricia Anne Hall.

Inquests in England and Wales are conducted in accordance with the Coroners Act 1988 and the coroners rules 1984. Coroners are appointed to investigate sudden or unexplained deaths, in the general interest of the community. Their duty to hold an inquest is triggered when a report is made to them that the body of a deceased person is lying within their district and that there is reasonable cause to believe that he or she has died a violent or unnatural death, a sudden death of unknown cause or has died in custody.

What happens if the coroner has reason to believe that a death has occurred in his district in such circumstances that an inquest should be held, but the body has been destroyed or cannot be recovered? That is what the coroner believes in this case. This situation is catered for by section 15 of the Coroners Act, which provides that, in such circumstances, the coroner may report the facts to the Secretary of State, who may, if he considers it desirable to do so, direct either the coroner or another one to hold an inquest into the death.

The disappearance of Patricia Anne Hall was reported to the police by her husband, Keith Hall, on 27 January 1992. No body has ever been found, but, following police investigations, Keith Hall was charged with his wife's murder. During those investigations, Mr. Hall admitted to an undercover policewoman that he had strangled his wife and disposed of her body in an incinerator.

That admission was tape-recorded by the police officer. In the course of a preliminary hearing at the trial, the judge ruled that the taped confession was inadmissible in evidence, as the circumstances in which it was made rendered it potentially unreliable. On 10 March 1994, after hearing the rest of the evidence, the jury acquitted Mr. Hall of his wife's murder. It was part of his case that his wife might still be alive.

Following the trial, on 16 March 1994, Her Majesty's coroner for the eastern district of west Yorkshire reported to the Secretary of State his belief that the death of Patricia Anne Hall had occurred in his district, in such circumstances that an inquest should be held and that owing to the destruction of the body by fire an inquest could not be held except in pursuance of section 15 of the Coroners Act. The application was carefully considered by Home Office officials, acting on behalf of the Secretary of State.

A decision was taken, at official level, not to direct the holding of an inquest and that decision was communicated to the coroner in a letter of 22 July 1994. In that letter it was pointed out that, if the inquest had been opened and adjourned to await the outcome of criminal proceedings, as would probably have happened had Mrs. Hall's body been found before her husband's trial, section 16(7) of the Coroners Act would have required that the finding of the inquest as to the cause of death should not be inconsistent with the outcome of the criminal proceedings.

The view was taken that the same principle must apply to an inquest opened only after the criminal proceedings had been concluded, and that it would have been intolerable if the finding of the inquest had effectively been—although not of course couched in those specific terms—that Mrs. Hall had been murdered by her husband when he had been acquitted of that charge in criminal proceedings.

On 31 August 1994 and 21 November 1994, the coroner wrote asking for the matter to be reconsidered. During the same period, my hon. Friends the Members for Pudsey and for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) and the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) made representations about the case. Those developments prompted us to look into its implications again. Further legal advice was sought on a number of points and I now propose to outline the major factors that we took into consideration.

I should say straight away that both my right hon. and learned Friend and I can well understand, and have every sympathy with, the desire of Mrs. Hall's family to obtain an official pronouncement of her death, in order not only to be able to register the death and complete their grieving but also, on a more practical level, to sort out her estate. We have also considered all the matters urged on us by the coroner.

As the hon. Member for Pudsey has made clear, one of the matters most strongly urged was that to which I have just referred: the need of the family and the local community to establish that Mrs. Hall is dead and not just a missing person. However, I am advised that that is not what an inquest is for. The general purpose of an inquest is to ensure that sudden deaths are publicly investigated. The specific purposes of an inquest, as stated in rule 36 of the coroners rules, are to ascertain who the deceased was and how, when and where he came by his death. Of course it is necessary, to trigger section 15, for the coroner to believe that a person is dead, and in this case the coroner has made it quite clear that he believes that Mrs. Hall is dead. But it would not be right for my right hon. and learned Friend to exercise his discretion under section 15 for the purpose of simply establishing the fact of her death rather than for the normal purposes of an inquest, which, as I have said, are to determine how, when and where the death occurred.

There is also the possibility of the inquest verdict being inconsistent with the verdict at the trial. That, as I have said, is an aspect on which the Home Office letter of 22 July 1994 to the coroner concentrated.

Having taken further legal advice on this point, we feel that a verdict at an inquest of unlawful killing would not be inconsistent with an acquittal in a criminal trial in every case, as the coroners rules preclude a coroner from naming the person whom he believes to have committed the unlawful killing. However, a verdict of unlawful killing in this instance could contemplate no one but Mr. Hall, since, as we understand it, the wide-ranging and thorough investigations of the police produced no evidence whatsoever to implicate anyone else. Furthermore, the fact that section 16 of the Coroners Act envisages that an inquest once adjourned might not be resumed—in part because all the facts have been ventilated at a criminal trial—is a factor to be weighed in the balance. In considering the desirability of an inquest, account should also be taken of the spirit of the "no inconsistency provisions" of section 16(7).

Another important question that we have had to address is the difficulty of the coroner admitting in evidence at the inquest the disputed tape-recorded confession. A High Court judge has ruled it inadmissible in criminal proceedings. It would, of course, be a matter for a coroner to consider questions of admissibility in accordance with the law, but we are concerned at the possibility of such evidence being admitted at a coroner's inquisition, where safeguards built into the criminal process do not apply. We have also given weight to the fact that there has already been a trial lasting nine days at which all the relevant evidence was ventilated, and which led to the acquittal of the person before the court. We have also considered the undesirability of the same issues being subjected to a second judicial process.

The coroner's reasons for wishing to hold an inquest, and the representations received in support of one from my hon. Friends the Members for Pudsey and for Skipton and Ripon and the hon. Member for Leeds, West have been looked at very carefully, but having considered all the circumstances of the case my right hon. and learned Friend has concluded that it would not be desirable to direct that an inquest be held in this case. He has had particular regard to the consequence of not holding an inquest—the practical difficulty facing Mrs. Hall's family in that they are currently unable to obtain an official pronouncement of her death or to register her death. But this factor does not, in the opinion of my right hon. and learned Friend, outweigh the general undesirability of directing an inquest in the circumstances of the case.

I realise that this is a most unwelcome result for the family. My right hon. and learned Friend and I greatly regret the distress that this decision may cause them.

Sir Giles Shaw: With the leave of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should like to speak again as my hon. Friend the Minister has allowed time for me to do so.

It goes without saying that what my hon. Friend has now announced as the decision of the Home Secretary—that he will not proceed to direct an inquest—will be received with very great distress indeed. He has, however, made it clear that substantial legal arguments have led to that decision.

I want my hon. Friend the Minister to know that it seems to me to be desirable to allow the coroner for west Yorkshire to examine with care the statement that my hon. Friend has made in giving the decision on this matter. Should he then believe that it is desirable to ensure that he fully understands the reasoning that has now been adduced in this matter, I might apply to my hon. Friend to visit the Home Office for further discussion. I recognise that it would not be easy, if not impossible, to overturn a decision that has been many months overdue, but it might help to determine precisely why, in legal terms, the Home Secretary has arrived at this decision.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-six minutes past Ten o'clock.

[MADAM SPEAKER in the Chair]

BILL PRESENTED

LICENSING (SUNDAY HOURS)

Mr. Secretary Howard, supported by the Prime Minister, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Secretary Heseltine, Mr. Secretary Dorrell and Mr. Michael Forsyth presented a Bill to amend the provisions of the Licensing Act 1964 relating to permitted hours in licensed premises and clubs on Sundays, Christmas Day and Good Friday; and for connected purposes: And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time upon Monday 6 February, and to be printed. [Bill 44.]

Orders of the Day

Proceeds of Crime Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

9.34 am

Sir John Hannam (Exeter): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

This is third time lucky for me in the private Members' ballot. I was also lucky last year in the private motions ballot, so I am not going to buy any more lottery tickets as I am sure that my luck has now run out. However, I am delighted to have the opportunity to present this Bill. Although it may appear a narrow and fairly technical measure—I apologise for its technicalities—it is none the less an ambitious one and I am confident that hon. Members of all parties will support its aims and principles.

The Bill aims to make life much more difficult for those who profit from crime and especially those who make a living out of the proceeds of crime, those whom we call the life-style criminals. It bites on a whole range of serious and acquisitive crimes except drug trafficking and terrorism, which are covered by their own legislation.

The proposals follow recent improvements to the drug trafficking confiscation scheme which, by an apt coincidence, comes into force this very day. Like those recent improvements in the powers of the courts to confiscate the proceeds of drugs offences, the proposals have their origins in a report of the Home Office working group on confiscation which was established in 1990 to monitor and develop the confiscation legislation. They do not alter the fundamental nature of the all-crime confiscation scheme; rather, they are intended to build on and strengthen the existing powers in part VI of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 and bring its powers more closely into line with the drug trafficking provisions as they now stand following the entry into force today of the Drug Trafficking Act 1994.

One of the concerns highlighted in the Home Office working group's report, which I draw to the House's attention, is the infrequent use being made of the confiscation powers in the 1988 Act. Home Office statistics show that in the financial year 1993-94 only 13 "non-drugs" confiscation orders were made by the courts to a total value of some £412,000. Of that sum, only £265,600 has been paid over to the Secretary of State. That is disappointing, to say the least, and such sums can only be a drop in the ocean of profits that criminals are making out of their lifestyles of crime. The Bill is designed to make our laws much more effective in removing profits from the criminal fraternity.

Mr. John Greenway (Ryedale): I congratulate my hon. Friend on promoting the Bill. Is he aware that the proposals that he is outlining have been warmly welcomed by the police and correspond four square with the evidence given to the Select Committee on Home Affairs during its current inquiry into organised crime and the need to widen the provisions to enable greater confiscation of criminal proceeds?

[Mr. John Greenway]

Sir John Hannam: Yes, I am aware of the support of the police and hon. Members of all parties for the measure, which will extend the available powers and place a duty on the courts.

Clause 1 imposes a duty on the court to make a confiscation order where written notice is tendered by the prosecutor. At present, the court has a discretion, so the clause would bring part VI of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 into line with drug trafficking provisions and ensure that in future the courts make a confiscation order to the full amount of the defendant's financial benefit from crime. In line with the arrangements for drug trafficking, if the prosecutor does not tender a notice, the court may still make an order of its own volition.

Clause 1 also abolishes the £10,000 minimum amount currently applicable to confiscation orders under the Criminal Justice Act 1988, which follows the approach taken in the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Bill being considered in another place. It must be wrong, as I am sure that hon. Members would agree, that criminals should know themselves to be safe from confiscation wherever they have—ostensibly—less than £10,000 of benefit or of realisable property. There has never been a lower limit for drug trafficking, and the same should apply for all indictable offences.

Of course, it costs money to pursue a confiscation case through the courts. Prosecutors will no doubt have the likely costs and benefits very much in mind when they consider whether to tender a notice asking the court to confiscate proceeds in a given case. Few cases below the £10,000 threshold may be considered viable and the cost would be greater than the benefit. On the other hand, confiscation orders may still be made and sums realised in cases involving benefit and property below £10,000 without imposing disproportionate costs on the courts. I suspect that the Government will wish to monitor that closely to ensure that public money is used to best effect.

Clause 2 is the cutting edge of the Bill. Part VI of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 permits the courts to confiscate only the proceeds of any offences of which the defendant is convicted, plus the benefit from any offences taken into consideration. Unfortunately, as a result, the 1988 Act has had little effect on criminals who amass large profits by repeating similar offences over a period of years. The best example of that is the difficulty illustrated by pornographic videos. A criminal may copy and distribute thousands of videos a month, but the production of each video will constitute a separate offence. For the entire proceeds of that criminal enterprise to be confiscated under the 1988 Act, every offence would have to charged and convicted separately or taken into consideration by the court.

Unfortunately, the courts may take offences into consideration only with the defendant's consent and lifestyle criminals are well aware of the possibility of their ill-gotten gains being confiscated if they allow the court to take too many offences into consideration and will obviously not allow it. Clause 2 addresses those problems.

Under certain circumstances, which I shall describe, clause 2 empowers the courts to assume that all property passed through the defendant's hands in the past six years has come from crime. If the defendant cannot show that assumption to be wrong, in whole or in part, the court will be able to order the defendant to pay an amount equivalent to that assumed benefit. The Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 has always allowed similar assumptions to be made on the strength of one drug trafficking conviction.

Mr. Oliver Heald (Hertfordshire, North): I fully understand that it is essential that the court may make assumptions, but does my hon. Friend agree that it may be possible to go further still, as the Drug Trafficking Offences Act does, and require the court to make those assumptions? Would he consider that sensible?

Sir John Hannam: As I shall describe, the Bill places certain requirements on the court, and the onus to prove otherwise will fall very much on the defendant. Nevertheless, since general crime is distinct from clearly defined drug trafficking offences, the assumptions require a little more latitude. I shall address that point in more detail.

First, the courts have power to make assumptions only when the prosecutor regards the case as suitable and tenders a declaration to that effect. Secondly, assumptions may be made only when there is some indication of a pattern of offending. We are aiming at catching the life-style criminals. Either the defendant must have been convicted of another qualifying offence in the previous six years or he must stand convicted of four or more qualifying offences.

Thirdly, the court has overriding discretion to make assumptions, which is quite different from the Drug Trafficking Offences Act, under which the court is obliged, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) pointed out, to make more far-reaching assumptions in all cases, even when sentencing a first-time offender for a single drug trafficking offence. The Bill enables the courts to confiscate benefits from offenders who have previously been able to keep their profits. However, the Bill also establishes necessary safeguards to ensure that the new powers are not used in undeserving cases.

Clauses 3 and 4 recognise that information is essential in confiscation hearings. They ensure that the court has the opportunity to get the information it needs in a reasonable period. Clause 3 requires the prosecutor to give the court a statement or statements about the defendant's benefit from crime. At present, the production of a statement is discretionary. Conversely, clause 4 allows the court to order the defendant to provide any information that it considers relevant to the making of a confiscation order.

As hon. Members will readily appreciate, the amount and whereabouts of proceeds is very often known only to the defendant. Clause 4 will help the courts to assess the value of the confiscation order. Failure to comply with the court order will, of course, put the defendant in contempt of court. Clauses 3 and 4 echo the Drug Trafficking Offences Act, as do the revaluation powers in clauses 5 to 7. At present, under part VI of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, the courts are powerless to confiscate the value of the benefit, which was made from crime but discovered after the original proceedings. The Bill will enable courts to confiscate additional benefit within six years of the defendant's conviction on an application by the prosecutor.

Clause 8 closes a loophole in serious and lucrative crime which is already closed in drug trafficking. Since confiscation orders made under the 1988 Act are enforced like fines in many respects, the service of a term of imprisonment in default of payment expunges the debt for the amount payable under the order. In some cases, that means that the offender can hang on to substantial ill-gotten gains by serving a short term of imprisonment in default of payment—an issue raised in almost every radio interview that I have given regarding the Bill—which is contrary to the spirit of the confiscation legislation.

I am sure that hon. Members will share my view that there should be no question of choice between paying the court's confiscation order and going to prison and keeping the profits. The Bill will prevent that choice from arising in future. Even when a default term has been served, it will still be possible to enforce a confiscation order by other means.

Clause 9 is a further enforcement measure. At present, if they wish, the courts can allow time for the payment of a confiscation order. That may sometimes be necessary when, for instance, a property is to be disposed of because, often, the criminal sinks the proceeds into property as quickly as possible. However, defendants who fail to pay up promptly can benefit from the interest accruing on the unpaid account, which is quite wrong. Clause 9, therefore, allows the courts to add interest on the unpaid amount and treat it as part of the confiscation order. Again, that echoes drug trafficking legislation.

The remaining clauses of the Bill essentially provide more effective asset-tracing powers for use by our enforcement authorities. Clause 11 allows the police and customs officers, who have been heavily involved in the preparation of the Bill, to obtain material for use in an investigation into whether a person has benefited from any criminal conduct or into the extent of any proceeds and their whereabouts. Clause 12 enables a search warrant to be issued for the same purpose.

Those new powers are based on powers in clauses 27 and 28 of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act and are designed to enable the enforcement authorities to gain access to confidential banking and other material which could be of substantial use in financial investigations. The powers of drug trafficking legislation have proved an effective tool, especially in the early stages of a drug trafficking investigation. That is operated on an international scale. We can all cite instances of crimes in respect of which the public are fed up and disgusted with the lack of follow-up. As a result of the Bill, the police will be able to carry out the necessary investigations so that ultimately the proceeds can be confiscated.

The House clearly has a duty to ensure that the appropriate authorities have the necessary tools to unearth the true extent of a criminal's benefit from crime. The new measures include all the appropriate safeguards and they are limited to investigations into the proceeds of crime. They do not extend police powers generally.

Clause 13 is modelled on provisions originally in section 30 of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986. It incorporates the safeguards in the drug trafficking legislation. It allows the High Court to order Government Departments to produce material which is likely to be of use in restraining, charging and realising property under part VI of the Criminal Justice Act 1988. Where the High Court permits, material produced may be disclosed to other agencies to assist in the fight against crime.

I believe that I have given a fair and accurate description of the aims, principles and content of the Bill. In my view, it is absolutely essential that the courts and the enforcement authorities should be able to deal effectively with lucrative crime of all kinds. The Bill will go a long way towards achieving that, and I am confident that it will be welcomed by hon. Members and the general public. I commend it to the House.

9.50 am

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): I congratulate the hon. Member for Exeter (Sir John Hannam) on his luck in the ballot and on choosing this subject. He has presented his concerns and the concerns of hon. Members and of the general public very clearly. I am a member of the British delegation to the Council of Europe and I serve on the Social, Health and Family Affairs Committee. We held meetings in Strasbourg this week in which we had detailed discussions about the problem of drug trading and dealing. The hon. Member for Exeter referred to that point.

It is clear that drug crime and every other form of major crime is now highly organised. Criminals do not simply deal in drugs on a national and international basis. We are aware that very large sums of money are involved in crime.

I am glad to see the Minister of State, Home Office, the hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean), in the Chamber today. He will be aware that we are not talking about the little groups of villains which, sadly, exist in many parts of the country and elsewhere. Those villains cause trouble, commit robberies, steal and beat up people if they step out of line. We are talking about organised crime which has international links.

The financial rewards of international organised crime are enormous: enormous sums of money are made. The people who run those organisations are very rarely caught. The lower ranks are caught and appear before the courts. Wandsworth prison is in my constituency, and I sometimes get to know inmates and the kind of offences which have caused them to be in prison.

However, the people who are making enormous sums of money and who are building up their empires are rarely caught. I wish the Bill every success, but, with respect, the hon. Member for Exeter omitted to refer to one or two points. I am sure that he would not be opposed to the comments that I propose to make later. I believe that we should confiscate the assets of the people who run the organisations and, if they are convicted by our courts, they should be sent to prison for a very long time.

A few moments ago, I said that we were concerned about drugs and the vast sums of money that can be earned from that form of criminal activity. Hon Members may have listened to this morning's "Today" programme. According to a report on that programme, a large number of police officers in a police station in the Bronx were actively involved with people who were trading in drugs in New York. From that brief report, it appeared that one officer had well over $1 million stuffed in a holdall in his locker in the police station.

That report illustrates the amount of money involved and the extent of the corruption that takes place at all levels. Not only police officers are involved; sadly, corruption occurs in many spheres of day-to-day life and it involves people who have authority to make decisions.

With regard to other aspects of crime and the vast sums of money involved, we must consider the illegal arms trade. We know something about that activity. If our colleagues from Northern Ireland were here today, I am sure that they could speak at length about the illegal arms which found their way into Northern Ireland from far-away countries. Those arms are were not given; they were sold. They were obviously being sold for very large sums of money, and that money had to be filtered through other channels so that it appeared to be clean and not dirty money.

We should also consider the traffic in stolen art. Many pictures are extremely valuable. They sell for very large sums of money. There are professional criminals and thieves operating in the art world.

Although I am a London Member, I am aware that car crime occurs in all parts of the country. I recall that, two or three years ago, my hon. Friend the Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) bought quite a pricey motor car, having regard to the distance that he has to travel from his home to this place. That car was stolen. When he went to the police, they said, "We've got to tell you, your chances of ever seeing your car again are zero. In our view, that car could well be somewhere in Europe today." Car stealing groups in this country and elsewhere in Europe make enormous sums of money. Although we are aware of that crime, it is not easy to contain it or to obtain the information which the hon. Member for Exeter seeks to obtain in his Bill.

The hon. Member for Exeter referred to pornography. Pornography is undoubtedly one of the growth industries. Again, we are talking about very large sums of money. Far be it from me to name people, because they would then say, "He is just taking advantage of parliamentary privilege," but there are extremely wealthy people in London. We often read about them in the daily press. They are proud to say, "I have been associated with the pornography industry for years. That's how I made my money." They own substantial businesses and large properties. We certainly know that the pornography trade is not run by a little group in the United Kingdom; its links are worldwide. It is now easy to move around the world.

There are some who say that, by and large, the single market could be a good thing. The Minister may wish to comment on the problems that the single market has caused.

The next problem to which I refer is not talked about very much, but it certainly exists—Hon. Members who serve in the Council of Europe certainly discuss it with their colleagues there. It occurs in the present central European countries—the old eastern European countries—in which, sadly, life can be very hard for many people. There is now clear evidence of a flourishing trade in women in certain eastern European countries. Because of the hardship that those women and their families suffer, some might think, "Prostitution is not the kind of life that I would like, but if it will give me money to help my family, I might do it for a while." There is evidence of such women being moved around countries in Europe.

How do we tackle the people who indulge in that evil trade? As we know, it is easy for someone to approach women, especially young women, and say, "Look, we are seeking hostesses, dancers and others in the entertainment world." I am sure that the most honourable of women would think, "I would like to do that." They are then moved to a foreign country whose laws they know nothing about and where they know no one. They then become the virtual prisoners of the people who move them from country to country.

There is evidence of that—it does not receive much coverage, but it most certainly happens. I do not say that we should spend much time on that subject today, but perhaps the Minister will comment on it.

The hon. Member for Exeter will be the first to agree that the people whose activities he wants to curb and whose ill-gotten gains he wishes to recover are highly professional. I am sure that he agrees that it will be very hard to do that.

I have a paper that was prepared and presented by a senior official of the Italian law enforcement office. It makes very interesting reading. I suppose that all hon. Members have heard of the Mafia and have seen "The Godfather". Hon. Members possibly enjoyed such films and thought, "Well, perhaps a little bit of it is true, but much of it is typical Hollywood make-believe." That is not the case, according to that official's paper. It shows that there are many other highly organised, professional criminal groups in Italy.

You, Madam Deputy Speaker, might ask me, "What does Italy have to do with the hon. Gentleman's Bill?" The answer is, a great deal. Crime knows no boundaries, nor do those who organise crime. It is easy for people from Italy or from the United Kingdom to be in each other's country in two or three hours. One has a passport, one goes to the appropriate airport, and one is away. Obviously, one can quickly meet somebody abroad.

As the paper shows, we are dealing with organisations. Until I read that paper and talked to people from Italy, I did not fully understand the extent of organised crime. We are talking about family groups who live in Italy, the United States, Argentina and Venezuela—they could live in this country—who have close links. They meet not to talk about the weather but about how they organise their racket. That is of great concern to us.

The Italian official's paper highlights enormous problems for the courts. Sadly, the hon. Gentleman will find out about them as he pilots his Bill through its Committee stage. I shall certainly support him fully. The paper states:

> "In the complex investigative field in which we operate, changes in orientations and methods evolve rapidly. In addition, these changes involve not only criminals' new operational schemes, but also the last achievements of technology, such as fax machines, computers, cellular phones and global satellite mobiles and so on."

Through their wealth and their international organisations, people have been able to pursue their criminal activities.

There is no cut in criminals' funding. No criminal organisation ever says, "We should be doing that, but just think of the money." I do not make a party political point, because it could happen under any Government, but hon.

Members repeatedly express concern about the lack of sufficient funding for police forces to try to combat crime at whatever level.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the confiscation of assets. No one other than criminals would object to that. However, we are not talking only about bank transactions. Many people often think that criminals put large sums of money in a bank or perhaps in several banks so that there are smaller amounts, but we are not talking about that. Evidence has been submitted to us in the Council of Europe, and I am sure that the Home Office has also received information. We may be talking about property investment, and I do not mean the family house. There is clear evidence that large properties and businesses, such as night clubs or casinos, are being bought.

I am sure that the Minister knows that it is easy to launder money through such businesses. The owners can fill in books and allow inspections, but it can be difficult to charge anyone running those organisations, although the authorities may not believe that all the money the owners are declaring has been paid in the course of gaming transactions in the casino. How do we tackle those people, and the confusion they cause?

Another thing which amazes me—I should no longer be amazed at what criminals get up to—is that there is a lucrative market for criminals in antique furniture. I do not mean anything cheap or tatty, but antique furniture of elegance and great value. It is the easiest thing in the world for someone who has bought furniture quickly to pass it on, and that is a great problem with which the Bill must deal.

I return to the report from the senior Italian officer. A short comment highlights what I am talking about. In June 1993, the leader of a criminal group purchased a boat for 1 billion lire. Some of that money had previously been changed into Dutch guilders and Swiss francs, and eventually the money was transferred to the seller from a Swiss bank. My understanding is that the gentleman sold the boat not long after buying.

I would like to know what checks are being made—or can be made—within the single market. It is easy to move from country to country, and the traffic in women exists because there are few border controls. As an example, I came home last night from the Council of Europe. I was in Strasbourg, and was taken by car across the Swiss border. There were no checks, the car did not stop at customs or immigration and we were just waved through. We were making a perfectly honourable journey, but there could be many people who are not.

A point that we must examine is extradition. Let us think about two recent cases which perhaps did not involve drugs. I suppose that I can name the gentleman in the first case, because he is presently serving a prison sentence. Mr. Ronnie Knight and his friends made life very enjoyable and pleasant for themselves in Spain from the proceeds of crime, and they received massive press coverage. Only Knight knows the reasons he had for coming back, but eventually he did come back. The House will know of the on-going difficulties that we experience in this area, and the Government—to their credit—had tried to get that gentleman back.

I am told that there are a number of people in Spain whom the police authorities here would like to interview—to use the polite jargon—but they cannot get them back. It would be interesting to hear from the Minister what kind of discussions are taking place with countries in the European Union, and we must not forget that Spain is a member of the EU. There are a number of people who have, frankly, paid no regard to the laws of this country and, to use a somewhat crude expression, have put two fingers up to authority and said that they could not care less. They know that we can do nothing about them, and they continue to live as pleasantly as they can from their gains from crime.

It would be interesting to hear from the Minister how he thinks the Bill could be strengthened to tackle the issue of extradition. The House will remember also the Brinks-Mat robbery at Heathrow some years ago, when large sums were taken. Some individuals went into hiding abroad, and there was nothing we could do about it.

I shall be careful about the next person to whom I refer, as I realise that there may be criminal proceedings in the pipeline. My hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) has asked questions in the past couple of weeks to the Attorney-General about Mr. Nadir. We know that he is in northern Cyprus, and we know that there is a great deal of evidence which the police may wish to use in charges against him. It would obviously then be for the courts to decide whether, based on that evidence, Mr. Nadir was guilty.

There was a conference in Cyprus on legal affairs some years ago, and I think that the then Lord Chancellor went there to try to talk to Mr. Denktash in an effort to build relations and in the hope that Mr. Nadir could be sent back to the UK. Nothing happened, and he is still there. That is another example of a person who may have committed offences, yet whom the police cannot question.

I welcome the Bill, but aspects of it could still be tightened. The Bill goes outside the existing legislation regarding drug offences, and I would like to know how much co-operation we are seeking from member states of the EU. That has great relevance. We should know if any have similar legislation at present and, if so, how it is working.

Those of us who have been in this place for a while know that when Bills go into Committee, amendments may be tabled by other Members or by the Government. If there is a general willingness to see the Bill go through—I hope that there is such a willingness on this Bill—there is no harm in amendments being tabled in Committee.

I referred to the fact that I serve on the Council of Europe. I would like to hear the Minister's comments on the point that I have just made. I would like him and his officials to find out how many of the other 11 member states have similar legislation; whether it is working; and what weaknesses they have found. I have concentrated my remarks on the 11 members, because we know of the rules that govern the interaction of members of the European Union—

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. I am sorry to interrupt to hon. Gentleman, but we are looking at a Bill that deals with the recovery of the proceeds of criminal conduct, and it seems to me that, although some background is certainly desirable, he is now dealing with matters that could not possibly relate to the Second Reading of the Bill.

Mr. Cox: I note what you say, Madam Speaker, and will bear it in mind. I was simply giving examples to show that the European Union suffers from the same kinds of problems that the hon. Member for Exeter seeks to overcome in his Bill. Surely this is an opportunity, before the Bill becomes law—I hope that it goes through all its stages without problems—to say that we have consulted other countries and believe that it is a good thing, because I can think of legislation that was introduced some time ago with regard to the control of firearms, but not long afterwards, we found that there were loopholes in the legislation. That is the point that I was making.

I warmly welcome the Bill and the way in which it was presented by the hon. Gentleman. I have outlined other matters which I believe fit into the overall discussion that we are entitled to have on Second Reading. It is no good simply saying, "It is a wonderful Bill; I am going to support it and I hope that everyone else does," without saying, "Yes, I will support the Bill, but are we really aware of this problem, or that problem?" I hope that, when it is considered in Committee it will not be rushed through, because that is the opportunity to look in detail at the worthwhile proposals that the hon. Gentleman has presented in the Bill and outlined today. I for one offer him my fullest support.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. David Maclean): Before any more hon. Members speak, I shall take this early opportunity to express the Government's position on the Bill, which may influence other speeches. I want to set at rest any doubt about whether the Government support it.

The Government are grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Sir J. Hannam) for introducing the Bill to deprive criminals of wealth accumulated from crime, and it has our full support. I am delighted, although not surprised, that it has received a warm welcome from hon. Members on both sides of the House. Most hon. Members recognise that tough laws are necessary to ensure that criminals do not enjoy a living from crime, at the cost and suffering of those who live within the law. The Bill tackles the problem head on, and my hon. Friend can be assured that the Government will continue to give him all the support and assistance necessary to ensure that it is enacted.

In the two years since the publication of the Home Office working group's second report, the need to strengthen the courts' powers to confiscate the proceeds of non-drugs crime has become even more acute, as the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) pointed out. The statistics quoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter in his opening remarks speak for themselves. Last year, confiscation orders under the Criminal Justice Act 1988 realised the meagre sum of £265,600. Clearly, many criminals—too many—are continuing to benefit from their crimes and are keeping their profits.

My hon. Friend gave a full description of the main contents of the Bill, and I do not think that the House would want me to delay other speeches by repeating ad nauseam what he said or by running through the clauses. With your permission, however, Madam Deputy Speaker, I wish to say that the Government particularly support the innovative proposals in clause 2. The fact that the law does not deal effectively with criminals who persist in a life style of crime and make a good living from doing so has been of great concern to my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and me for some time.

Although, for good reasons, the proposals in clause 2 fall short of the powers available in drug trafficking and terrorism legislation, they are, none the less, hard hitting, and I am confident that once the legislation begins to bite criminals will be far less confident about their ability to hold on to their ill-gotten gains. Safeguards will ensure that the powers are not used unfairly or in unsuitable cases.

The new investigative powers in clauses 11, 12 and 13 are well overdue and will be especially welcomed by the police and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

In short, the Government fully support my hon. Friend's Bill and I welcome the support that I believe it will receive from the Opposition. We are very grateful for the consensus across the House. We wish the measure well during the remainder of its passage through the House and in another place. Once again, I congratulate my hon. Friend on introducing such a sensible Bill—a highly technical and complex measure—and on the excellent way in which he explained it.

Mrs. Anne Campbell (Cambridge): I add my congratulations to those of other hon. Members who congratulated the hon. Member for Exeter (Sir J. Hannam) on introducing the Bill, and on his luck in being successful in the private Member's ballot. He is fortunate indeed. I have not yet had such good fortune myself, although I hope to before I eventually leave the House.

It is important to say that the Bill has the full support of Opposition Members, and I am very happy to stand and express that support. It is good, too, to hear of the Government's support, because I presume that it will mean that the Bill will have an easy passage through all its stages in the House. I look forward to the Bill completing its passage during this Session.

Labour Members are tough on crime and tough on the causes of crime. The Bill falls, perhaps, into the first category—of being tough on crime. It will have a deterrent effect, particularly on those who are habitual criminals. I hope that it will have a minor effect on the causes of crime too.

For many people, who perhaps are listening to the debate today or will read about it at a later stage, it is important that the Bill satisfies the laws of natural justice. Most people would feel it instinctively right that criminals should not be able to benefit from criminal procedures. I am not particularly familiar with the criminal law, but I was quite shocked to realise that there were such gaps in the law on the recovery of the results of crime.

I recall the case of the great train robbers. Although it occurred a long time ago, I remember the shock with which most people realised that, having served their sentence, the people involved were permitted to come out of prison and live a fairly luxurious life style on the proceeds of the crime that had been committed. I cannot emphasise enough how unfair that will appear to most of the people in this country. I am very happy that the Bill has come before the House, and am happy to give it my full support to ensure that those injustices are put right.

One of the rather sad features of our present criminal justice system is that only one in 50 crimes results in a successful prosecution. The Bill will not redress that or make it easier for the police to bring successful prosecutions. However, I hope that once criminal activity has been uncovered and the criminals have been brought to justice, they will be pursued not only at the time of the trial but later if proceeds from the crime are discovered, and that action will be taken to recover them.

My hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) referred to international crime and cross-border smuggling. I refer to a domestic criminal activity of which a relative of mine has recent experience. A gang of so-called antique dealers made a speciality of preying on the elderly and those living alone. I am glad to say that the criminals were eventually brought to justice, but most of the stolen property was not recovered. It is a source of great anguish to the elderly people involved, who felt defrauded of property that had probably been in their family for many years, that the criminals could serve a short prison sentence and then come out and live on the proceeds of the stolen property.

That nasty crime, which caused much anger among not only the elderly people involved but their relatives, was perpetrated by people calling on homes, possibly during the day when few other people were around, and persuading elderly people to part with family heirlooms and goods of which they may not have realised the intrinsic value. The disappearance of other goods was not noticed until the thieves had departed. As the Minister said, confiscation orders last year totalled only £265,000. I am sure that that group of so-called antique dealers is living off profits that greatly exceed that sum.

I am happy to support the Bill, and congratulate once again the hon. Member for Exeter on introducing it.

10.32 am

Mr. Denis MacShane (Rotherham): I join other hon. Members in congratulating the hon. Member for Exeter (Sir J. Hannam) on what may be his swan-song measure in the House. It is a fitting end to a noble and long career, which will end—I hope that he will begin a well-earned retirement as soon as possible—by putting on the statute book a measure that will act as both a retribution for and a deterrent to crime.

I am delighted that the Government support the Bill and hope that it will send a message to criminals that they should have some regard for the fact that, even if they are caught, condemned and spend time in prison, they will in no way benefit from the crime.

I draw attention to a small caveat: the need to protect criminals' families. The sins and crimes of a father or mother should not be visited upon their children. I assume that some consideration will be given in Committee to ensuring that criminals' families are not deprived of a roof over their heads in order to punish the person who may have bought the house with the proceeds of crime.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) said, although the Bill is tough on crime and criminals, Labour Members would prefer the Government, in their remaining months in office, to introduce measures that are tough on the causes of crime. In my constituency of Rotherham in South Yorkshire, since 1979 home burglaries have increased by 483 per cent.; other burglaries have increased by 228 per cent.; motor vehicle thefts have risen by 242 per cent.; and other thefts and handling have increased by 335 per cent.

It is wholly appropriate that the Bill is before the House because hon. Members on both sides have a duty to try to ease the sense of the majority of citizens that they live in a society in which crime pays. As my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge pointed out, criminals are often not caught or, if they are apprehended, only one in 50 cases results in prosecution.

The Bill may serve as an important deterrent in the growing area of white collar crime. A substantial increase has taken place in what one might call "big money" criminality in new areas such as computers and automatic money transfers, which can take place with great ease thanks to there being no exchange controls. My hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) should note that, if we want to control criminality in Europe, it should be done not by stepping up border checks or putting road blocks between Switzerland and Europe, which would not solve the problem, but by greater supervision, disclosure and policing of the flow of money between, say, French and Swiss banks and between various gentlemen in this country and trusts in Anstalten in Liechtenstein and Switzerland.

I congratulate The Guardian on successfully resisting a disgraceful gagging writ by Ms Karen Morgan Thomas, who was involved in share dealing in Anglia Television. I shall not go into the case, because Madam Speaker gave a ruling last week when my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) raised the clear indications of criminal dealings in the buying of Anglia Television shares.

Even the new chairman of the stock exchange, Mr. John Kemp-Welch, is reported as saying that he is extremely concerned about our criminal prosecution system's inability to deal with white collar crime, particularly involving share dealings. I hope that the Bill will give a message to gentlemen of the City that, despite the culture of sleaze and corruption—a culture in which the bacillus of crime has developed so strongly in recent years—the House is now taking this issue seriously, even if it is through a private Member's Bill on a Friday morning.

It would be far better to have measures aimed at prevention rather than prosecution, as discouragement is far better than punishment. None the less, if the Bill results in the message going out through the media, the implied threat will be that, however much money is made and however well it is hidden, crime will not pay, even after a period of imprisonment.

We need far more powerful mechanisms of disclosure. I greatly regret that the Department of Trade and Industry is still not fully publishing all the details of the reports sent to it on insider share dealing. Such action would be a preventive measure—the threat of disclosure may be a greater deterrent even than the stepped-up retribution in the Bill.

I join all hon. Members in welcoming the Bill. An unpleasant court case is taking place in Sheffield Crown court involving a Rotherham company. Many investors lost their money and many people lost jobs. The case involved one of the business expansion schemes scams of the 1980s. If the Bill had been on the statute book, the gentleman involved in that case might have thought twice before setting up a scheme that robbed honest investors and cost many of my constituents their jobs. Once that case is over, I may return to the House with the subject, as it involves a deputy chairman of the Conservative party.

Today, I simply wish to congratulate the hon. Member for Exeter, to record my support for the Bill and to wish it a speedy passage through its remaining stages in this and the other House.

Mr. Oliver Heald (Hertfordshire, North): I join other hon. Members in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Sir J. Hannam) on introducing the Bill, which will provide important strengthening and tightening of the law on confiscation.

Those of us who, in 1993, served on the Committee that considered the Criminal Justice Bill, which strengthened the law in respect of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986, felt that the law, as it stood under the Criminal Justice Act 1988, also required review. I know that the Home Office working party has worked extremely hard to produce conclusions. The evidence it heard from the Association of Chief Police Officers, the national crime intelligence service and Customs included strong arguments for a move in that direction. I am pleased that my hon. Friend has been able to introduce an excellent measure that will strengthen the courts' hand when dealing with people who create a life style from crime.

I do not intend to go into the Bill's details, but I am glad to have had this opportunity to give my support to my hon. Friend for his pioneering criminal legislation, which runs with the current of present thinking in the courts and, I believe, among hon. Members and lawyers.

10.42 am

Mrs. Barbara Roche (Hornsey and Wood Green): I congratulate the hon. Member for Exeter (Sir J. Hannam) on winning his place in the ballot and all those hon. Members who have supported the Bill, including my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell), who spoke so well today, and my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport—

Mr. MacShane: Rotherham.

Mrs. Roche: I wish to congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Ms Coffey), who is a sponsor of the Bill. I shall deal with the excellent contribution of my hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) in a little while. Another sponsor of the Bill is the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe). I have to mention him because he is my parliamentary pair, and therefore an extremely important person in my parliamentary life.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Exeter, not only on his success in the ballot, but on the eloquent way in which he presented the Bill which, as the Minister of State said, is a technical Bill. I firmly believe that the Bill, which is long overdue, will make a tremendous contribution to our criminal justice system—to the courts and the police—in combating crime.

There have been a number of excellent contributions to the debate. The hon. Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) made an important point about the nature of organised crime. The theme of organised crime was touched on in the interesting and wide-ranging speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) and in the remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham.

Until recently, I had the great honour to be a member of the Select Committee on Home Affairs. That Select Committee is undertaking an investigation into organised crime, which is no easy subject as it is involved and complicated. A great deal of evidence has been submitted to the Committee. There is no doubt that all hon. Members must take organised crime seriously. Some aspects of it have great ramifications—it is sophisticated, it is organised internationally and it has an effect on the everyday lives of men and women.

Crime is an extremely debilitating feature of our society. It is right that burglars, robbers, fraudsters and other criminals should not profit from their crimes any more than those who traffic in drugs. In London and in my constituency, the levels of home burglary are significantly higher than elsewhere in England and Wales. Victims have to pay three times: through the loss of their property; through the size of their insurance premiums—they are proportionately worse off because of last October's new 3 per cent. tax on home and car insurance—and through their taxes, which are used to fund the huge cost of the criminal justice system.

Businesses are also hard hit by crime. The latest quarterly report of the Forum of Private Business reported that more than 43 per cent. of the businesses that it surveyed in London described crime as a significant burden, leading to serious implications for the numbers of people employed by small businesses.

There is no reason why burglars, those who rob and commit fraud should be treated differently from those who engage in the dreadful traffic in drugs. There is no reason why they should be able to serve short prison terms—costing the taxpayer more than £400 a week, according to the answer to a parliamentary question tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) last November—then come out of prison and live on the proceeds of their ill-gotten gains. Some of them even use the proceeds to fund future criminal activities.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge made a pertinent point when she said that the public were very shocked at the thought of people serving relatively short prison sentences, coming out of prison and leading luxurious life styles. There is a sense of revulsion at that, and my hon. Friend spoke for the whole House. There is no reason why a burglar should be able to avoid confiscation if the proceeds of his night's criminal activities amount to £9,999. That is why I so welcome the relevant provision in the Bill.

Various big criminal cases have been discussed this morning. We all know the sort of criminals that we are talking about. The popular television series "Birds of a Feather" almost celebrates the life style of the criminal with a luxurious home. Of course, I make no reference to the constituency of the Minister for Transport in London, the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris), who is sitting on the Treasury Bench. I am sure that the inhabitants of Chigwell in his lovely constituency in the fine county of Essex are law-abiding. That is certainly a part of the world in which the Labour party expects to do extremely well in the next general election, following the results of the last local government elections.

On a serious note, it is correct that the legislation is aimed at those criminals who are popularly depicted. Knowing that Parliament takes the issue seriously will have great resonance for members of the public.

Part VI of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 is not working as well as it should. The answers which were given yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) show that only 13 confiscation orders were made under part VI in 1993-94, realising a mere £265,000. Orders made in the same period under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1983 realised more than £5 million. There is a clear discrepancy between the two figures and Parliament must rectify that anomaly. That is why I welcome the Bill on behalf of the Opposition Front Bench.

I hope that the Minister will intervene again to explain why the Government have taken so long to come to their conclusions and why the provisions in the legislation did not form part of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994.

Reference has already been made to the fact that the Bill will be warmly welcomed by the police, who have said that the lack of investigative powers in the 1988 Act has resulted in that Act having little effect in preventing criminals from benefiting from the proceeds of their crimes. In November 1992, the Home Office working group on confiscation pointed out that the number of confiscation orders made under the Criminal Justice Act was "disappointingly low". It advised:

"the practical advantages of harmonising the provisions [of the Criminal Justice and Drug Trafficking Offences Act] are clear . . . legislation should be strengthened and clarified".

It is hard to believe that consultation on the working group's proposals has taken more than two years. Perhaps the Minister can explain why the proposals have taken so long to reach this stage.

I would be grateful if the Minister could also assure the House that the proceeds of confiscation will be recycled to fund crime prevention. My hon. Friends referred to the Labour party's policy of being tough on crime and on the causes of crime. This legislation is tough on crime, but we also need to be tough on its causes. Crime prevention is at the heart of that debate. Britain spends a miserly 0.2 per cent. of its criminal justice budget on crime prevention. That is nowhere near the United Nations short-term target of 1 per cent. or its long-term target of 10 per cent. It would constitute some progress if the Minister could assure us that recycling the proceeds of crime might improve our dismal record in some small way.

I welcome the Bill on behalf of the Labour party, because it goes to the root of the problems in our criminal justice system. I know that many police officers feel frustrated that, after long and painstaking investigations, criminal sentences are often inadequate. They also feel that, owing to the nature of the criminal justice process, they have not managed to halt the careers of life-style criminals and stop their activities once and for all.

If the Government are serious about empowering the police and dealing with the proceeds of crime, I urge the Minister to recall the amendment that I tabled to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill—which has now been enacted—which would have allowed the police to apply to the courts to use in their fight against crime the high-tech and expensive computer equipment seized from computer pornographers. The amendment was backed by the police and by the all-party Home Affairs Select Committee, of which I was then a member. It recommended last February that the Government should introduce "appropriate amendments to the law to allow the police to redirect confiscated equipment against the pornographers".

In a letter to me dated 21 February 1994, the Minister stated that he had "a degree of sympathy" with the new clause and that, if the power were "deemed necessary", it could be enforced by statutory instrument. However, that has not happened. Perhaps the Minister will explain why that measure—which Detective Inspector Bob McLachlan of Scotland Yard's obscene publications branch said would "greatly help in our fight against these appalling crimes"—has not been implemented.

The Home Affairs Select Committee has published its evidence on organised crime and it makes extremely interesting, if worrying, reading. It presents a picture of organised crime in this country and its international links. The national criminal intelligence service, the police unit which is responsible for gathering intelligence information on organised crime, presented a great deal of evidence to the Committee. In examining the background to the Bill, we must look at organised crime.

Ben Jonson once said:

"As crimes do grow, justice should rouse itself".

This Bill is about justice; it is about depriving offenders of what is not rightfully theirs and, for that reason, it has the Labour party's whole-hearted support.

It is in everyone's interest that so-called "life-style criminals" be forced to pay back any money which they have gained illegally. If the measures in the Bill act as a deterrent it may make a small difference to the huge amount of criminal activity, which has more than doubled since 1979 and which blights the lives of too many of our citizens.

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): I apologise to you, Madam Deputy Speaker, and to the House for not being present for the whole of the debate. Nowadays, television monitors relay the proceedings of the House live to Members' rooms and, while doing other work, I have attempted to follow the debate very closely.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Exeter (Sir J. Hannam) on his luck in the draw and on introducing the Bill. Initially, I was somewhat disappointed that, in view of his background as joint chair of the all-party disablement group, he did not decide to pick up the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill which he sponsored last year. However, I realise that he now has a different view about tactics in connection with that measure, so I have picked it up, and we shall consider it next week.

This proposal enjoys the support of both the Government and the Opposition. Parliament does not meet very frequently and it is not overrun with business at the moment, so I think that the Government could have taken the opportunity to introduce their own measure. However, that does not detract from the significance and importance of the proposal or from the fact that the hon. Gentleman has picked it up and run with it.

The deterrent theory espoused by the Bill—which is one that I would not normally adhere to closely—seems to have some relevance in this matter. If criminals believe that, in the end, they will not benefit from the proceeds of their crimes—if there is a change in criminal culture—the Bill will add a deterrent factor. Generally, I advocate—as does my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche)—prevention and higher capture rates as the best forms of deterrent. I acknowledge that there is much ill will in society towards easy sentences. That view is justifiable and not a matter of retribution. Criminals should suffer for their activities, not benefit from the proceeds.

Sometimes, the true value of stolen property is not easy to determine. There may be cases when the figure is exaggerated by the victims for insurance purposes. In such instances, there may be an injustice done, because the proceeds of a crime were said to be greater than they were. The fact that a criminal is the victim of such an injustice is not a ground for ignoring it. The law must be seen to be reasonable and fair. Perhaps the Bill's promoter will clarify that matter.

11.1 am

Sir John Hannam: I am grateful to all hon. Members who spoke in support of the Bill—particularly my hon. Friend the Minister and the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche). I listened with care to the points made, and I am left in no doubt that my Bill is of considerable importance to the House. In Committee, we will have ample opportunity to explore the various questions that hon. Members raised—including that of the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes), which is well covered by the Bill's provisions for re-examination of any assumption made by the court when it decides confiscation amounts. I again thank hon. Members for their support, and I look forward to discussing my Bill further in Committee.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time, and committed to a Standing Committee, pursuant to Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills).

Road Traffic (New Drivers) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

11.2 am

Dr. Michael Clark (Rochford): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

Unlike my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Sir J. Hannam), who has presented three Bills during his time in the House, this is my first in nearly 12 years. Whereas my hon. Friend hoped that he would be third time lucky, I hope to be first time lucky. The subject of my Bill is of importance and concern—the behaviour of newly qualified drivers, most of whom are young. At the stage in their driving careers when they are inexperienced, it is all important that they drive safely and pay attention to traffic regulations and the Highway Code. Even young drivers whose behaviour is blameless will be more at risk of accidents than the experienced driver, simply because situations develop that they have not anticipated or do not know how to handle.

That risk increases greatly if young drivers overestimate their skills, try to impress their passengers or flout the law. My Bill is primarily aimed at that irresponsible element. They are a minority, but the trouble that they cause is disproportionate to their numbers. The Bill is targeted. It does not propose new laws and regulations for all drivers but for a small group of new, principally young drivers who cause a disproportionate number of accidents.

That problem causes concern in my constituency and elsewhere in Essex. My hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London represents an Essex constituency, and I am delighted that he is in his place to contribute to the debate. Two years ago, my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) introduced a ten-minute Bill on newly qualified drivers. Although it was different from mine in detail, it also would have made progress towards improving the driving performance of newly qualified young drivers. Unfortunately, my hon. Friend's Bill did not make progress, but I hope that mine will enjoy better luck. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford for being present to support my Bill.

The problem that I described exists throughout Britain, not just in Essex. Essex man may reign in Essex, but some of his mentality reigns elsewhere in the country. We are increasingly a nation of car drivers and owners. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency issues about 1 million new provisional driving licences every year, which means that that number of new learner drivers or motor cyclists start using our roads. Most of them will eventually pass a driving test and become qualified. About half begin learning at 17, and a quarter of those who pass the driving test do so before their 18th birthday. Many more do so by the age of 21.

Those can be dangerous years for other road users as well as for the young driver. Ten per cent. of all driving licences are held by people under 21, yet they are involved in 25 per cent. of fatal accidents producing 1,000 deaths each year. The figures might be even worse if they drove long distances, as older drivers do. Even driving short distances, young drivers have a disproportionate effect on road accidents and fatalities. Mile for mile, a young man of 17 is seven times more likely to have an accident than a middle-aged man.

In most cases, that is not because young drivers have not learnt basic driving skills. After all, they passed the driving test. However, too often they choose not to apply those skills, thinking that they have become expert drivers overnight. They want the world to know how well they can drive, and to prove to themselves and to their friends how fast they can accelerate, how ably they can corner and how suddenly they can brake—and they may cut up other motorists to prove that to themselves. However, they lack the ability to read the road ahead, anticipate hazards and know when to react—in other words, experience. They may also lack tolerance towards and consideration for other road users whose reactions are slower—so in that sense they lack maturity.

Even among young inexperienced motorists, there is a difference between the accident risk of a responsible driver and a tearaway. The Transport Research Laboratory made a detailed examination of new drivers and found that those who commit offences in the first year after passing their test are more than twice as likely to be involved in accidents as drivers who do not. They remain twice as likely to have accidents even in their second and third years. So there is a clear link between offences and the risk of an accident.

That is why it makes sense to target the offenders and make them pay for extra lessons, take another test, and perhaps come in for a great deal of humiliation as they have to put on their L-plates once more. It is better to do that—to aim the Bill at these drivers—than to make the driving test harder and more lengthy and expensive for everyone.

This Bill is not aimed just at young drivers: it is aimed at all new drivers. All young drivers are new drivers, but not all new drivers are young drivers. So why should we include the older new drivers at all? At any age, inexperienced drivers are at greater risk than experienced ones. Both youth and inexperience are associated with greater risk.

What is more, people can do something about their lack of experience—they can take advanced training, for instance—but there is nothing they can do about their age apart from wait. If the Bill applied only to young drivers, where would the cut-off point be—21, 25 or older? There seems no consensus about that, so it is better to make the Bill comprehensive and apply it to new drivers in general, not young drivers in particular.

My Bill will therefore apply to every new driver for the first two years after he or she passes the test for the first time; but only those who commit offences will be any the worse off. On the whole, they will be younger drivers, and predominantly male.

Clause 1 defines the scope of the Bill. Anyone learning to drive or ride a motor cycle or moped starts with a provisional licence and L-plates. As soon as these drivers pass their tests, in a car or on a two-wheeler, they are entitled to the full licence for that class of vehicle. From that point on they are deemed to be qualified drivers. The two-year probationary period mentioned in the Bill starts from the moment people become qualified drivers. They may go on to pass a test in some other class of vehicle, but that does not make them probationers all over again. It is only on the first occasion that this clause will bite.

The Bill applies to holders of British licences who pass their tests in Great Britain, or who got their Great Britain licences as a result of tests passed in certain other places outside the GB mainland—countries with which we have reciprocal arrangements. When the date of passing the test outside Britain is known, as it usually will be in such cases, it is recorded on the British licence and thus defines the starting point of the probationary period.

Clause 2 contains the meat of the Bill. Its effect is that when a driver in the probationary period gets six or more penalty points on his licence, either by a court conviction or by paying a fixed penalty, the licence must be surrendered and sent to the Secretary of State—in practice, the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency—to be revoked. The first two subsections cover convictions by a court and the rest cover fixed penalties.

Clause 3 follows on logically. When the Secretary of State receives a licence, he must serve notice on the holder that it is revoked. The person can no longer drive as a fully fledged driver but may apply for a provisional licence and start again as a learner. So the offending person does not lose all ability to drive and does not have his licence completely revoked. He has to revert to being a provisional licence holder and can continue to drive, with L-plates, being accompanied. He must then in due course take the test once more.

Clause 4 goes on to the next stage. Now that a person is a learner again, he or she is not eligible for a full licence until the test has been passed. But to avoid unnecessary harshness, this clause does not require people who had passed more than one class of test before the revocation to pass them all again. Passing just one of them will get back all the lost entitlements. The clause also does not prevent such people from learning to drive a new type of vehicle and passing the test in that—but doing the latter will not win back the old entitlements as well.

Clause 5 deals with special cases when the person affected by the revocation appeals against the conviction that caused it. Provided that the Secretary of State is notified of this, he must issue a temporary licence while the appeal is pending. If the appeal is successful enough to remove the penalty points or to reduce them to fewer than six, the Secretary of State must grant a permanent licence replacing the one that was taken away. Some of the procedural details are to be in regulations.

Clause 6 and schedule 1 cover essentially the same ground as clauses 2 to 5, but apply to the special case of a person who has passed the test but not yet handed in the pass certificate and provisional licence to get a full licence. Current legislation allows a two-year period in which pass certificates and provisional licences can be exchanged for a full licence. Most people exchange them straight away, but there are a few who choose not to or who forget to. The schedule is necessary to close a loophole which might allow the retesting procedure to be evaded.

Clause 7 has two purposes. First, paragraph (a) prevents a person from being doubly penalised if a court uses its powers to order a retest. The court order takes precedence over anything in this Bill, and once it has been made the person is no longer regarded as being in the probationary period. Often, the re-test ordered by the court will be a double-length test, whereas the test required by the Bill is always of the usual length.

Secondly, paragraphs (b) and (c) prevent a person from being caught in a continual round of retesting, which would be too harsh. Once the person has passed a test, he is no longer subject to the provisions of the Bill. It must be remembered, however, that passing the test and getting back the full licence do not wipe off the six penalty points that caused the retesting in the first place. Those six points are still there, and if the driver gets another six before they are spent, making 12 in all, the court will disqualify him for six months under the existing totting-up procedures and laws.

The other clauses and schedule 2 are supplementary, and I shall not go into detail about them.

I hope that the House will agree that these are tough but fair provisions. They will not make it any harder to qualify as a driver in the first place, but they will make it harder for people to keep their licences if they misbehave. They will therefore act as a powerful deterrent for drivers who are tempted to break the law or who drive without consideration for others.

Research suggests that drivers are more deterred by the threat of losing their licences than they are by fines. At the moment, they need not worry too much until they get close to 12 penalty points, which can mean up to four speeding offences. But this scheme will bite at six points. It will not stop them driving altogether, but it will force them back into the classroom, to the world of L-plates and an experienced driver by their side. There will also be considerable humiliation.

The scheme will also provide an incentive to take further lessons and will give drivers the opportunity to reconsider what it really means to be a responsible adult driver.

I am pleased to have been able to obtain backers for the Bill both from my party and from the Opposition. I am also pleased to have the unstinting support of the Automobile Association and the Royal Automobile Club. I am pleased, too, to have the support of the former roads Minister, my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key). I know that he played a major part in putting the subject on the political agenda, and I am grateful for his backing and support.

I hope that I can count on support from all parties to bring this worthy measure to the statute book.

11.20 am

Mr. Mike O'Brien (Warwickshire, North): First, I declare my interest as a parliamentary adviser to the Police Federation. There is considerable concern among police officers about their difficult encounters with young drivers, who often drive fast cars at high speed. It is a problem that needs to be dealt with, and the Bill seeks to do so. Therefore, I give a warm welcome to the Bill. It is necessary and it will do considerable good in resolving many difficulties.

We know that 1,000 people die each year in accidents involving young drivers. They hold only 10 per cent. of driving licences, but they are involved in 20 per cent. of all accidents. New drivers who are convicted of motoring offences are twice as likely to be involved in accidents as drivers who do not break motoring laws.

Over the past two decades there has been a change in public attitudes towards drink-driving. Young men in particular used to regard it as a way of proving their masculinity. They were willing to drive after having consumed far too much alcohol. Fortunately, social attitudes have changed, especially among young people.

Before I came to this place I was a lawyer at the criminal Bar. It is my experience that many of those who have been convicted of drink-driving in recent years have been older people. When they were young it was perhaps acceptable to drink and drive. I found that young people were less and less involved in that behaviour as a result of changed social attitudes and pressures.

The Bill will start the process of changing the social attitudes—perhaps not of the present generation—of the generation to come towards driving cars, especially fast cars. There have been problems on several housing estates in my constituency, where young people drive at high speed. Some young people tend to drive their cars—on occasion, stolen cars—at high speed across traffic-calming road humps. This often happens at night. The humps normally serve a good purpose and it is regrettable that the driving that I have described is exactly the opposite of the objective of the humps. Such driving needs to be clamped down upon with vigour.

Apart from dealing with those who are committing motoring offences by way of penalties and penalty points, we need to bring about a change in social attitudes. The law must take the lead. The hon. Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) has introduced a Bill that shows that we in this place take road traffic matters extremely seriously and that we are prepared to support the police in recognising the importance of taking action and dealing with the problem. The Bill shows that we are ready to start the process of changing attitudes.

Young drivers are often less safe than others, especially if they are inexperienced. They should know that if they start to accumulate penalty points by speeding, for example, and arrive at six, they will not have the facility of their "wheels" and all the advantage that they provide, especially at a young age. They should know that they may have to face a second test.

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): My hon. Friend is talking about young drivers. I accept that the Bill will apply mainly to those drivers, but it applies also to newly qualified drivers, who are not always young people. I accept, of course, that many of the problems with which the Bill seeks to deal involve all people and the accumulation of penalty points. There is a need for these measures.

Mr. O'Brien: That is entirely right. I agree with my hon. Friend that the Bill does not apply only to young people. When enacted, it will be much broader in its application. That can only be right.

As I have said, there has been a change in social attitudes in recent years towards drink-driving. I have no doubt that behind the Bill is a wish to change social attitudes towards fast or erratic driving. It may still be thought among the older generation that drivers can get away with breaking the law by occasional speeding. That is regrettable. The Bill is an attempt to deal with the problem. I suspect that it would be extremely difficult to frame clauses to deal only with young drivers. There are advantages in having a Bill that is drafted to deal with all new and inexperienced drivers, and I support it. I offer a warm welcome to the Bill. I hope that it will be given a Second Reading with support from hon. Members on both sides of the House.

Mr. David Chidgey (Eastleigh): I, too, welcome the Bill. It is an important step forward in improving driver safety. That being said, I would like measures to come before us which go further towards improving road safety. The Bill is important, but it is only one step in that direction.

We must consider and try to deal with the behavioural characteristics of the young male driver if we are to achieve general improvements in driver safety. I accept, of course, that the Bill covers all new drivers of both sexes, whether they are young, in their middle years, or elderly. I shall concentrate, however, on the young male driver, who often poses a problem by engaging in hazardous driving.

It is worth reflecting that most criminal offences are committed by young males. When they reach 25 years of age, most of those young offenders cease to offend. It is important to realise that many of the offences that are committed by males in that age group are motoring offences. Young male offenders are prepared to drive recklessly without insurance and without a licence. That being so, we must question whether the effectiveness of the Bill will be sufficient to curb the committing of motoring offences by such people. Will young male drivers who are prepared to drive while uninsured and without a full licence be sufficiently deterred by the proposal to reduce the number of penalty points leading to disqualification to six?

Recent studies have shown that about 15 per cent. of all male drivers have driven illegally before they have gained even a provisional licence. It is interesting that that is twice the percentage of women who have done that.

I welcome the Bill's proposals, especially the two-year probation period for new drivers and the revocation of licences if six or more penalty points are accumulated during the probationary period. I welcome also the requirement that there must be a further test before a licence is reinstated. These and other measures are steps in the right direction but are only a start towards improving driver safety. They must be considered as only part of a more general package to improve driver safety, especially among young males. If we are to deal with that specific problem, we need to look more closely at the life style factors of that group, as the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) suggested.

We must examine why some 35 per cent. of young male drivers were categorised as unsafe in a study undertaken in 1991 by the university of Southampton near Eastleigh. The work undertaken by the department of psychology is significant in this regard. Its earlier studies found that there were differences in driver behaviour and performance within the 17 to 25-year-old age group. As the hon. Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) will know, its more recent work explored the relevance of life-style factors to the differences in driving behaviour.

We must realise that there are indeed different attitudes among male drivers and we cannot assume that all young male drivers should all be labelled as inherently unsafe. Driving behaviour characteristics are far more complex than that. On average, the young male drivers studied by Southampton university rated their driving skills and driving safety as considerably above the average for their own age group. Unsafe drivers rated their driving as more skilled than safe, whereas safe drivers rated their driving as more safe than skilled. The important point is that unsafe drivers tend to test their ability and their car's capacity to a much greater extent than safe drivers, but their so-called skill is of course illusory, as unsafe drivers have a high accident involvement.

Many young drivers fail to recognise how close they have been to having an accident. Furthermore, they seldom recognise that a near miss is feedback to the effect that they are driving badly—it is much easier for drivers to blame their surroundings and other drivers for a near miss. The most obvious feedback in respect of poor driving is involvement in an accident, but, even after an accident, it is easy to find causes other than poor driving.

Young male drivers seem to suffer from the delusion that accidents are chance events and occur at random, but that is not so; poor driving is a significant characteristic of and contributor to accidents. Driving should not be viewed as merely a physical skill. It is all too clear that unsafe drivers are unaware of the risks that they take and, even if they are aware of the risks that they take, because they believe that they are highly skilled they assume that they will not have an accident.

The proposals to improve the skills of young drivers and to impose stiffer penalties on those found guilty of poor or illegal driving are not in themselves sufficient to tackle what I regard as the root of the problem. Pre-licence training in road safety must incorporate things other than the learning of driving skills. The Minister will be aware that the response to the Government's new driver safety consultation paper, which was issued just over a year ago, showed that there was wide support for the retesting of offenders as proposed in the Bill, but the consultation also revealed overwhelming support for a separate mandatory theory test to fulfil the second EC driving licence directive.

I am sure that we are all familiar with the parliamentary Advisory Council on Transport Safety which welcomed the Bill but said that it should be seen alongside other measures to improve the skills of young drivers. In addition to a stick—the removal of a driving licence—we need a carrot, or better training to increase awareness of the difficulties of driving. Like the advisory council, I look forward to hearing proposals from the Department of Transport for the compulsory test involving an element of hazard perception. We could thus ensure that young and new drivers were able to drive competently and less dangerously.

Post-test driver training has been the subject of strong interest by the insurance industry, and the development of road safety and education programmes for the 16-year-olds and above has been supported by colleges and other establishments.

At the time of the consultation exercise the Minister said that a mandatory theory test would be in place by 1 July 1996 and that the Department was working with the private and voluntary sectors to establish post-test driver training schemes and road safety education programmes. I would welcome confirmation that the Bill is but one part of a comprehensive package to be introduced within the time scale previously set out.

The Liberal Democrats welcome and enthusiastically support the Bill, but we should like an assurance that it is a first step in a package of measures to improve driver safety.

11.35 am

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): I am sure that nothing could be more harrowing than the anguish of a young mother who has lost her child through the foolishness of an inexperienced driver. The driver will be haunted for the rest of his life by the memory that he was responsible for the death of a child and that it could have been avoided. In some instances, the driver does not have the opportunity to look back on the incident, because he too has been killed by his actions. Therefore, anything that we can do to make the roads safer must be worth while. For that reason, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) on promoting this excellent Bill, the provisions of which I strongly support.

It is often observed that if the number of people killed on the roads were killed in any other way there would be a national scandal. What if a series of jumbo jets crashed every year, leading to the equivalent number of deaths, or a catastrophe occurred regularly in industry? If rail accident deaths reached anything near the number of road deaths, there would be an outcry. Nevertheless, we must take satisfaction from the fact that the number of deaths on the roads is falling, and markedly so. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London and his team on their road safety work, which has helped to achieve that fall.

The number of people killed on the roads has declined steadily, from around 5,000 in 1990 to 3,814 in 1993. The control of drinking and driving has clearly been a major contributory factor and I support any measure that strengthens the law in that respect. Of those road accidents, about 1,000 deaths—20 per cent.—are the responsibility of young drivers. Statistics show that youth and inexperience are major factors in accidents, so it is excellent that the Bill is targeted specifically at that group.

In my borough of Bromley, 205 drivers in the 17-to-24 age group were injured in 1994, bearing out statistics showing that group to be especially vulnerable, usually because of their own inexperience. New drivers are twice as likely to break the law but it is not only the statistics but our personal experience that illustrate the risk attached to young and inexperienced drivers, especially young and inexperienced male drivers.

I remember when I first started driving people in my age group were immediately enthused with their new-found freedom and it was only a matter days after taking off the L-plates that they began to drive fast and tried to acquire more powerful cars. There will probably always be a macho image attached to driving but it must be restrained by the law. I can think of no better way in which to restrain that macho urge than the deterrent of the Bill. The most effective means of deterring that 17-to-24 age group from transgressing is to threaten to remove what they regard as most precious: the new-found right to drive without having to display L-plates. Having to display L-plates and to pass another test would be quite humiliating for that age group.

The hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) is right to suggest that the Bill should be part of an overall package of policy. I support what he said about "Pass Plus", an excellent post-test driving training scheme that will shortly come into force. To go with the stick in the Bill, that scheme will introduce a carrot. The introduction and development of theoretical driving tests would add to the beneficial pressure on the target age group.

The teaching of driving skills at school plays an important part in encouraging and developing the right approach and attitude before would-be drivers get behind the wheel. Indeed, my borough of Bromley, which may be the only London borough that is taking such major strides in this area, runs an innovative pre-driver programme in secondary schools, which has involved more than 800 pupils so far. It is free and it runs for 11 weeks.

It is co-run by the Intercounty driving school, which provides free cars, and pupils have up to three 20-minute sessions behind the wheel as well as supportive work in the classroom aimed at preparing young drivers, influencing their attitudes, calming them down and getting them used to the control and safety needed on roads, rather than allowing the development of the idea that driving is simply a matter of getting behind the wheel.

The programme has already produced excellent results and I hope that it is developed further not only in Bromley but across the country. I know that Scott Pickering, the road safety export in the borough, who has played a leading role in pioneering the project, would support a Bill aimed at people whom he knows are vulnerable and need protecting from themselves. For all those reasons, I strongly support the Bill and I am glad that it is before the House. For the sake of not only the target group but all potential victims on the roads who we may prevent from becoming victims, I wish the Bill speedy progress to the statute book.

11.42 am

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): I may be no expert on this Bill—I am probably one of the few hon. Members who does not have a car and cannot drive—but I am interested in it because if I decided to try to qualify to drive, I would be subject to its provisions. Therefore, I have a self-interest as well as a wider interest in the Bill.

My constituency is a busy commuter belt between Chesterfield and Sheffield. Regularly each morning, we take our standard spending assessment over the border of Derbyshire into Yorkshire and Sheffield for their benefit. We encounter quite serious transport problems, because the roads are such that a serious accident considerably hinders people getting to work and back.

I always seem to be writing letters to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency about massive problems that people have with their licences. Presumably, the Bill may place further pressure on the DVLA as people lose their licences or have to take another test.

As the Bill is founded on sense and should progress, I want to make a procedural point. I believe that I am correct in saying that, although the Bill was introduced by hon. Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark), it was initiated by the Government. When I promoted a private Member's Bill in the 1992-93 Session, I was contacted by the Minister to see if I would bring it forward through the Government like other hon. Members. Debating the Proceeds of Crime Bill earlier revealed that acceptable legislation, which the Government have in mind, is being introduced as private Members' Bills. Private Members' Bills should address the concerns of hon. Members, who may then seek the Government's support and help with technical drafting.

My private Member's Bill, the Representation of the People (Amendment) Bill, attempted to extend the franchise and provide access to polling stations for the disabled. I met the Minister of the Department concerned and if he had agreed to support my Bill, I would have been very happy indeed for a great deal of the work to be taken on by the Government and developed to ensure that its wording was parliamentary and procedurally acceptable.

Hon. Members are allowed £200 for legal assistance with a private Member's Bill; it would be worth £1,400 today if it had been adjusted since it was introduced. One cannot get any serious legal advice on the drafting of a Bill for £200. One can only, therefore—

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Gentleman, but I must remind him that we are debating the Second Reading of a particular Bill and he is dealing with matters not germane to it. There are plenty of other opportunities for the hon. Member to raise the general issues to which he is addressing his remarks.

Mr. Barnes: I accept your ruling, Madam Deputy Speaker. I was about to conclude in any case. I was trying to make a point that seemed relevant to this Bill as well as many other private Members' Bills.

I support the Bill and I do not wish to speak at length, but I want to point out that there are other methods by which such Bills, welcome as they are, could progress. The House does not sit often enough in Government time to debate such matters. The Bill could have progressed differently.

The Minister for Transport in London (Mr. Steve Norris): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) on introducing the Bill. For the record, the House should be told that, far from the implications of the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) that my hon. Friend has picked the Bill up at the urging of the Department of Transport, if there is one Member of the House who is not a poodle of the Department of Transport, it is my hon. Friend, whose exertions on behalf of his constituents about the A13 I feel on my back as I speak. I know from conversations with my hon. Friend that he has promoted the Bill because he has great interest in the subject. He has the full support of the Government and I strongly endorse all that he said about the Bill's importance.

I also agreed with the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey), who said that driving is not just a physical skill. That is exactly the point. Ironically, young drivers tend to be rather good at the physical skill of moving the metal around the road. Indeed, they are so good that they become over-confident, and that is what the Bill is aimed at. The hon. Gentleman was right to refer to the theory test directive.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) said in an excellent intervention, it is right that the Bill should be part of a package of measures. I will refer briefly to each of the elements to which my hon. Friend referred. I also endorse his remarks about the road safety officer in Bromley. He, like many other people in the London boroughs with whom I have a great deal of personal contact, is doing an excellent job.

As a result of that excellent work, there has been a 34 per cent. reduction in road deaths in this country. We should not lose sight of that; our record is excellent. Reducing road deaths by 34 per cent. since 1986 is an extraordinary success. That has been achieved despite the growth of traffic in the intervening period. That is an extraordinary performance. It is not a political achievement; it is the achievement of many people working nationally and locally and it involves many bodies, private companies, voluntary organisations and motoring organisations all working together.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham referred graphically, but very accurately, to the number of road deaths being equivalent to losing a jumbo jet every five weeks. There are still 80 deaths a week and that fact underpins everything that we do and it provides us all with the motivation to continue to find ways to eradicate that horrendous total.

Some people might think that the Bill is an unreasonably oppressive measure and that it is aimed at killing the joy of the young. They might think that it is unfair to impose this additional measure on the young. The underlying principle behind the Bill is straightforward. The principle says, "If you manage to accumulate six points, which will mean a minimum of two endorsable offences in the first two years after you have passed your test, the assumption is that you did not actually learn the lessons that you were supposed to have learnt in order to pass the test in the first place. Would you please go back and have another go and this time understand what you are being asked to qualify for?" That principle is not unreasonable.

None of us can put our hands on our hearts and say that we have not driven faster than the legal speed limit on a fairly regular basis because life is like that. The only exception in the Chamber to that rule is the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East. He follows a very important principle in this House which is never to let the arguments be bedevilled by the facts and always to ensure that one speaks on subjects about which one has not the slightest personal experience. He is a pastmaster of that art, and he demonstrated it again today.

Mr. Barnes: As a pedestrian, I have great experience of the matters that we are discussing today. I can barely cross the road in front of my house. I am very concerned that people should drive safely. If new drivers are not driving safely, the measures in the Bill should be applied to them. In addition, probably more people have cars in my constituency than in any other.

Mr. Norris: I am delighted that the hon. Gentleman supports the measure and I hope that we can bring its Second Reading to a fairly speedy conclusion.

I will not speak at length, because my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford clearly set out the need for the Bill and how it would work in practice. However, I want to add a piece of information that might not be known to many hon. Members, including those who take a particular interest in this work. A study was published today that follows on from the Transport Research Laboratory programme involving new drivers and a major research programme, which examined the reasons for new driver behaviour.

The study published today showed that 18 per cent. of drivers are involved in at least one accident in their first year after passing the test. However, 42 per cent. of drivers who received fixed penalty notices or a summons in their first year were involved in car accidents. The risk is more than doubled. I am afraid that that emphasises why the measure is necessary, and why I believe that it will do a great deal to reduce the hazard that young people cause on the roads. It is worth recalling the statistic advanced by my hon. Friend the Member for Rochford: that 10 per cent. of licence holders are under 21 and are responsible for 20 per cent. of accidents and 25 per cent. of fatalities. That is a very sad statistic.

Mr. Michael Fabricant (Mid-Staffordshire): Although this point is not included in the terms of the Bill, has my hon. Friend the Minister considered probationary licence plates?

Mr. Norris: We have considered probationary licence plates and the Northern Ireland Office has supervised the use of such plates. It produced results on the project only very recently, showing that probationary licence plates are popular in the community and that people support the idea. Sadly, the results also show that plates do not have a discernible effect on accident reduction. The principle is very attractive, but I am not minded to press forward with measures that cannot show—as I believe the Bill can—a demonstrable link with accidents.

The hon. Member for Eastleigh and my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham referred to the need for a package of measures. The post-test driver training scheme called "Pass Plus" will be launched by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on Monday. A substantial number of insurance companies are involved in the scheme and it will make a major contribution. It is, of course, training after the licence has been acquired, but it offers a genuine discount to the motorist for having bothered to take on the additional training and it will allow insurance companies to lower their premiums. There is gain for each of the parties involved. The greatest gainer is the person who is not now likely to be the victim of an accident.

We have also prepared an educational resource designed to make over-16s aware of their responsibilities when they drive a car. That is a very important part of the package. We intend to introduce the enlarged theory element by July 1996. We are working on the practical details of the package at the moment. I agree with the hon. Member for Eastleigh that it will be a useful addition and it might even allow us to test some of the skills that the existing driving test does not allow us to test.

Even in its present form, our driving test in Britain is among the most demanding in the world. We should not ignore the principle behind the Bill: that some newly qualified drivers do not maintain the high standards that they have learnt in preparing for and taking the test. The Bill will encourage safe and considerate driving and it will allow new drivers to build up the essential experience of traffic and road conditions and the skills of hazard perception that they need to make them safer drivers.

The deterrent effect of having to use L-plates again and to be accompanied by an experienced driver should be sufficient to prevent newly qualified drivers from behaving irresponsibly and foolishly. It should thus result in a reduction in road accidents and injuries to those drivers and to other road users.

My hon. Friend the Member for Rochford has done the nation a service by introducing his Bill. I congratulate him on the way in which he introduced it today and I am delighted that hon. Members on both sides of the House have seen its wisdom, and I wish it every success.

Mrs. Barbara Roche (Hornsey and Wood Green): I congratulate the hon. Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) on his success in the ballot and on introducing his Bill. The Bill will clearly have great importance for the public and it is supported by hon. Members on both sides of the House. It certainly has the very full support of those on the Opposition Front Bench.

We have had an interesting debate this morning. It is quite appropriate that my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) should take part in it. He follows in an honourable tradition of people who have made great contributions to transport issues but who have not been drivers. I am thinking, of course, of my own political heroine, Baroness Castle, who was a distinguished Secretary of State for Transport but who was a non-driver. She certainly made a considerable impact on driving and transport issues.

Mr. Barnes: I thank my hon. Friend for her kind comments. The Minister has great expertise in these matters. On this occasion it works, but on many occasions it is counter-productive.

Mrs. Roche: My hon. Friend makes a pertinent point.

The hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) made an interesting speech and drew a welcome contrast between male and female drivers. The machismo that is often shown by male drivers, who sometimes have poor regard for road safety and poor car control and display anti-social behaviour, is not shared by their female counterparts.

My hon. Friend the Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien) made an interesting point about the police view. There is no doubt that the police are concerned about accidents involving new drivers. It is good to have my hon. Friend's expertise as we consider the matter.

The hon. Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) made a graphic point about road fatalities and the tremendous grief that they cause. Although I welcome the reduced figures that the Minister recited, I feel that there are too many fatal accidents. One occurred in my constituency this week. When I speak to some of the families concerned, I see their grief at having a loved one—husband, wife, son or daughter—suddenly and tragically taken away. That will always stay with me. I am sure that all hon. Members have had the same experience. It is important to take the issue very seriously.

Southampton university has found that a significant minority of young drivers—about 35 per cent.—could be categorised as unsafe. As has been said, when we talk about driving, we talk not only about driving skills but about judgment, maturity and courtesy. We need much more common courtesy on our roads. It would have a tremendous impact not only on tragic fatalities but on day-to-day road incidents.

Although I warmly support the Bill, may I pose a couple of questions? The Bill does not take into account newly qualified drivers of heavy goods vehicles or public service vehicles. Will the hon. Member for Rochford clarify that point? Also, if newly qualified drivers of heavy goods vehicles or public service vehicles accrue six penalty points, will they automatically lose their licences? Obviously, that is a small part of our anxiety about newly qualified drivers, but it is valid to draw it to the hon. Gentleman's attention, and I shall be interested to hear his response.

The House will be aware of the great concern about road safety and drivers' conduct. In my constituency, there is a tremendous problem with drivers who, particularly early in the morning, think that they have a straight run and speed with complete disregard for members of the public. Last week, I took my six-year-old daughter to school. We were just about to cross at the zebra crossing, when, without any regard for pedestrians, a car sped by. That is a daily occurrence for many people, and we should be aware of it.

I welcome the Minister's honesty and candour in saying that not one of us can say that he or she has not regularly exceeded the reasonable speed limit—

Mr. Norris: The legal speed limit.

Mrs. Roche: The Minister says, "The legal speed limit." With the greatest respect, we should not encourage that attitude. Speed limits are to be obeyed, and we must do everything we can to encourage drivers to abide by them.

Mr. Norris: Of course, the only hon. Member who has never exceeded the speed limit is the hon. Lady. I am quite happy to put that on the record if that is what she would like me to do.

Mrs. Roche: I am grateful to the Minister. Although I hold a full driving licence, I am an extremely reluctant driver, as my husband will testify, and I therefore hardly drive at all. I am afraid I am one of those drivers with whom the Minister obviously becomes very irritated. I drive very slowly—far too slowly. I am grateful for the Minister's approval. I shall have great pleasure, this weekend, in passing on that approval to my family.

I cannot resist the temptation, with the Minister present, to raise a matter of great concern in London in relation to speeding, road safety, and newly qualified and existing drivers. I refer to red routes. The Minister will be aware of points that colleagues and I have made about the Government's accident figures on those routes, which have been shown to be inaccurate. On a serious point, he will be aware also about road fatalities. They cause us great concern.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Rochford on introducing the Bill. It has our support. I hope that the public, who have closely followed our proceedings, will know that the whole House is concerned about this important issue.

12.7 pm

Mr. Andrew Miller (Ellesmere Port and Neston): I apologise to the House for not being present earlier.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): Disgraceful.

Mr. Miller: The hon. Gentleman says that it was disgraceful. I was doing some work on road deaths—a matter to which I drew attention on Friday. I listened intently to this debate upstairs. A couple of weeks ago our road safety debate, regrettably, was poorly attended by hon. Members. This Bill neatly follows that debate.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Rochford (Dr. Clark) on bringing the Bill to the House. I sincerely hope that it is supported by all hon. Members. The way in which the Bill fits in with the discussions to which I referred is clear.

Young drivers who speed are dangerous, and the young are statistically among the group most likely to cause death on the roads. The issue of handling death on the roads is extremely tortuous. I am having detailed discussions with a number of people in the legal profession, such as the Law Commission, and I made arrangements to go to the Crown Prosecution Service to discuss the way in which the courts deal with such cases.

It is, of course, a process which takes place after the event, and the important thing about the approach adopted by the hon. Member for Rochford is that it is part of a process of deterrence of the crime of causing death on the roads. The jigsaw puzzle must be put together in that way, and the Bill is an important part of that.

In my discussions with eminent people in the legal profession, the thrust of the debate has been how on earth we can stop the crimes taking place in the first place. The hon. Member for Rochford has hit upon an important aspect of that. We know that the drink-driving laws changed attitudes, and there is an extraordinary difference in the attitudes of people in their 40s and 50s, and of young people, towards the drink-driving laws. It is not unusual to see a group of 18 to 20-year-olds, out for an enjoyable evening, deliberately making arrangements that one of them will not drink. The cult of having to have the macho six pints before one drives a car has gone. It is perfectly accepted that one person in a group, or a number of people, should have soft drinks or low-alcohol drinks.

That positive change followed a lead from the House. As my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) said, the lead given by Baroness Castle had an important impact. I hope that education will create a climate that will bring sense to some road users. As my hon. Friend said, some road users are totally oblivious to the rights of others. A measure such as this will help in that regard.

I urge the House to think that the Bill, while important, is not a panacea. It will not in itself stop the huge number of deaths which occur on the roads each year. Last year, 510 deaths were caused by drinking and driving. We must carry on working hard as a Parliament to find the right set of rules and regulations which will bring that figure down to zero.

The police and the motoring organisations welcome the Bill which, I am sure, will receive widespread support. There is a recognition of the stark difference in accident statistics between young drivers and more mature and experienced drivers. I admit openly to the House that the first accident I had while driving was in the early 1960s. I have driven 20,000 miles every year of my adult life, and I know full well that—given the same situation 30 years later—I could have driven out of the circumstances which caused that accident. It was somebody else's fault, but experience does help in driving.

We must instil in young people the firm belief and understanding that one does not simply pass the test and become an expert driver. If that were true, the figures would look healthier. It is important that the House gives the Bill an unopposed passage, but let me emphasise that this must be a part of a series of approaches aimed at tackling all the causes of death on the roads. We may need to think positively about the design of vehicles, and about whether, for example, heavy vehicles have adequate vision.

We must also consider the way in which some companies impose schedules upon drivers which make it impossible for them to drive safely. We know about that in the context of coaches, and the Minister has taken positive steps recently in that respect. There are a host of issues and the House must address them in its efforts to tackle the huge numbers of unnecessary deaths. The Bill forms an important part of the strategy, and I once again congratulate the hon. Member for Rochford on promoting the Bill. I wish it a speedy passage through its remaining stages.

Dr. Michael Clark: With the leave of the House; I should like to thank all of those hon. Members who have taken part in the debate for the support that they have given without reservation. I would particularly like to thank the hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien), the advisor to the Police Federation, for conveying to the House the support that the police give to the Bill. He pointed out that drink-driving was a problem of past generations, while macho driving may be a problem of this one, and welcomed the Bill in that regard.

The hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) pointed out that young males offend under the age of 25, but that the rate of offending tends to fall once people are over 25. The Bill might help them to get through that period. I was pleased with the hon. Gentleman's comments, and I thank him for them. He also pointed out that young drivers have skills, but generally choose not to use them. We must persuade them to use those skills, and I am grateful for the work done by the university of Southampton in that respect.

The hon. Member for Eastleigh described the Bill as being one measure in a series of steps, and my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) wenton to outline what those steps are. They include "Pass Plus", a driving test on theory and driving teaching in schools.

The hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) pointed out that he is a non-driver and, were the Bill to come into law, he—a man of mature years—would be caught within its provisions if he were to apply for a licence. Despite that, he welcomed the Bill.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Minister for his support, and I am also grateful that he pointed out that I am not a poodle of the Department of Transport. We both know that that is true. He mentioned that road deaths have reduced by 34 per cent. since 1987, despite more miles having been covered by drivers.

I was pleased that the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) spoke from the Opposition Front Bench. She will know that my constituency takes its name from the principal river—the Roche—so it was appropriate that she responded this morning. I thank her for her support.

She asked about HGVs and public service vehicles. Those are not included in the provisions of the Bill, principally because drivers of those vehicles must be 21 years of age at least before they can hold a licence. They must also hold a car licence before they can apply for those licences. It is thought, because of their age and the fact that they must have a car licence first, that they will be caught within the provisions of the Bill in those stages rather than later when they have a more advanced licence.

I thank the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) for his support. I know that he was busy this morning on road safety matters in the privacy of his office. I am grateful that he could break away to come here to support the Bill. He, too, pointed out that young people are more responsible with regard to drink-driving. Let us hope that the Bill will make them more responsible in other ways, too.

I am pleased to see you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I thank you for the time that you have given me. I thank all hon. Members for the support that they have given the Bill.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time, and committed to a Standing Committee, pursuant to Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills).

Olympic Symbol etc. (Protection) Bill

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

The Bill seeks simply to protect the Olympic symbol and the Olympic words from unauthorised commercial exploitation. It has all-party support. Perhaps it would be appropriate to spell out the names of those who are supporting me in the Bill. They include my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins), who, of course, is respected and renowned for his sporting ability in the past and for his on-going interest in sport; my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe)—I need not describe his exploits, ability and the achievements that he has notched up, not only on his own behalf but on behalf of the United Kingdom, and his tally of medals, including Olympic medals, is something of which everybody can be proud; my hon. Friends the Members for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) and for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel); the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman), who has been a distinguished Minister and Opposition spokesman and currently heads the Select Committee on National Heritage; the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry), who has established a fine reputation for his interest in sport, who supports a wide range of sport and speaks with considerable knowledge; the hon. Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton), an outspoken and robust advocate of sport who has done great credit to himself, his constituency and the sports for which he speaks; the hon Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Maxton); the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Ms Hoey), who has held the position of Opposition spokesman for sport and is highly respected and regarded; the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell), who represents the Liberal Democrats, has given the Bill his warm support and acts as a sponsor; and our hon. Friend the Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth), who brings a genuine all-party image to and support for the Bill.

In short, the Bill will enable the Secretary of State to grant the British Olympic Association an exclusive licence to exploit the Olympic symbols commercially, thus giving statutory force to the common law rights of the BOA. As our national Olympic committee, the BOA is responsible, as most hon. Members will be aware, for all aspects of the British team at the Olympic games, such as organising transport and providing accommodation, the necessary kit and back-up support. That in itself is an increasingly expensive exercise.

Its role now, however, is much wider, as it also provides extensive services to potential British competitors of all Olympic sports. Those services are aimed at ensuring that the team—we all want this—is as well prepared as possible for international competition, and are acknowledged by the governing bodies of the sport in question to be vital for our top competitors.

As the BOA receives no Government funds, its ability to provide and maintain the existing levels of service to competitors depends, as we are clearly aware, on its ability to raise sponsorship. If we are to maintain and improve British international performances through expenditure of the commercial income available through Olympic sponsorship, statutory protection from unauthorised commercial exploitation is vital.

Such protection would give sponsors—who will, I believe, provide a great deal of money—the comfort of knowing that they have a legally protected right. Thus, control of any authorised use would be very much easier. It is an unfortunate fact that such unauthorised use has become increasingly prevalent and poses a serious threat to the BOA's fund-raising ability and so to the future of British sport.

At this point it may be worth quoting a sentence from a letter that I have received from Craig Reedie, the chairman of the BOA. He says:

"The Bill has the unanimous backing of the sporting community and I hope that, given its uncontentious nature, it will receive your support."

I have also received a letter from Gavin Stewart, chairman of the BOA's Competitors' Council. He is a well-respected and renowned international rower. In his letter, copies of which may have gone to many hon. Members, he says:

"The ability to maintain existing levels of service to top British competitors depends increasingly on the ability to generate income through commercial exploitation of the Olympic Symbols. The protection which this Bill would offer is vital in order to ensure that Britain's top competitors are not deprived of the benefits of the revenue which this commercial exploitation can produce."

It is interesting that Mr. Stewart sends out with his letter a list. It was written on behalf of the governing bodies of Olympic sports, all of which are listed and all of which support the Bill. I am almost tempted to read out all of them, because it is so comprehensive, and it shows the wide support for the Bill. [HON. MEMBERS: "Go on!"] I will succumb to the temptation. The list comprises the Grand National Archery Society; the British Athletic Federation; the British Badminton Olympic Committee; the British Baseball Federation; the British and Irish Basketball Federation; the British Bobsleigh Association; the British Amateur Boxing Association; the British Canoe Union; the British Curling Association; the British Cycling Federation; the British Equestrian Federation; the Amateur Fencing Association; the Football Association; the British Amateur Gymnastics Association; the British Handball Association; the Great Britain Olympic Hockey Board; the British Ice Hockey Association; the National Ice Skating Association of the United Kingdom; the British Judo Association; the Lawn Tennis Association; the Great Britain Luge Association; the Modern Pentathlon Association of Great Britain; the Amateur Rowing Association; the British Ski Federation; the National Softball Federation; the Amateur Swimming Federation of Great Britain; the British Olympic Table Tennis Committee; the Great Britain Target Shooting Federation; the British Volleyball Federation; the British Amateur Weightlifters' Association; the British Amateur Wrestling Association; and the Royal Yachting Association. That is an extremely comprehensive list.

Mr. Derek Enright (Hemsworth): The hon. Gentleman has not read out the name of the British Amateur Rugby League Association. Does that mean that it is opposed to the Bill?

Mr. Winterton: I am happy to say that I do not believe that it is. I received the list from the British Olympic Association and, although I confess it does not include the

[Mr. Winterton]

British Amateur Rugby League Association, I am confident that, although that organisation is not directly affected by the legislation, its members would unanimously support the Bill.

The United Kingdom is one of the few countries that do not give statutory protection to the olympic symbol. As the BOA is one of the few national Olympic committees that does not receive Government funds, British sportsmen and women operate at a significant disadvantage compared with their counterparts from the countries against which they compete.

The Bill has no negative revenue implications for the Treasury and I hope that the House agrees that it is neither complicated nor controversial. As I emphasised, it has total cross-party support, as is evidenced by my 11 co-sponsors. It has the support of the Department of National Heritage, Her Majesty's Opposition and the Labour party spokesman on sport, and the minority parties. As I sought to show, it also has the unanimous backing of the sporting community. I am delighted to introduce the Bill.

Mr. Oliver Heald (Hertfordshire, North): I strongly support the measure but may I ask my hon. Friend about clause 4—[Interruption.] It may cause a little trouble, as that clause often does. Clause 4 provides an exemption to the infringement provision and suggests that certain kinds of work should not be covered. It says that, if infringes the association right, the infringement would not be actionable. What is the thinking behind that? A film that uses the Olympic symbol would probably be a big-money production from which the association could get some useful revenue, so what is the point of the exemption?

"a dramatic work, a musical work, an artistic work, a sound recording, a film, a broadcast and a cable programme"

Mr. Winterton: I have always been told that it is unwise to give way. I suspect that I may be unable to give my hon. Friend the full answer that he requires. When my hon. Friend the Minister makes the Government's contribution, he may wish to comment on the matter. The widespread legal advice on which the Bill has been framed may marginally limit its scope. Clauses 2 to 4 specify the rights conferred by the Olympic association's rights and what amounts to infringement, and deal with the limits of those rights. There was a danger that, if the Bill went too wide, it risked hybridity. I hope that that is a satisfactory answer.

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): I simply wish to offer my hon. Friend some help in answering the question posed by my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald). My hon. Friend referred to the apparent anomaly in clause 4(2), which mentions "descriptions of work referred to in subsection (1)(a) above are a literary work, a dramatic work, a musical work, an artistic work, a sound recording, a film, a broadcast and a cable programme".

Could it be that the sound reason for excluding such activities is that there may often be an incidental reference to or pointing to the Olympic symbol in a sound recording or broadcast? Surely it would be unjust to include such references, and I am sure that my hon. Friend would not wish injustice to occur. It would not be fair for such incidental reproduction to be caught by the provisions of this otherwise highly sensible Bill.

Mr. Winterton: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his extremely supportive and helpful comments on the Bill. Clearly, I do not want the Bill to range so far that it will be difficult to implement and monitor it. My hon. Friend's point is correct. Clearly, there may be many occasions when incidental references will be made and it could create a legal minefield were the Bill's scope to be as wide as my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) wanted.

I am delighted to be introducing the Bill. It is always a pleasure to introduce a Bill that has support across the House.

Mr. Quentin Davies (Stamford and Spalding): Before my hon. Friend finishes his speech, could he deal with two issues that arise from my reading of the Bill, which I broadly support? I welcome the fact that my hon. Friend is introducing the Bill, but does it apply to Northern Ireland? If not, why not?

Secondly, what is the Bill's single market dimension? What is the efficacy of legislating on a purely national basis now that we have a single market in this area? What is to prevent goods with the Olympic logo from being produced elsewhere in the single market, imported into this country and sold on the principle that anything that can be legally sold anywhere in the single market can be legally sold everywhere in the single market? Can my hon. Friend reassure me on that point?

Mr. Winterton: In answer to the first part of my hon. Friend's question I refer him to clauses 10 and 11, which deal with forfeiture in England, Wales, Northern Ireland and Scotland. The Bill relates to all parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Garnier: And clause 18(3).

Mr. Winterton: As my hon. Friend says, the matter is also covered in another part of the Bill.

On the issue of the European Community, mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies), I can only say, as I did earlier, that the British Olympic Association is one of the few national Olympic committees that does not receive Government funds and does not have exclusive use of the Olympic logo within its country. It is my understanding that legislation on the subject is already in place in other countries of the European Community.

I stress the point that I made earlier—I have taken lengthy and good legal advice. Clearly, the Bill's draftsmen have been considering such matters, and I believe that we are covered. I do not want to introduce into the debate any matters relating to subsidiarity, because I would be unnecessarily widening the scope of the debate.

I am delighted to be introducing the Bill. It will support the BOA and our athletes, improve our potential Olympic competitors and ensure that money raised from Olympic sponsorship is spent in the way that it should be—on sport and in nurturing the next generation of sportsmen and sportswomen.

I emphasise that, if we are to be at the top of the league in international sport, we need resources with which to train our athletes from a very young age. That is a major objective of the British Olympic Association. Clearly, the more resources it has and the more extensive training it can provide, the better the results achieved by the nation in international events.

Such a development can only assist in restoring our sporting fortunes and in returning our nation's competitors to the pinnacle of sporting excellence for which we are renowned. I am happy to commend the Second Reading of the Bill to the House.

Mrs. Barbara Roche (Hornsey and Wood Green): I congratulate the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on his success in the ballot and on the excellent way in which he has presented the Olympic Symbol etc. (Protection) Bill. As he said, the Bill commands the full support of the Opposition as well as the wide-ranging support of hon. Members. He named many hon. Members on both sides of the House who support the Bill, but I will mention just two of them.

The whole House will recognise that my hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry)—the Opposition shadow spokesman in this area—has played a prominent role in our country's sporting life. I know that the Bill is very dear to his heart, and it is fitting that the hon. Gentleman paid tribute to him.

The hon. Gentleman also mentioned the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe), to whom I referred earlier in today's proceedings. In addition to the national and international honours that he has gained on behalf of this country, he is also my parliamentary pair, and I know that he appreciates the importance of that assignment.

In discussing the Olympic symbol, we are also examining the importance of sport. On the day that we are discussing the future of sport under the terms of the Bill, it is appropriate that we remember the life of the late Fred Perry, He made an important contribution to sport in this century and he was the last British winner of the Wimbledon men's singles final. It is appropriate to his memory that we discuss this subject today.

This long overdue Bill is designed to protect the commercial rights of the British Olympic Association. It is correct to point out that similar legislation exists in most other countries, including the United States of America and Australia. The British Olympic Association, which has primary responsibility for funding our Olympic teams, receives no direct Government funding and it cannot bid for lottery money because of its particular revenue status. Therefore, it is important that the Bill enjoys a speedy passage through Parliament.

Clause 10 almost goes back to our earlier debate on the confiscation of the proceeds of crime. The Bill makes provision for "the forfeiture of certain goods, material or articles which come into the possession of any person . . . in connection with the investigation or prosecution of a relevant offence".

It is absolutely right to include such a clause. Far too many spivs are making money from sport, taking money that is rightly the preserve of the BOA and that should be returned to sport.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stalybridge and Hyde has written to the Prime Minister about matters contained in the Bill, pressing him to introduce appropriate legislation in Government time. Nevertheless, we are delighted that the hon. Member for Macclesfield has introduced a Bill that will have wide-ranging effects on investment in sport. We warmly welcome it.

Mr. Oliver Heald (Hertfordshire, North): I welcome the Bill and pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) for introducing it. It could have no more doughty fighter on its behalf. My hon. Friend has assembled a huge team of all-party supporters, and the welcome that his Bill received from the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) proves how well he did his behind-the-scenes homework on preparing the Bill for its Second Reading.

The Olympic games are special to Britain because of our national achievements but they are also special also internationally. They have a proud history and are a sign of the comity of nations and of international co-operation of a unique kind. For that reason, I particularly agree that the signs, mottos and words associated with the games should enjoy unique dignity and protection. That might be called censorship by some people, but to the extent that censorship is involved, it is right that those items should receive special protection. It is important also that their commercial exploitation benefits athletes and others connected with the games rather than only commercial interests.

That is particularly true given the history of the games. I make no apology for referring to that history briefly. Although the games are of ancient origin, it is not entirely clear where they were first held. By the end of the 6th century BC, at least four Greek sporting festivals known as the classical games had achieved major importance. The most significant were the games held at Olympia. The others were the Pythian, Nemean and Isthmian games held at Delphi, Nemea and Corinth respectively.

Similar festivals developed to the point where the Olympic games in particular became famous throughout the Greek world. There are records of champions at Olympia going back as far as 726 BC, when it was recorded that there was just one event—the stade. [Interruption.] I am informed by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant) of a different pronunciation from an older generation—[HON. MEMBERS: "Oh!"]—or a newer one. I would never suggest that my hon. Friend is from anything but the newest and latest generation. He is definitely with it.

Subsequently, other races were added. Of most importance and interest to the House perhaps is the 1,500 metres, which developed by the year 724 BC—the race in which, in modern times, my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe) excelled and Britain, as the middle-distance running centre of the world, has made such a reputation.

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): Does not my hon. Friend agree that the event of most relevance to the House was the pankration—a form of no-holds-barred wrestling?

Mr. Heald: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, although I recall that, although the fighting was no holds barred, and kicking and hitting were allowed, biting and gouging of eyes were strictly forbidden. So a certain discipline did prevail, even though Madam Speaker might not have approved of it.

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): On a slightly more serious note, does my hon. Friend agree that one of the problems emerging in the Olympic games at that time—regrettably, all too familiar to us—resulted in the Olympic committee having to meet on a number of occasions to discuss the use of drugs by certain athletes? In particular, the Spartan team was accused of including drugs in its diet. Does my hon. Friend agree that it is highly regrettable that the problem has persisted in the games to the present day? Our hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe) has long been associated with attempts to combat drugs through his association with the games.

Mr. Heald: I was coming to some of the more serious issues surrounding the games. I certainly agree that there is nothing new under the sun, and that there were problems with drugs even in those early years. It is a cause of sadness that those who wish to excel will sometimes let down themselves and others by resorting to drugs.

I too pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne, who has taken a clear view on this subject—that there should be no excuses, and that people found after tests to have taken drugs should not be allowed to get away with it by using some of the excuses that we so often hear. They should incur a lengthy ban.

It was in the Roman period that the games effectively came to an end, because the Romans regarded athletics with contempt and were not prepared to allow the Olympics to continue. Nevertheless, by the year 200 AD the games had had a proud continuous history from 776 BC. It was that history which, in the Victorian period, inspired Baron Pierre de Coubertin, who was the father of the modern Olympics. In a moving speech made in Paris in 1892, he said:

"Let us export our oarsmen, our runners, our fencers into other lands. That is the true Free Trade of the future; and the day it is introduced into Europe the cause of Peace will have received a new and strong ally. It inspires me to touch upon another step I now propose, and in it I shall ask that the help you have given me hitherto you will extend again, so that together we may attempt to realise, upon a basis suitable to the conditions of our modern life, the splendid and beneficent task of reviving the Olympic games."

From that moment in 1892, the baron fought hard at conference after conference to establish the Olympic games. In 1894 a meeting of Sports Ministers in Paris voted unanimously in favour of revival, and the congress was then able to set up the first modern Olympic games in April 1896.

It is perhaps worth remembering that the games have been held ever since then, through periods of immense international difficulty, wars and the worst threats to civilisation that we have known. The Olympic movement continued and brought together peoples of all countries.

Mr. Michael Fabricant (Mid-Staffordshire): Would my hon. Friend care to speculate on the poignancy of the fact that Baron de Coubertin made that speech just 22 years after the seige of Paris during the Franco-Prussian war? When he described sport as the "free trade of the future",

he seemed to have a vision that the Olympic movement might be the precursor of the European Union of today.

Mr. Heald: I note that some colleagues are surprised at that idea. The baron certainly believed that Europe need not be divided and that its future should have co-operation at its centre. I do not think that he would have gone as far as to suggest a federal destiny for Europe, although I am sure that he would have welcomed the co-operation between nation states that we now have.

The baron was extremely eager that there should be agreement. He was convinced—

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) and many of his hon. Friends are reading from a prepared text. Bearing in mind the importance of ensuing Bills, we are clearly facing a filibuster. I suggest, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that Conservative Members send a copy of their prepared text upstairs to Hansard and that we then get on with a proper Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse): I assure the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) that so far there has been nothing out of order. Anything out of order would have been ruled out of order.

Mr. Heald: Without lingering too long on the point made by the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham), which you ruled out of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I make it clear that my notes are hand written. I accept that I have been reading, but it is a passage from the history of the Olympics with which I am anxious to deal. I do not have a prepared text. I have only an extract from the "Encyclopedia Britannica". It is relevant, I think, to what we are discussing. I am glad to have your support, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The baron was convinced that the downfall of the ancient Olympic games had been caused by outside influences that undermined the spirit of the games. For that reason he was anxious that the International Olympic Committee and its members should be regarded as ambassadors of their national sports organisations, not delegates to the committee, and that they might not accept from the Government of each country or any organisation or individual instructions that in any way affected their independence.

It is a fact that the Olympic movement has that independence, which has been its strength. The Bill seeks to protect the symbols, the motto and the words associated with the Olympic games, which means that we are considering a measure that will help the British Olympic movement and the international movement. That context is important.

In moving from the history—

Mr. Garnier: Before my hon. Friend moves on from the history of the new Olympic games, and for that matter the ancient games, will he take up what my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) was saying about the Olympic symbol, the interlinked rings? When did the rings become an integral part of the Olympic movement? Was the symbol used in Greek and Roman times? I ask these questions out of interest and curiosity.

Mr. Heald rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The history lesson is interesting, and it could probably be said to be relevant to the Bill. However, the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, North is rather stretching it. It would be advantageous to the debate if we dealt with the Bill.

Mr. Heald: I am grateful, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was not going to take the route suggested by my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier). I merely say that the answer is 1914.

The scheme of the Bill is that the British Olympic Association will have a right to the symbols, the motto and the words associated with the Olympic movement. That right will be in statutory form. It would be an infringement of that right without the consent of the proprietor—the association—to use these representations for all purposes except those set out in clause 4, which provides that the "right is not infringed by use of a controlled representation where—

(a) the use"—

is in a work as described in subsection (2), and the work is not one whose purpose is, or whose purposes include, the "advertising or other promotion" of goods or services.

The descriptions of works referred to are "a literary work, a dramatic work, a musical work, an artistic work, a sound recording, a film, a broadcast and a cable programme, within the meaning of the"

1988 Act. All those forms of work are likely to be produced by commercial concerns. For example, a literary work is published for reward and a dramatic or musical work is presented to the public for reward.

Given that the Bill has two main purposes—to uphold the dignity of the symbols and signs of the movement and to ensure that their commercial exploitation is in the interests of athletes and those connected with the games—it is difficult to understand the justification for excluding a literary work that relies on the movements motto or symbols or the word "Olympic". The use of the motto, symbol or word should be the subject of a payment to the British Olympic Association to enable it to capitalise on its valuable intellectual property.

The same is true of a dramatic or musical work if the symbol is to be used. If Andrew Lloyd Webber produces a show, possibly something along the lines of "Chariots of Fire" with music, why should he not pay our athletes through the association a sum to reflect the commercial advantages that he is gaining from using the association's symbol?

It is important that we should uphold the dignity of the games. As a barrister who prosecuted in obscenity cases—the hon. Member for St. Helens, South may have had similar experiences—I saw many works that were alleged to be obscene but which were often described as "artistic", and artistic works are among those exempted in clause 4. Although such works might be "artistic", I do not believe that they are the sort of material that the Olympic movement would wish to be using its symbol, motto or the words "Olympic" or "Olympian". There should be an element of censorship, even in the case of an artistic work.

Mr. Fabricant: I am following my hon. Friend's comments with great interest. He will be aware that one of the sponsors of the Bill is the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman), who is the Chairman of the Select Committee on National Heritage. I note that five members of that Committee are sponsoring the Bill.

My hon. Friend may be interested to know that, at this very moment, the Committee is looking into the future of the British film industry. He mentioned "Chariots of Fire" which was a huge success. It was, however, a low-budget movie. If my hon. Friend's suggestion that fees should be paid for the use of the symbol—whether it were used as an integral or incidental part of a film—were adopted, would it not inhibit still further the production of British films?

Mr. Heald: My hon. Friend raises an interesting issue, but I am not sure that I should follow it up. If the symbol is to be used, a payment, however small, should be made. In the case of low-budget films, the association might feel that it was able to levy only a small charge, but there is no reason why it should not exploit part of its commercial heritage. It is a question not only of commercial advantage but of censorship that the Olympic symbol should not be used willy-nilly in any production in a way that the founders of the movement and those who carry the torch today would not wish. I support the Bill, but I believe that that issue gives rise to legitimate concern.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: I intervene to assist the House and—I hope—my hon. Friend, who is making a most interesting speech. The British Olympic Association has been closely involved with the drafting of the Bill. I appreciate that my hon. Friend is seeking to increase the amount of available sponsorship, but the British Olympic Association is very happy with the Bill, believing that to extend it further would create grave problems in policing and in other ways.

Mr. Heald: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. Perhaps he wants to consider his point with the Olympic movement, but I do not see it as a bar to supporting the Bill. However, I hope that my hon. Friend is willing to look into the matter.

Mr. Garnier: I am concerned that my hon. Friend is falling into error. If he looks at clause 4, sub-section 2, about which he has been expounding, and applies his mind to, for example, films which incidentally catch in the background an advertisement or a copyright symbol of a well-known household product, drink or foodstuff, is it right and just that the Olympic movement, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield referred, should be more favoured, especially when it does not advocate such practice, than the makers of household products, which would not be able to claim damages for breaches of copyright were their logos or other copyright property to appear incidentally in a dramatic or musical work and the like?

Mr. Heald: I obviously understand my hon. Friend's point and his concern, but the Olympics are rather different from other products advertised on hoardings and elsewhere. The Olympics has a special place in Britain and internationally, so the association should have that special right to consent, if it wishes, to films which display its banner in the background, but only if it feels that the film suits the Olympic movement and its dignity and if it receives a commercial reward.

The costs of sending an athletics team abroad to contest the Olympics are huge and the costs of staging the Olympics run into hundreds of millions of pounds. There should be special provision in this unique case.

Mr. Fabricant: Does my hon. Friend agree that there is no comparison between the use of the Olympic symbol and the word and the placement, if one may call it that, of certain product names? Is it not the case that certain manufacturers pay film companies and television production companies to place their product names in the viewer's line of sight?

Mr. Heald: My hon. Friend makes a telling point. Indeed, the method that he describes is one of the ways in which the Olympics is financed. Certainly, I know that in America the Olympic symbol was marketed to great effect before the Los Angeles Olympics.

Schools show films which depict the Olympics and the successes of athletes such as my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne and CD-roms are coming on stream which contain the entire history of the Olympics, so it would be wrong if the costs of producing such films, videos and CD-roms were so high that schools could not afford them. I do not think that the British Olympic Association would want to make a profit, but it would want proper recognition in films and other artistic representations and some payment, however small, for being a unique body with unique interests. I hope that I have not detained the House for too long.

1.8 pm

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): I will not detain the House for long, but I want to refer to one or two of the points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) in relation to the history of the Olympic games. Although the Olympic games are a very ancient institution, the current games are a relatively recent revival. As we have heard, the Olympic symbol was not invented until 1914. It is a relatively modern occurrence.

I do not want to strike a discordant note. However, we are proposing to give a Second Reading to a Bill which will give something unique to the British Olympic Association—a right of property to the Olympic symbol, "Olympiad", "Olympic" and the other words covered in the Bill. Those words are common currency, but the Bill proposes to give them a special status, to the possible disadvantage of people who already use them.

I am not a lawyer and, as I am surrounded by hon. and learned Members, I tread carefully in these matters. I am concerned about clause 2(4) and whether it protects people who have used in their company names the words covered in the Bill. Clause 2(4) states:

> "This section shall not have effect to permit the doing of anything which would otherwise be liable to be prevented by virtue of a right".

I am concerned about that, because I do not know what "a right" is in that respect.

Will the Bill affect commerce and the people who have used the words covered in the Bill for many years? In that respect, I think of Olympic Airways. The Bill could cause that airline problems because I am not sure whether, according to the definitions in the Bill, Olympic Airways has a right to its name. Clauses 5 and 6 refer to the Trade Marks Act 1994, but I am not certain whether the airline would gain any comfort from that.

The London business telephone directory reveals that the use of words like "Olympic" and "Olympiad" is widespread. I am concerned that the Bill will affect many of the people who trade under those names. The London business telephone directory has entries for Olympia Cars and Olympia Butchers of Blythe road. I am sure that it is an excellent establishment.

Mr. Bermingham: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. One could go through the telephone directory until the cows come home, but that will not stop people exporting veal calves. That is what the next Bill is all about and that is what the hon. Gentleman is trying to stop.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are not debating the next Bill: we are debating the Olympic Symbol etc. (Protection) Bill, as the hon. Gentleman is perfectly aware. His point of order is an abuse of the House.

Mr. Bermingham: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. If I have abused the House, I apologise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already ruled on that point of order.

Mr. Bermingham: I simply wanted to apologise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Atkinson: The hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) may think that I am abusing the House, but he does not trade as the Olympia Butchers of Blythe road, W14. The Bill could have a serious impact on the ability of that company to trade properly. I stand to be corrected by my hon. and learned Friends who know much more about the law than I do, but I wonder whether such companies will be exempt under the terms of the Bill. As I understand the Bill, I do not think that those firms can claim to have a right to continue to use those names.

Olympic Airways may have its name as a registered trade mark. However, would smaller companies like Olympia Delicacies, doner kebab manufacturer, have bothered to register official trade names? Would such company names be "a right", as set out in the Bill? What about Olympia Flowers, a west London florist, and Olympia Pizza? Surely those companies have not registered their names as a trade mark. Would they be put out of business as a result of the Bill?

Earlier, we debated the Road Traffic (New Drivers) Bill which may put young pizza delivery drivers at risk of losing their licences and having to resit the driving test. Will the Bill remove the right of Olympia Pizza to trade? I should welcome some assurances from my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) that little businesses such as Olympic Bloodstock Ltd., Olympic Bus, Olympic Cars, Olympic Cash and Carry, Olympic Electronics, Olympic Estates and so on will not be prejudiced in their ability to earn a living by anything that he does this day.

Mr. Garnier: Will my hon. Friend address clauses 15 and 16? He will find that the margin notes refer to:

"Remedy for groundless threats of infringement proceedings."

Clause 14 refers to

"Power to give directions to proprietor."

That power is given to the Secretary of State. Will my hon. Friend address those clauses and then consider whether his points about such shops are as good as he originally thought that they were?

Mr. Atkinson: Giving way to lawyers is always a dangerous pastime. I am grateful for my hon. Friend's points. I read clauses 14 and 15. I was not certain whether they posed a greater threat to the ability of Olympia Butchers of Blythe road to continue, to be honest. That is why we need assurances from my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield. If we get around to discussing it in Committee, we shall be able to examine the Bill more carefully to ensure that it does not prejudice anybody by giving the British Olympic Association a unique advantage.

Mr. Fabricant: I have looked at the scope of the Bill, and I note that it covers the five interlocking rings, the words "Citius, altius, fortius" and other words. I wonder whether my hon. Friend is relieved that it does not cover the Olympic torch. I am not sure how that would affect the Conservative party's symbol.

Mr. Atkinson: My hon. Friend is very astute. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield would not wish to do anything to prejudice the use of the Olympic torch on Conservative party literature. Again, there might be concern from Smith square at some import of the Bill.

I now refer in more detail to the Trade Marks Act 1994. In looking for some comfort in it, I wondered whether the definitions of trade marks do not already cover the Olympic sign.

Mr. Mike O'Brien (Warwickshire, North): Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will tell me how important he regards the Bill to be. Perhaps he would compare it with the fact that, in my area of Warwickshire and in Coventry, six people have died as a result of the veal export trade. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will compare the importance of some hon. Members wanting to make points on that matter with his views on talking out the Bill and reading the telephone directory.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That intervention has nothing to do with the Bill. The Chair will decide what is in order. So far, what I have heard has been in order—otherwise, it would have been ruled out of order.

Mr. Atkinson: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The Bill is important because it raises important points of principle. The hon. Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O' Brien) might not be interested in the livelihood of businesses, but I happen to be so. It is wrong of the hon. Gentleman to accuse me of speaking on the Bill without caring about other matters. It is nonsense to suggest that.

Mr. Bermingham: Methinks the hon. Gentleman doth protest too much.

Mr. Atkinson: I heard what the hon. Gentleman said from a sedentary position. I shall continue my speech, so that we can examine some clauses in detail.

In relation to the Trade Marks Act, I was about to mention international protection of the Olympic sign. Surely that is covered by the Paris convention of 1883. My hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield talked about international protection, but as this country is a signatory to the Paris convention of 1883, there might be no need for the Bill because we are already covered.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: In making this intervention, I shall make a plea to the House. The debate so far has been constructive and extremely helpful. It has dealt exclusively with the matters before the House. The Bill has support right across the House, and is widely supported outside. My hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) is looking at the nitty-gritty of the Bill, and he is quite right that the 1883 legislation covers the matter internationally. However, it does not cover the matter within the United Kingdom.

We have been extremely careful in drafting the Bill, and we have been in consultation with the Department of National Heritage and, naturally, with the Treasury. We have taken the best possible advice, and the scope of the Bill is as it is because we do not want to do some of the things which my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham has implied in his remarks. Commercial interests have been consulted, and they are happy with the Bill. The British Olympic Association is happy with the scope of the Bill.

I hope that, in his probing of the Bill—he has an absolute right to do that—my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham will not perhaps destroy the Bill by being rather too negative in his approach.

Mr. Atkinson: I assure my hon. Friend that I would not wish to impede the process of the Bill, because it deserves further, and more detailed, discussions.

The inquiry which I was making on the matter was that it would be fine for a company such as Olympic Airways, which has established that as its title. Small shops and businesses, however, may not be taken account of in the provisions. Often a company trades under a different name from the sign on its board, and such companies could well be caught in this legislation.

Mr. Fabricant: Has my hon. Friend made an analysis of the number of Greek restaurants in the United Kingdom with a title including the name Olympic?

Mr. Atkinson: I assure my hon. Friend that there must be thousands of such restaurants. My hon. Friend has put his finger on a main point. The words "Olympic", "Olympius" and "Olympus" belong to the Greek people. They are not the exclusive property of the British Olympic Association. When the Olympic games were revived during the 19th century, those words and the symbol were adopted.

From the moment that the Bill becomes law, a Greek restaurant owner wishing to name his restaurant the Olympic would—I dare say—be unable to do so. He could then be said to be infringing the copyright of one of the names covered in the Bill. The words form part of the heritage and culture of the Greeks. Many Greek Cypriots in this country run businesses and have affection for those words. "Olympic Pizza" gives the idea of speed, fitness and people delivering pizzas on motorbikes.

I take my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire's point absolutely. The words are common currency. If the Bill were in any way to stop people using that title—as a Greek or Greek Cypriot person should be entitled to do—when opening up a business, it would require amendment. It is as simple as that.

If it is properly examined, the Bill can be made to work. We must talk it through carefully, and I am sorry if Opposition Members do not think that we should do that. I believe that it is right to get legislation in the House correct, and not to put into law matters which are incorrect. There are many issues today of national and international importance, but the House is perfectly entitled to discuss things of smaller importance. We should be reminded of shopkeepers and restaurateurs and consider the Bill carefully. Therefore, we must have further detailed discussions about the Bill before it becomes law.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) not only on gaining a well-placed position in the ballot for private Member's Bills but on the subject that he selected as his Bill. It is important, as I will explain, both for positive and negative reasons.

The House will be familiar with the magnificent equestrian figure of my hon. Friend, who tried to tempt me into the sporting field on a visit to the west Falklands some years ago, where we set out one morning to try to improve our equestrian skills—he sitting magnificently on a horse, and me clinging to it in a way I had never done for a quarter of a century previously.

Mr. Fabricant: The same horse?

Mr. Arnold: I assure my hon. Friend that it was a different horse. Perhaps if it had been the same horse, I would not have suffered the fall I did—my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield knew how to check a horse's girth and to ensure that the horse was not puffed up. I did not make that check and in due course took quite a tumble for my lack of sporting experience. I know that my hon. Friend is highly qualified to speak on sporting measures.

The Bill is welcome for negative as well as positive reasons. I believe that it will improve the quality of the goods to which the Olympic symbol is attached. We all know that, at great international events, great sporting events and events of varying descriptions, for example, relating to the royal family, a vast array of some pretty tacky goods are circulated for the tourists, visitors and the public to purchase.

As the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche), the Opposition spokesman, said in her usual elegant way, they are produced by spivs. Be they produced by spivs or wide boys, it is a diversion of the resources of the sportsgoing public that profits made from the sale of such hallmarked items goes to spivs and wide-boys rather than to the sporting endeavours. For that reason, I think that the Bill will be a valuable addition to the statute book, when it reaches it.

On the positive side, the Bill is of great value to formalise and to protect the symbol properly in its uses. If in the process it raises money for the development of sporting activities, it is only too valuable. In the past, I have been involved in the organising of contingents to international scout jamborees. That does not compare in expertise and skills to the preparation of contingents to the Olympics. They are immensely expensive, particularly if one thinks about the vast costs involved in sending not only the teams but the supporting teams, which are ever-more complex in this modern day and age. The equipment that needs to be sent must be kept to a very high standard and be at the point of absolute perfection when our sportsmen and women take part. It costs a vast amount.

One of the principal advantages of the Bill is that that money can be properly applied to support a good British team to go to the Olympics. If it can additionally cause funds to be gained and filtered down to the training of our young people in sports, across the wide range of sports involved in the Olympics, it must be an advantage, because I think that we do not do better in international sports because we do not catch our young at an early enough age to get them skilled in the various sports involved in the Olympics.

The Bill is particularly relevant to Britain. My hon. Friend the Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) referred to other countries in Europe and to the international scene. We are not discussing legislation that goes beyond the borders of the United Kingdom. We are discussing what happens here. When we send teams abroad to the Olympics, as we have since 1948, we deal with goods produced in this country to commemorate the Olympics being held far from these shores.

London, this great capital city of ours, hosted the Olympics in the early days of 1908 and came to the Olympic movement's rescue in 1948 in staging the revival Olympics. We are all too familiar with the agonies of the bid to bring the next Olympics to Manchester. I hope that Manchester, London and other cities will work towards bringing the Olympics here in the future. So doing will require vast sums of money, which is why the Bill is highly relevant in gathering together the money necessary to present an Olympic games of the standard required by the Olympics movement and expected by the House.

The Bill is particularly relevant to the House because a small, select band of hon. Members have played a great part in previous Olympics. Between 1931 and 1943, the hon. Member for Peterborough was Lord Burghley, who won a gold medal in the 400 metre hurdles at the 1928 Olympics in Amsterdam. After 1943, he moved up the Corridor, where he succeeded as the sixth Marquess of Exeter. Also along the Corridor is another Olympic participant, in rifle shooting—Lord Swansea. You, Mr. Deputy Speaker, may recall from your early days in the House the then hon. Member for Chichester, Chris Chataway, who had an excellent record in the 5,000 metre race many years ago. We are honoured to have with us the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe), who has many Olympic records to his credit.

I hope that we shall shortly consider the Bill's detailed clauses and requirements. My hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) raised a valid concern. The names mentioned in the Bill, such as "Olympics" and "Olympian", are, by their nature, not exclusive to that magnificent sporting contest but are used by many organisations, including, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) said, a pizza parlour and the Greek airline.

In reading through the Bill, I was interested to note that clause 15 provides a remedy for groundless threats of infringement proceedings. If the House gives organisations certain rights and responsibilities to control the use of the Olympic symbol, it is incumbent on the House to ensure that such rights are not abused.

I strongly support the Bill because it will be of immense value in adding further fire power to this country's sporting excellence. Let us hope that, in future years, as a result of resources brought forth by the Bill, British teams will give even better performances at the Olympics than they have in the past.

Mr. Bermingham rose—

1.33 pm

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): I shall be brief, because I have no motive other than to strongly support the Bill. Before the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) has apoplexy, I assure him that I, too, want the House to put an end to the live export of animals, which I strongly deprecate. Nevertheless, we are now here to discuss the important Olympic Symbol etc. (Protection) Bill, which has been presented not before time.

Few ideals have enthused the whole world so consistently throughout this century as that of the Olympics. The Olympics sum up some of the highest human ideals and deserve special protection. Those ideals are of excellence, competition, team spirit, brotherhood of man and international co-operation on a peaceful and positive basis. That is why it is so important that we should, to the best of our ability, protect the Olympic games and the Olympic movement from commercial exploitation in a world where the pressures are increasingly intense.

Therefore, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on introducing the Bill and, I hope, on enabling measures to be passed that will protect the games from commercial exploitation and take us back to the original spirit of the games alluded to earlier. It was not mentioned that, apart from the commercial pressures, another major difference between the games then and now was that all the competitors were naked and only one female was allowed to participate—the high priestess Demeter, who seems to have been absent from more recent Olympic games.

The United Kingdom is rare in not already giving proper protection to Olympic trademarks. The Bill puts right a long-standing anomaly and provides protection, not just to the symbols, but to other elements associated with the Olympic movement. The Bill has a positive as well as a negative—protective—side. It will enable sponsorship for athletes to be collected by the British Olympic Committee by the licensing and use of symbols related to the Olympic games. That is particularly important in this country, where there is no Government support, which is, in itself, quite unusual in the international context.

Trademarks are an important part of commerce; they are an important symbol of human activity in the modern world. They are more than just symbols, they represent ideals and, in the popular imagination, they are linked to whatever they represent. I can give no better example than that of Cartier. People often buy a product exclusively because it bears the symbol and trademark of a specific manufacturer or trader equated with high quality.

I mentioned the name of Cartier because, throughout the world, many people attempt to copy the symbol illicitly in order to sell the product at more than its value would otherwise be. That will apply to the Olympics if the symbol remains unprotected. I do not want that to happen—I want the Olympic games to be properly protected in this country as they are elsewhere. I want the British Olympic Committee to use the facility to raise sponsorship to support our athletes and our contributions to future Olympics. For those reasons, I strongly support and welcome the Bill, and hope that it passes through the House swiftly.

1.37 pm

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): I shall be brief, as was the hon. Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant), unlike his colleagues, who made extremely lengthy, verbose and pointless speeches.

I do not mean to be unkind—I can easily read the Bill. We do not pass retrospective legislation, so anyone called Olympic or Olympia is protected and will not be hurt by the legislation. If clauses 17 and 18 mean what they say, a person who makes a frivolous objection because someone has chosen to use Olympic or Olympia as his or her name will be caught by the law. Therefore, anyone with such a name does not need to worry.

As for the history lesson from the Government, a parliamentary private secretary, the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald), gave us some wonderful information which was totally useless and pointless. I should be grateful if he would give me the briefing document so that I can read it to see what bits were missed out.

The Bill is long overdue and I congratulate the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on introducing it. The Bill will do a lot of good and it will help many people in the future. It may even create jobs; indeed, if we move on to the next Bill, we may create still more jobs. I welcome the Bill.

1.40 pm

Mr. Michael Stephen (Shoreham): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on his good fortune in winning the ballot and introducing the Olympic Symbol etc. (Protection) Bill. Like the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham), I wish to move on to the next Bill on the Order Paper, the Protection of Calves (Export) Bill, on which I shall speak in support. I hope, therefore, that my hon. Friend will not view it as a discourtesy to him or to his Bill if my contribution to this debate is shorter than I would have liked it to be.

I put on record my support for sport. It is immensely important not just for our young people but for all of us—particularly parliamentarians, who have so little opportunity for physical exercise. It is important that our young people should be taught from the very earliest age how to look after their physical as well as their mental health. Those who are at the pinnacle of sporting achievement—our Olympic sportsmen and sportswomen—set a fine example in that regard.

I pay tribute to the work of the Sports Council and I am very grateful that, even in times of financial stringency, the Government have been able to support it with public funds. However, the level of funding is not enough. As the economy continues to improve, I hope that my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor will find more money for the Sports Council.

In the interim, I see no reason why additional funds should not be found for the British Olympic Association from commercial sources. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield on his ingenuity in discovering a source from which the British Olympic Association may derive funding—the commercial use of the Olympic symbol and name.

Sport is important not only in terms of our physical health and well-being but as a source of national pride. We are justifiably proud of the achievements of our Olympic sportsmen and women. I pay tribute to my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins)—whose constituency my own surrounds—who was a very distinguished Olympic athlete.

I conclude by illustrating to the House the importance of sport as a source of national pride. That fact was summed up only a few days ago by the headline in one of our newspapers which read, "Strewth! We beat the Aussies."

1.42 pm

Mr. Michael Stern (Bristol, North-West): Like the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) and my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen), I shall be brief. I support the Olympic Symbol etc. (Protection) Bill totally, and I wish to raise two points to which reference has not been made in the debate so far.

First, the Bill is very welcome, but I fear that it may also be too late. The British Olympic Association has pressed for legislation of this nature for some years. When it first requested such legislation, there was a reasonable chance that the action it sought—a trademark infringement action in order to protect its use and exploitation of the Olympic symbol—would work.

In the past few years, however, there have been some attacks on that legal principle. I believe that the American organisers of the soccer World cup had great difficulty protecting the World cup symbol and sponsorships from deliberate, and often massive, infringements by international companies. Although this legislation is welcome, I hope that its promoter, my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton), will review with the Minister, the Government's Law Officers and the British Olympic Association the extent to which it can be made watertight. I fear that there are very strong and highly lucrative reasons for people to try to upset the Bill as soon as it passes into law.

Secondly, the Bill is one leg of a two-legged animal. As my hon. Friend said in introducing it, the Bill parallels powers that are already available in many other countries. Equally, many other countries have the power to claim tax relief for expenditure by sponsors and by Olympic associations in raising money for their teams. Such a power is not available in the United Kingdom.

For years, in Finance Bill and other debates, the Government have been pressed to give the tax relief that other countries find essential. Together with the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry), on an all-party basis I sought a meeting with a Treasury Minister on that concession. In view of what I am about to say, I shall not name him because he might immediately be sacked from the Cabinet, of which he is now a member. He said, "I am in favour in principle, but what chance do I have when the entire Cabinet pays obeisance to only one sport—cricket?"

We did not manage to secure that tax relief, but I hope that the interest generated by my hon. Friend's Bill will provide another chance. My hon. Friend, whose reputation for not entirely toeing the Government line is well known, may consider pursuing the issue in debates on future Finance Bills, as many others and I have done in the past. I wish the Bill well. I just wish that it had come earlier.

1.45 pm

Mr. Edward Garnier (Harborough): My hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) mentioned that his Bill has all-party support. The signatories to it range from senior parliamentarians, such as my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Sir T. Higgins), to the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Ms Hoey)—who is my Member of Parliament in London, and who, until not long ago, was shadow junior Minister for sport. The hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) competed in the Olympics, as did my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe).

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield on his good fortune in winning a high place in the ballot. He presented his Bill well, and it has the support of right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the House. The article in The House Magazine dated 23 January succinctly describes the purposes of his Bill, so I shall not detain the House by repeating his words.

My hon. Friend's Bill is supported by not only Back Benchers but the Government. On 12 December 1994, my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage welcomed the announcement by my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield of his intention to introduce a Bill to protect the commercial use of Olympic symbols. The Department acknowledged that it would allow the British Olympic Association exclusive rights to market the use of the Olympic rings and emblem, the motto "Citius, altius, fortius" and the words "Olympic", "Olympian" and "Olympiad".

My hon. Friend the Minister said:

"I fully support these measures to be introduced by Nicholas Winterton to protect the Olympic symbols. They will be of significant benefit to British athletes, and have been widely backed by sporting organisations and commercial businesses.

The proposed legislation will give the British Olympic Association exclusive rights to market the Olympic symbols. This will enable them to raise extra money through commercial royalties, which will be used to help elite sport. Athletes hoping to attend the next Olympic Games in Atlanta will be among the first to benefit."

The Bill has been given the overwhelming support of the House, and I am happy to count myself among those who have risen to speak in support of my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield. I should like to allay some of the fears raised by my hon. Friends the Members for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) and for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald).

My hon. Friend the Member for Hexham was worried about shops and businesses that used the words "Olympic" or "Olympiad" in their logos. I hope that I an not trespassing here on territory that my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield intends to cover. Clause 4(4) states:

> "In the case of a representation of a protected word, the Olympics association right is not infringed by use which is not such as ordinarily to create an association with—
> (a) the Olympic games or the Olympic movement, or
> (b) a quality ordinarily associated with the Olympic games or the Olympic movement."

I can fully appreciate that, on first reading that clause, members of the public might be confused, but careful study of the Bill puts it beyond doubt that pizza shops, butchers shops and even Olympic Airways would not be caught by it—so I draw that to their attention.

I hope that my hon. Friend's Bill will be given a fair wind and will soon pass into law.

1.51 pm

Mr. David Chidgey (Eastleigh): I shall try to be brief, so that we can get on. I congratulate the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on his Bill. My party is delighted to have among its members a well-known Olympian, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell), who, in his day, led the British Olympic team to some effect.

Perhaps many hon. Members share my view that sport has generally been rather poorly treated, so any attempts, such as the one in the Bill, to improve its status and to give it a leg up are most welcome. It needs investment particularly. The Bill is likely to benefit sport in that respect.

I understand that we are trying to protect the Olympic symbol and words from unauthorised commercial exploitation, and that the Bill gives the Secretary of State the right to grant the British Olympic Association the exclusive licence to exploit the symbols in question—an important step forward.

The United Kingdom is one of the few nations not to give statutory protection to the Olympic symbols. The BOA is one of the few Olympic committees not to receive Government funds. On both these fronts, I believe that the Bill will prove beneficial.

I agree with the hon. Member for Macclesfield that the Bill will give British sportsmen and women great encouragement, in the knowledge that Parliament wants them to go out and compete successfully on behalf of their country.

We must remove anything that disadvantages our Olympic movement, and that is why I welcome the Bill. The BOA does not benefit from Government funds; its ability to sustain the service that it gives to competitors depends chiefly on private sponsorship. It is, therefore, very important that we give the association the chance to use these protected symbols to generate sponsorship funds that will enable it to continue its important role. That role is to promote sport in our country.

On behalf of the Liberal Democrat party, I welcome the Bill, and wish it every success in its remaining stages.

1.54 pm

Mr. Michael Fabricant (Mid-Staffordshire): I shall briefly speak in support of the Bill, which was so ably and robustly introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton). I shall not speak for long, primarily because it is important that we debate the Protection of Calves (Export) Bill. I look forward to hearing what the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) has to say. My second reason for not speaking at length is that I am suffering from a pretty bad cold. I would not be able to speak for very long, even if I wanted to do so.

I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield has, among his supporters, five members of the Select Committee on the National Heritage. Although my name does not appear in the list of supporters, as a member of that Select Committee I wish very much to give my support to the Bill, which on the whole is an excellent measure.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) talked about the Olympic spirit. I agree that that spirit or ideal is to be admired. It would be fallacious, however, if we were to say that it has always been achieved. I remind hon. Members of the nadir that it reached in 1936, with the racist Berlin Olympics. We spoke earlier of the use of the Olympic symbol in films. What could have been more perverse than the Leni Riefenstahl film, "Triumph of the Will", which purported to suggest that the Olympic games somehow supported the Nazi idea of racism? I remind hon. Members of the various boycotts, including of the Los Angeles and Moscow games. We all remember, of course, the massacre of Israeli athletes at the Munich games.

Last Friday, I attended a Cambridge Union debate. It had nothing to do with sport, but I met an historian from Cambridge university who proposed an interesting thesis. He suggested that, in 100, 200 or 300 years' time, Britain would be remembered for two great achievements. He discounted the British empire and scientific achievements, but thought that Britain would be remembered for the spread of the English language and the creation of so many sports that are played throughout the world.

Although we have invented international games such as football and tennis, we have not shown an ability to win them. It is primarily for that reason that I support the Bill. I am aware that in my constituency there are inadequate sums available for the training and travel of athletes who could reach international status.

An athlete called Spencer Duval recently won the British cross-country championships. I hope that he will be taking part in the Olympic games in 1996. I know his family well because, apart from any other reason, his father, Derrick Duval, is the chairman of my local Conservative association. Spencer has had to train in the United States and the United Kingdom. He needs sponsorship, which he is given to some extent. It is clear that the difficulties that he faces are shared by other athletes in the United Kingdom.

Relatively small countries such as the former East Germany experienced success in capturing Olympic awards. That tells us that it is possible, when money is available and there is sufficient will, to become a world leader in international sports. At present, apart perhaps from athletics, Britain is far from a world leader in sports, despite the fact that many sports that are played at the Olympic games were first developed in the United Kingdom.

I support the Bill. I believe that it will help to create additional moneys for the training of British athletes. I hope that the moneys will be used wisely and I should be interested to know whether my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield has had any information from the British Olympic Association as to how they will be used. Are we going to set up training camps—if that is the correct term—for British athletes to enable them to start winning the gold, silver and bronze medals that Britain deserves to win at the Olympic games? I wish the Bill well and commend it to the House.

1.59 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage (Mr. Iain Sproat): I begin by congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on his tremendous hard work, diligence and persistence. The impressive list of right hon. and hon. Members who are supporting him is a tribute to his hard work and the contents of this important Bill.

I shall first give a few background details of the Bill, with which the House should be familiar and which it is important to place on the record, and then deal with some of the points that have been made.

Parliament will be aware of the historic significance and resonance of the Olympic symbols, the five interlocking Olympic rings, the motto of the Olympic movement, citius, altius, fortius, and the terms "Olympic", "Olympian" and "Olympiad" in world sport. No property exists in the Olympic symbol and its associated terms which, used on their own, are in the public domain and no persons have any copyright or other tangible or intangible commercial property in the symbols per se, although they may have property in an original work, design or trade mark incorporating the symbols.

It is thus possible for anyone to use the unadorned symbols on their own. Applications to register a trademark or design containing the symbols are accepted if they are part of a wider design and not passed off as goods or services that might be used in or associated with the Olympic games.

The British Olympic Association is responsible for promoting the Olympic movement in the United Kingdom. It is a company limited by guarantee, established in accordance with the principles of the Olympic charter and its constitution is approved by the International Olympic Committee. The BOA owns and licenses trademarks that incorporate the Olympic rings together with the representation of the Union Jack. Companies sponsoring the British Olympic team, for example, are given the right to use the trademark for marketing purposes. None of the marks, however, has the same impact or marketability as the instantly recognisable five-ring symbol and associated terms.

The properties associated with the five-ring symbol and associated terms derive entirely from their association with the Olympic movement. The Government support the Bill, which would ensure that the benefit of the commercial use of the properties should be restricted to businesses responsible for supporting the Olympic movement and the British Olympic team.

The extra funding derived from the marketing rights to the Olympic symbols in the United Kingdom will enable the BOA, which depends entirely on the private sector for funding, to develop further sporting excellence in Britain and help ensure the continuing success of British participants in the Olympic games.

The debate about protecting the Olympic symbols in the United Kingdom dates back to 1981 when the Nairobi treaty, under the auspices of the World Intellectual Property Organisation—a United Nations agency—vested the rights of the Olympic symbols in the International Olympic Committee. The Government have not signed the treaty and are reluctant to do so, as they consider it more appropriate for United Kingdom legislation to vest the rights in a United Kingdom body.

That is accepted by the International Olympic Committee and, in addition to conferring the benefits already described, the proposed legislation would honour a commitment made by the Government to the international Olympic Committee in the course of the unsuccessful Manchester Olympic bid to regulate the use of Olympic symbols in the United Kingdom. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield, because, if the Bill is passed, he will have enabled the British Government to fulfil their pledge.

I am sure that we would all agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield that the British Olympic team should be as well prepared as possible. He also said, quite accurately, that the British Olympic Association does not receive any Government funding. Indeed, it does not even receive resources such as free accommodation. Other bodies associated with elite athletes, such as the Sports Aid Foundation, receive accommodation free from the Sports Council.

It is worth reminding the House that although, as I think the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) said, it is not possible for the BOA to claim lottery funding for individual athletes, which would breach the revenue regulations of the lottery, the BOA is perfectly able to apply for lottery funding for a project, which could be mainly capital in nature, but have a revenue tail that may, in some way, be used to help our athletes. Therefore, although the form of words used my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield was entirely accurate, it is perhaps useful to remind the BOA and other organisations interested in the Olympics that, in certain circumstances, they may gain access to lottery funds.

The main point of the Bill, as my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield explained so well, is that the BOA will receive funds for the licensing of the Olympic symbols and associated words, which it will be able to use to support our athletes. It is absolutely vital to support, protect and guarantee the protection of the symbols to enable the BOA to help athletes.

I am sure that, you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will be interested to hear that the British Amateur Rugby League Association had not been asked whether it would support the Bill. I am also sure, as my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield said, that it would have supported the Bill had it been asked. You, Mr. Deputy Speaker, may also like to know that last night I was told that rugby league may figure in the Sydney Olympics in 2000. If it were true, I am sure that both of us would look to forward rugby league, the most popular form of football in Sydney, being played there.

My hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield said in his able speech that the Bill had the strong support of the Department of National Heritage, which is true. We very much hope that the House will give the Bill a Second Reading.

My hon. Friend was asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Stamford and Spalding (Mr. Davies) whether the Bill applied to Northern Ireland. As my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield said, it does indeed apply to Northern Ireland. Incidentally, the Government are about to set up a United Kingdom Sports Council that covers the whole of the United Kingdom and, for the first time, Northern Ireland will be part of such a body.

Rather curiously—I know not for what reason—Northern Ireland is not part of the current Sports Council in Great Britain. Northern Ireland will not only be covered by my hon. Friend's Bill, but will be part of what I hope will be an extremely important body for the promotion of sport in this country.

The hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green paid a generous tribute, which we would all wish to join, to the late Fred Perry. I believe that Mr. Perry's father was a Labour Member of Parliament, which the hon. Lady refrained from mentioning. Fred Perry was a great British sportsman and it is fitting that the House of Commons should pay tribute to him. The hon. Lady asked whether the British Olympic Association could claim lottery funding for individual athletes, and no doubt she will read Hansard for the answer.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) gave an extremely interesting history of the Olympic movement, which I will read later to catch up on any of the historical details that I might have missed. He said that some might claim—although he would not—that the Bill might be regarded as censorship because it stopped others from using the Olympic symbol. However, as my hon. Friend said, it is important to emphasise that it should not be regarded as censorship. It involves the protection of a legitimate symbol and it is akin to trade marks. No one would suggest that trade marks legislation was censorship. It is important to understand that the strong purpose of the Bill is to provide funds for our athletes.

Mr. Ken Livingstone (Brent, East): Like everyone, I am in favour of the Bill. I have just returned to the Chamber having checked the definition of infringement. The Minister will be aware that there is often great controversy about the Olympics. For example, I seem to recall that campaigners against the Moscow Olympics wore printed tee-shirts that carried the Olympic symbol and the words, "Don't go to Moscow." Would such a genuine expression of political opinion or the use of the Olympic symbol in a controversial cartoon leave people open to prosecution?

Mr. Sproat: The hon. Gentleman makes an important point. No doubt it is a matter that lawyers would like to consider. However, as neither the hon. Gentleman nor I am a lawyer, I share the expression on his face. That point can be answered in more detail in Committee. I would have thought that there would be a case to answer although frivolous cases, as the hon. Gentleman will be aware from his study of the Bill, have a remedy.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: I want to intervene quickly to help the House, and the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) in particular. The legislation seeks to stop commercial exploitation. As the promoter of the Bill, I believe that where people produce something for a specific campaign, they would continue to have the right to do so, but if they sought to make lots of money, that would be a complication. Knowing the hon. Member for Brent, East as I do, I suspect that he is involved more in campaigns than in commercial exploitation.

Mr. Sproat: I dare say that that is roughly right. However, we have all known good campaigns that have fallen into the hands of people who wanted to make money out of them. In those circumstances, the use of tee-shirts referred to by the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) could fall foul of the Bill. However, we can pursue that matter at greater length on another occasion.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern), in another scholarly intervention on the already scholarly speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield, referred to the Spartans using drugs at one of the early Olympics. I was not aware of that. I would be very interested to learn—although not now—exactly what drugs were used in those days.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West raised an extremely important point about drugs, and to few sports are they more important than to the Olympic games. Government agencies, through the Sports Council and the sports councils in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, spend more than £900,000 a year on combating drugs. The British Government are absolutely determined to stamp out cheating through the use of drugs in international sport. The methods we use are respected around the world. When I was in Australia last week, I visited the Australian sports drugs agency, where people told me how much they admired our attempt to stamp out drugs in the Olympics and other sports.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) made a point that exercised several hon. Members. He asked whether the use of the words "Olympic" and "Olympian" or the use of the symbol in matters of general trade is banned by the Bill? He referred very fairly to several businesses, including pizza parlours, butchers, garages and restaurants which have called themselves "Olympic". It is not the intention of the Bill to ban such genuine commercial use of the word "Olympic". Those who have been using the word "Olympic" or the symbol for years past will not be banned by the Bill. It is important that the point that my hon. Friend rightly made is answered authoritatively.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) made the important point that one consequence of the Bill will be not only to raise money for the British Olympic Association that can be used to fund British athletes at the Olympic Games—that is clearly the main point of the Bill, and hon. Members have supported it—but, as a by-blow, to help to guarantee that goods associated with the Olympics and that have the Olympic symbol on them will be of reasonably high quality.

[Mr. Sproat]

The hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green used the word "spivs". We do not want the Olympic games to be associated with such a trade, nor do we want tacky goods. The BOA will have to license the use of symbols to those who wish to use them to promote their goods. The BOA will ensure that its goods or services are of a suitably high standard. That is another extremely important benefit of the Bill.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) referred to Cartier watches and having the name "Cartier" put on other watches, and how that defrauded Cartier of money. I am sure that that is correct. The Bill would prevent exactly such cheating.

My hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen), in his brief intervention, talked about the great importance of support for sport in general for young people. He will know that we have recently restructured sports councils. As I mentioned in passing, we are about to set up a United Kingdom Sports Council, and we are about to set up an English sports council. It is an oddity—we have never before had an English or United Kingdom sports council.

The particularly relevant point is that we have specifically said that a place will be specifically reserved on the United Kingdom and English sports councils for somebody representing Olympic sport. We will obviously reserve places for non-Olympic amateur sport—for professional sport. I hope that the House will agree that that shows the importance that we place on Olympic sport and that it supports and complements the debate.

My hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham also said that he approved any method by which a legitimate increase in funding by commercial methods could be brought about. The Bill is clearly such a method. The national lottery allows us to add further support to our Olympic challenges—if we can find ways to obtain lottery funds for capital projects to help our Olympic athletes, I am sure that it will be possible to do just that.

Such lottery funding will be able to work hand in hand with the money that will arise from use of the Olympic symbols. My hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham rightly pointed to the tremendous surge in national pride when our athletes do well, whether at cricket, as my hon. Friend mentioned, or in the Olympic Games. To achieve those victories, of course, we must ensure that our athletes are properly supported, and the Bill certainly makes an important start in providing that support.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I note that the Minister has now spoken for 20 minutes, and that a number of his colleagues—including the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald), the parliamentary private secretary to the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—spoke at length. Will the Minister tell us whether he also intends to talk out this Bill?

Mr. Sproat: What an extraordinary intervention. Of course I have no intention of doing so. I have made it clear that I support the Bill. Many hon. Members have sat through the entire debate on the Bill, and to be respectful to them and to the House I shall answer every speech that has been made. There were a number of speeches to which, although I will not take too long, I intend to reply courteously.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West said that, although he supported the Bill, it was a Bill too late. I hope that he is wrong. I take his point that, during the World cup, there were a number of what might seem to the layman as alleged abuses of the copyright of World cup symbols. Companies will have learnt from the way in which they felt cheated when, having paid good fees to become sponsors of the World cup, they found that competitors in their own market sector were finding a way of muscling their way in. I very much hope that the Bill will help to make matters better, and that we will not see that sort of thing in the forthcoming Olympic games.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) quoted my press release of 12 December, which correctly stated that I was strongly in favour of the measure. The Department of National Heritage and the Government are strongly in favour of the Bill. My hon. Friend also confirmed—in a more legalistic way—the entire accuracy of the fact that shops, butchers, pizza parlours and restaurants should not be worried by the measure.

The hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) spoke for the Liberal Democrats in the regrettable absence of the former great Olympic athlete, his hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell). The hon. Gentleman gave his support to the Bill. My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Fabricant), speaking as a member of the National Heritage Select Committee, also gave his support.

I do not think that anybody in the House felt that the Bill should not be supported, although one or two hon. Members felt that points might arise later in Committee that will be worth going into. With those few brief words of general support for the Bill, I commend it to the House.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: With permission, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I shall respond briefly to the debate. I thank all those, on both sides of the House, who have spoken in favour of the Bill. I do not want to name those hon. Members, because it would take too long

I hope that the concerns that my hon. Friends the Members for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) and for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald) expressed were dealt with, not only by the ministerial response and one of my interventions but by the helpful advice given by my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier).

I welcome the House's support, especially that of the hon. Members for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) and for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey). It is tremendous to have such positive support, and I commend the Bill to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time.

Question put, That the Bill be committed to a Committee of the whole House:—

The House proceeded to a Division:

Mr. Stephen (seated and covered): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I seek your guidance on whether there is any way in which time can be found today for hon. Members who wish to support the Protection of Calves (Export) Bill to speak.

Mr. Elliot Morley (Glanford and Scunthorpe) (seated and covered): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for hon. Members who participated in the debate, but did not express their opposition to the Olympic Symbol etc. (Protection) Bill, to call a vote to waste time and interfere with other hon. Members when the whole House is anxious to deal with the next Bill in the time remaining?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It may not be desirable, but it is perfectly in order.

Mr. Mike O'Brien (Warwickshire, North) (seated and covered): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. You will note that a Minister said that the Government support the Bill, yet a parliamentary private secretary has gone through the Noes Lobby. I think that that should be noted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a not a point of order for the Chair.

The House having divided: Ayes 48, Noes 0.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do immediately resolve itself into a Committee on the Bill.—[Mr. Nicholas Winterton.]

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection taken. Committee what day?

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Friday 10 February, Sir.

PROTECTION OF CALVES (EXPORT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 10 February.

Mr. Eric Martlew (Carlisle): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for a Cabinet Minister—the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—to send his parliamentary private secretary to the House to organise a filibuster to block my private Member's Bill? Is that not contempt of the House?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is quite in order; otherwise I should have ruled it out of order.

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We have just witnessed what many hon. Members, irrespective of their party, believe to be a shambles. There was clearly a great deal of support for the Olympic Symbol etc. (Protection) Bill. Will you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, bring the matter to Madam Speaker's attention on Monday? She, like you, looks after the interests of Back Benchers and should be made aware of what has happened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I assure the hon. Gentleman that Madam Speaker will not have to wait until Monday.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. As the Bill has just been carried with no votes against it and it was well noted yesterday that it had the support of every party in the House and was likely to be nodded through in a few seconds, is it not disgraceful that the Tory Government—the Whips and all the rest—have put a gag on our people who wanted to talk about the export of calves? They did so when millions of people in Britain are protesting about it. That shows up the Government for what they are—it stinks to high heaven—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order for the Chair, and the hon. Gentleman knows it.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for an hon. Member to make a totally unsubstantiated allegation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have finished with bogus points of order.

Mrs. Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry—I call Mrs. Clwyd.

Mrs. Clwyd: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I rise to ask your guidance on a matter of great concern to many people in south Wales. I should normally have made my point of order under Standing Order No. 20 but, as you know, I am precluded from doing so on a Friday.

The reason for my point of order is the casualty department in the Prince Charles hospital in Merthyr, which is a matter of concern to my hon. Friend the Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) and me. Its patients have been told not to go to the casualty department because of a shortage of doctors. The casualty rota for the next few days has blank spaces, which means that there are no doctors on duty. May we have a statement on the subject next week?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a matter for the Chair, but I am sure that the those sitting on the Front Bench will have taken notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Wednesday 8th February, the Speaker shall—

(1) put the Questions on the Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Redwood relating to Local Government Finance (Wales) not later than Seven o'clock; and

(2) put the Questions on the Motions in the name of Secretary Sir Patrick Mayhew relating to the draft Children (Northern Ireland) and Children (Northern Ireland Consequential Amendments) Orders not later than Ten o'clock.—[Mr. Wells.]

Contemporary Leisure plc

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Wells.]

2.40 pm

Mr. Mike Gapes (Ilford, South): I wish to raise today a serious issue which has implications for local government nationally and for standards of behaviour—[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse): Order. The hon. Gentleman is on his feet. I call Mr. Gapes.

Mr. Gapes: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The debate also has implications for standards of behaviour in public life. In 1988, the Conservative Government introduced the Local Government Act 1988 which forced local authorities to put out their contracts for leisure services to competitive tender by 1 January 1993. That move is now being followed by steps to force white collar and professional jobs out to compulsory competitive tender.

A number of companies were set up—many of them by former or serving local authority staff—explicitly to compete for those leisure management contracts. One such company was Contemporary Leisure, which was originally incorporated on 4 December 1989 as Leicester Ltd., a shelf company. Its directors were David James Bryant, the former director of leisure of Westminster city council and director of leisure of Leicester city council, and Thomas Kiernan, who was the area manager of recreation services for the London borough of Camden until early 1990.

On 26 February 1990, Leicester Ltd. changed its name to Contemporary Leisure. In September 1990, Bryant and Kiernan were joined as directors by Douglas Stewart, the director of leisure at Hackney council. As the BBC "File on Four" programme revealed on 31 January 1995, while Stewart was still the director of leisure at Hackney and a director of Contemporary Leisure, Contemporary Leisure did paid consultancy work for a company called Whitewater—Britain's own Whitewater scandal—and Hackney council gave Whitewater a contract for the refurbishment of the Kings Hall leisure centre. Publicity material released by Contemporary Leisure in an attempt to gain local government contracts mentioned that Whitewater Leisure Ltd. was one of its clients.

On 18 June 1990, the shareholders of Contemporary Leisure were listed as Douglas Stewart, with 94 ordinary and 3,900 preference shares; Tom Kiernan, with 94 ordinary and 3,900 preference shares; and Robert Hulbert with 95 ordinary and 3,900 preference shares. At that time, Mr. David Bryant had 15 ordinary shares which by 1992 had increased to 110 ordinary shares, with 3,900 non-preference shares and 34,000 preference shares.

The "File on Four" programme revealed this week that Robert Hulbert was deputy director of leisure at Glasgow city council at the same time as he was a shareholder of Contemporary Leisure, but he did not declare that interest. It was also revealed how in 1991 Contemporary Leisure had attempted to get contracts from Bolton council by deception and had falsely claimed to have contracts with Erewash council and Glasgow council. Mr. Hulbert was subsequently sacked by Glasgow city council for gross misconduct over the matter.

Within three months, Mr. Hulbert was working for Contemporary Leisure under the false name of John Smith. However, Mr. Hulbert's association with Contemporary Leisure was to prove embarrassing for the company, because it raised concerns among other local authorities with which the company hoped to win contracts, and Mr. Hulbert was later bought out. The 1993 accounts of Contemporary Leisure reveal that the profit of the group before exceptional items of taxation was £77,519. The footnote revealed a payment of £95,000 as an exceptional item, giving an overall loss of £17,481. That exceptional item was an "ex gratia settlement agreed to be paid to a former employee and related professional expenses."

That employee was Robert Hulbert.

The accounts revealed also a net cash inflow of £428,000 and a net cash outflow of £685,000, leaving a £235,000 deficit that had to be financed by issuing £102,000 in shares and a new £100,000 bank loan. Mr. Hulbert's departure and the earlier departure of Douglas Stewart, the three directors in 1994 were David Bryant, Thomas Christopher Kiernan and Charles Michael Bartholomew, who was appointed on 24 June 1992.

In 1994, a fourth director listed was Moneytime Ltd.—an investment company with 15 shareholders that owned 41,000 shares in Contemporary Leisure in 1994.

The company, using its network of contacts, worked hard to win local government leisure contracts. By 1993, it had won contracts to manage leisure facilities for Three Rivers district council, the London borough of Redbridge and for Croydon, Bournemouth and Kingston upon Thames. It also won contracts for ground maintenance with Bromley and Elmbridge, and a catering contract in Bath. It expanded into managing the Harlow theatre and the Tropicana swimming baths in Weston super Mare owned by Woodspring council. It even set its eyes on growth in Canada, where it won a contract.

The company had big plans to diversify into activities in which it claimed "expertise"—ground maintenance, theatre management, leisure developments and management of leisure facilities overseas. In the company's 1993 annual report, its chairman, David Bryant, stated:

"Within three years the company has made remarkable progress. It has gone from four employees to over 1,000, moved from a loss of £20,000 to an operating profit in leisure management in the UK of £122,000, achieved an annualised turnover of over £15 million, is a significant investor in leisure facilities, has great financial stability and is probably the largest unlisted leisure management company in Great Britain. The company is now medium sized and international. The achievement was marked by Contemporary Leisure becoming a plc."

Within a few months, the company was in serious trouble.

Cash flow problems mounted. There were discussions with a number of councils to reschedule payments over the winter of 1993-94. Mr. Hulbert's association with the company was ended. Complaints started about high chlorine levels and algae in Redbridge swimming baths, smelly changing rooms, the pools being too cold, run-down supplies and lack of cleaning materials. Staff in Croydon had to use a cash-and-carry to buy in bulk because they could not obtain items from the company. Redbridge council had to step in twice to force the company to bring the pool up to scratch following complaints from local swimming clubs.

The company's association with the London borough of Redbridge—my local authority—began in 1991. The then ruling Conservative group agreed to put the management of the council's three swimming pools out to competition for a six-year contract. Contractors were invited to tender on 18 March 1991. Four companies, including the council's direct services organisation, registered an interest.

Under the relevant legislation, Redbridge was required to allow all tenders, even if they were considered unsuitable. In the event, only two bids were received. City Centre Leisure and Saxon Moore Leisure did not submit tenders. An internal tender evaluation was carried out by council officers. The lower tender, of £654,000, was received from Contemporary Leisure. The other tender was from the council's own direct services organisation—involving no redundancies—and was £142,000 more expensive, coming in at £796,000.

Contemporary Leisure was, according to the evaluation exercise, a newly established company with only two weeks' experience of running leisure facilities. When it was inspected by council officers, it had no track record. The official report entered a great many caveats and warnings, yet the Conservative group on Redbridge council voted to give the tender to Contemporary Leisure. The minutes record the Labour group's opposition to the decision.

The council hoped to save a great deal of money, but it recognised in its documents that the exercise would cost it £101,000 in redundancy payments in the first year. In the long term, however, it thought that there would be savings. Because of the subsequent problems, those savings have turned to dust.

The following year, Contemporary Leisure won the contract in Redbridge for the management of the golf course, again pipping the direct services organisation, whose bid came in second of the many that were received. Redundancy notices were issued to local employees, as was a six-year contract.

In Redbridge, things seemed fine for a few months, but by January 1994 the company was getting behind with its payments. Redbridge was owed a considerable amount of money, and the company was calling for a rescheduling of payments through the winter to try to deal with its cash flow problems.

It was agreed at the initiative of the then chair of the recreation committee, Councillor Hyams, that that could be done; but by September 1994 it had become clear to many people in Redbridge council that the losses being made on the golf contract were undermining the company and that there were still problems with the swimming pools. Urgent discussions were held, and by November it was clear to Redbridge council—it had already become clear to a number of other councils, including Croydon, which had already made representations as early as August 1994 to the Department of the Environment—that things with Contemporary Leisure were going very badly wrong.

When Redbridge contacted the Department of the Environment for advice on what to do, the council hoped that the Department would move quickly. Regrettably, at that stage it did not, although DOE officials have been helpful in this matter to a number of councils in recent weeks. I wish, however, to register my concern that there was no early action before the company collapsed and was put in the hands of the administrator.

These councils were concerned about protecting their staff, their services and their facilities—swimming baths, golf courses, and so on—but under the 1988 Act it appeared that they would have to shut down those operations and cut their services. That is why they urged the Department to take action before Contemporary Leisure went under. That did not happen. On 5 December, the High Court placed an order on the company, and an administrator was appointed. The company's employees in Redbridge and elsewhere were written to and told that they were being made redundant.

This traumatic event caused enormous anguish for people in the run-up to Christmas. Then, my local authority and others had to try to see what could be done to resolve this problem. My council found the situation worse than it had feared. Redbridge council expects to have to pay up to £200,000 this financial year to sort out the mess. It had to pay unpaid wages to many of the workers of Contemporary Leisure. It faced possible liability for bills to utilities which had not been paid by Contemporary Leisure. It has discovered that stocks of cleaning materials, toilet rolls and other items had been run down by the company throughout the period that it had been in control.

Redbridge, like other authorities, had a bond, but it is not clear whether the bond will be sufficient to meet the costs that the authority faces. At a time when it faces cuts in its standard spending assessment and a potential £8 million to £10 million deficit over the next year necessitating cuts in services and an increased council tax, the authority is being hit by a company set up by the former director of leisure of Westminster council, which, ironically, is benefiting from its SSA, while Redbridge is being punished.

Councils thought about withdrawing from contracts. However, if they had withdrawn early, they would have lost their bonds. Many councils got together as early as the autumn of 1993. A Contemporary Leisure users' group was set up to co-ordinate the position of councils that had problems with the company.

Contemporary Leisure thought that it could escape from the problem. It started to approach local authorities to propose an alternative. Mr. Bryant had been the director of leisure at Westminster council in the mid-1980s. The assistant director at that time was Roger Bottomley. Both men were intimately involved in the affairs of Westminster council in the 1980s. Bottomley, like Bryant and some others in local government, had seen the opportunities open to councils through compulsory competitive tendering. With a number of Westminster colleagues and others, they set up a company called City Centre Leisure to launch an in-house bid for Westminster's leisure contracts. They were successful in getting one of them and the other was won by a small company called Civic Leisure.

City Centre Leisure subsequently lost its Westminster contract, which meant that it was looking for new work. To meet the problems of the ex-Westminster director of leisure, David Bryant, and his company Contemporary Leisure, and given the potential of City Centre Leisure, being run by his deputy, Mr. Roger Bottomley, Mr. Bryant proposed that City Centre Leisure should take over the contracts of a number of local authorities that had been previously won by Contemporary Leisure.

As Leisure Week revealed in its issue of 18 November to 1 December 1994, City Centre Leisure eventually decided to pull the plug on the arrangement. It was not able to deal with the possible start-up costs that would be incurred; in any event, many local authorities were extremely unhappy at the proposal.

Difficulties are being faced throughout the country. Thirteen local authorities and thousands of employees have faced difficulties, insecurity and financial loss. There are some people who face the prospect of losing a great deal of money. That is all because of legislation that enables CCT to apply to leisure services. Is it a one-off problem or is the Minister going to tell us that the difficulties are due to over-stretch and bad management within a particular company?

We need some assurances from the Government. Will the Minister recognise the need to change their position on companies that default on their contracts? Will he assist councils that are left to pick up the pieces? There is no provision for default by notice, but companies can default by termination of a contract, leaving terrible problems.

When are the Government going to table the exemption orders for Redbridge, Croydon and the other authorities which they need legally to do what they have had to do to pick up the pieces? Under the present legislation, the authorities have to re-tender the contracts, presumably next year. Will the Minister allow Redbridge the time needed for the negotiations between the political groups about the re-tendering process in an authority with no overall control? What plans does he have to prevent this happening in other forms of CCT?

Above all, will the Minister refer the issue of CCT in local government to the Nolan committee? There are serious questions to be asked about the role of people working for private companies while still serving, or immediately after having served, as local government officers. Does he agree that there should be no provision to allow shareholding or the acceptance of directorships or consultancies by senior local government officers in or with any company in a related sphere subjected to CCT? What is good for the ministerial goose is good for the local government gander. Many of us are concerned about the way in which CCT has developed. There is a whiff of corruption and some form of local government mafia. I should be grateful for some ministerial reassurance.

3 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Robert B. Jones): The hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) has raised a number of issues and put me under some pressure of time to reply, but I shall do my best. He has anticipated at least part of what I was going to say, in that the collapse of Contemporary Leisure or any private contractor does not discredit compulsory competitive tendering any more than it would discredit the competition process generally.

It is a fact of commercial life that companies come and go. In this instance, the failure of Contemporary Leisure seems to have occurred because of the particular management of the company. It had entered into unfavourable contracts and over-stretched its resources. I noted what the hon. Gentleman said about the company's circumstances and, if he has reason to believe that there has been any improper behaviour or fraud, he should refer the evidence to the police.

As for the general temptations of local government officers, there are already adequate safeguards against corrupt dealings between them and private contractors. It is illegal for officers not to declare a pecuniary interest in contracts, and the safeguards would be necessary whether or not tendering was compulsory.

Of course, other companies, those which are competent and competitive, remain active in local government CCT. Most CCT contractors, whether private sector or in-house, operate without serious problems, providing quality services and value for money.

It is extremely important to keep the collapse of Contemporary Leisure in perspective. First, only a handful of local authority contractors have folded or withdrawn since CCT began. Secondly, council in-house teams are themselves not immune from commercial pressures and the consequences of mismanagement; nor should they be. They operate under financial constraints and have to meet a statutory financial objective.

They sometimes fail to do so, and I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will be aware that, if an authority does not deal promptly with the financial problems of a direct organisation, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State can use, and has used, his powers to intervene. Intervention can take the form of a direction requiring work to be re-tendered or even for the authority to cease carrying out the activity.

There are certainly lessons to be drawn from Contemporary Leisure's demise about how authorities should go about putting work out to tender. They should not be going blindly into arrangements with contractors but should, as a matter of course, be protecting themselves against possible failures by assessing the financial health of tenderers. They should also investigate the resourcing of contractors' bids, and contractors in turn should be open to reasonable requests to justify the details of their proposals.

It is a misconception that CCT requires authorities to accept the lowest bid, regardless of whether it would deliver the service described in the specification. It is true to say that authorities need specific and well-founded reasons if they are going to reject the lowest bid. Quality is an important consideration, especially in the management of sports and leisure facilities, and I accept that authorities will want to have regard to that factor in assessing bids. Any authority may wish to reject a bid that fails to meet the specification or is from a company in an unsustainable financial position.

If, despite those precautions, a service provider collapses, it can, of course, lead to difficulties, especially when the service is high profile, provided directly to the public. Some authorities affected by Contemporary Leisure's collapse have been able to assign the work to other private contractors. Others have had to bring the work in-house while the contracts are being re-tendered.

My Department has co-operated with those authorities to legitimise their position by arranging an order exempting them from the CCT regime. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for what he said about the co-operation of officials. We are proposing to exempt nine authorities affected by the collapse, until the end of March next year, which is ample time for re-tendering.

My officials were in touch with the affected authorities when Contemporary Leisure's difficulties were first apparent. They made clear to them that if the company withdrew from contracts any application for a temporary exemption from CCT, pending re-tendering, would be treated sympathetically. Within a matter of days of the Department's being told that contracts with Contemporary Leisure had been terminated, we wrote to the authorities telling them that Ministers were minded to make an order in their favour—the so-called letter of comfort. Procedures are now in motion for making the formal exemption order.

Under present legislation, an authority would be acting ultra vires if it undertook work without first having exposed it to competition, even if it takes the work on temporarily while re-running the tender exercise. A specific exemption order is needed from the Secretary of State to legitimise a council's position. Further legislation would be needed if authorities were to bring services back in-house temporarily without the Secretary of State's sanction in circumstances such as the financial collapse of a contractor or his total failure to perform to specification. I would certainly be prepared to consider such a change, but I would need to be satisfied that any new provision would not be misused so that, for example, an authority overlooked satisfactory arrangements with an alternative private sector provider in their haste to bring the work back in-house.

Councils in any case should routinely make plans for dealing with contingencies. Also, if appropriate, they should ensure that they are safeguarded against any possible financial loss by arranging for the contractor to enter into a performance bond. Authorities adopt those safeguards as a matter of course.

The authorities who have brought Contemporary Leisure's work back in-house can do so only for a short time because the CCT legislation requires them to put the work out to tender again. The authorities should seize the opportunity for advantages in that process. There are some 15 or so private sector companies known to be in the field who may be keen to bid—indeed, there may be more. My Department has commissioned an analysis of potential markets in certain service areas and its main conclusion is that firms bidding for local authority contracts are only a small proportion of firms that are capable of bidding. Authorities can only gain from taking steps to maximise competition.

The authorities have an opportunity to review and update specifications and to encourage imaginative approaches. They should not let their experience with Contemporary Leisure deter them from looking closely at what the private sector can offer. It is open to authorities to make arrangements direct with private contractors and there are examples of authorities doing so. On the other hand, there is nothing in the present legislation preventing authorities from inviting bids from the private sector which involve some investment in facilities as well as the provision of a management service. If private contractors want a longer contract period in which to recoup their investment than is available under the contract in the legislation, a variation can be offered to them once a contract has been made.

[Mr. Robert B. Jones]

In the latter half of last year, my Department issued several consultation papers dealing with various aspects of the guidance on competition procedure, including the length of contract periods and the use of performance bonds. I am aware that some sports and leisure contractors are particularly keen to have extended contract periods for their activity.

I am pleased to say that we received a very good level of response to our consultation exercise and my Department will be making amended regulations and revising the guidance currently included in circular 10/93. Where necessary, proposals will be subject to further consultation. The intention will be to consolidate the guidance available on CCT services by autumn 1995 and, wherever it makes sense, to bring into line the guidance on blue and white collar services.

I hope that the matter has been set in context for the hon. Gentleman and I hope that he will contribute his thoughts to the consultation process being undertaken. Meanwhile, I hope that my comments will be helpful to him and his council.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at nine minutes past Three o'clock.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Development of Tourism Act 1969

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to eliminate the anomaly whereby grants under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 are now suspended in relation to England but not the other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no plans to reinstate grants available under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 in England.

DEFENCE

Service Personnel

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the combat effectiveness of the armed forces requires discrimination on the grounds of sex or race.

Mr. Soames: Combat effectiveness does not require discrimination on the ground of race. Some areas of employment do, however, remain closed to service women, although the scope for extending the employment of women is under review. In order to maintain combat effectiveness, however, it is unlikely that the employment of women will be extended to all front line posts of the armed forces; such exclusions are consistent with national and European law.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table setting out the ethnic composition of the armed forces at each rank in the Army, the Navy and the Royal Air Force at the latest available date.

Mr. Soames: A breakdown of the ethnic composition of each of the armed forces will be published shortly. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House at that time.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of armed forces sexual harassment policies.

Mr. Soames: I shall arrange for a copy of the Army and Royal Air Force documents on sexual harassment to be placed in the Library of the House shortly. The Royal Navy's policy document is nearing completion and a copy will be placed in the Library when it has been finalised.

Household Cavalry

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the ethnic minorities are now serving in the Household Cavalry; and if he will make a statement on the progress that has been made following the investigation into recruitment practices by the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Soames: It is a basic principle of ethnic monitoring in the Army that individual privacy should be maintained and that statistical data should protect that privacy. Ethnic monitoring in the Army does not therefore distinguish the units to which individual soldiers and officers belong. The Commission for Racial Equality investigation is continuing. No findings have yet been notified to my Department.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing (a) the number and (b) percentage of women at each rank in the Army, Navy and Royal Air Force at the latest available date.

Mr. Soames: The information requested, as at 1 October 1994 the latest date for which information is available, is as follows:

Rank	Number of women in the rank	Percentage of women in the rank
Royal Naval Services
Commodore	1	2.4
Captain	5	1.4
Commander	16	1.3
Lieutenant Commander	65	2.5

Aircraftwoman	143	30.7

This information has been extracted from the quarterly tri-service statistical return, "tri-service personnel statistics 9", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Judicial Procedures

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken to ensure that court-martials and other judicial procedures within the armed forces comply with the terms of the convention for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Mr. Soames: Courts-martial and other judicial proceedings within the armed forces are provided for in the service discipline Acts approved regularly by Parliament. Their procedures are regarded as consistent with the convention for the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

European Common Foreign and Security Policy

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the progress of the European common foreign and security policy.

Mr. David Davis: I have been asked to reply.

The CFSP has been in operation for a little over a year. A number of common positions and joint actions have been agreed and implemented by EU member states on a range of international issues, including support for the middle east peace process; extending the non-proliferation treaty; promotion of the stability pact in Europe; election monitoring in South Africa and Russia; and humanitarian relief in Bosnia, most notably manpower and financial support for the EU administration of Mostar.

The CFSP is a relatively new tool: we are determined to use it to best effect. Already, EU member states are becoming accustomed to developing common approaches and dealing with complex and difficult international issues collectively. We welcome this progress: it is self-evidently in the interests of EU member states that they should be able to harness their collective weight in the international arena.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Joint Negotiating Machinery

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the operation of the joint negotiating machinery and Whitley Council agreements in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: Industrial relations machinery in the Northern Ireland civil service is covered by the Central Whitley Council for non-industrial civil servants and the Central Joint Consultative Council for industrial employees. Negotiation and consultation between management and trade unions also take place at departmental and local level where this is appropriate. These arrangements continue to work well.

I understand that the joint council machinery for health and personal social services staff is to be abolished from 1 April 1995. From that date, employers and staff organisations will negotiate locally the pay and other conditions of service of health and personal social services staff.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the resources element of the rate support grant allocated to district councils is calculated for the 1995–96 financial year; and what was the basis for the calculation in the 1994–95 financial year.

Mr. Moss: As there is no specific rate support grant in Northern Ireland, I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the general exchequer grant which is payable to district councils. There are two elements: derating and resources. The resources element is calculated by subtracting the derating element, which is statutory based, from the total relevant amount available in any one year and is distributed among councils using the set formula. This was the basis used for both the 1994–95 and 1995–96 financial years.

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he made to (a) the Irish Attorney-General, (b) his officials, (c) other Ministers in the then Irish Government and (d) officials in the Irish Government over delays in extraditing Brendan Smyth from Ireland at any time between (i) April 1993 and February 1994 and (ii) subsequently; to whom representations were made; what was the nature of those representations; and on what date or dates representations were made.

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 18 January 1995]: None.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what research he has conducted into allegations that the Government receive a greater sum from the Department of Social Security's benefit clawback scheme for legally aided litigants than they actually pay out in civil legal aid to those people; and if he will publish that research.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The compensation recovery unit of the Department of Social Security does not record whether a person who recovers compensation is legally aided. Accordingly, it cannot say how much of the unit's recovery is attributable to legally-aided cases. We are considering how this information might be collected.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what studies his Department has done into the crisis concerning the cash limiting of the civil legal aid budget in New South Wales in late 1992 and early 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I am aware of the cash limiting of the legal aid budget in New South Wales, and the consequences that this had.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has of the underspend on the legal aid budget for (a) civil legal aid and (b) criminal legal aid for the current financial year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The latest available projections suggest that the total net cost of legal aid will be about £1.310 billion in 1994–95, £95 million below provision. Of that total, net expenditure on civil legal aid will be around £604 million, £41 million below provision, and expenditure on criminal legal aid will be about £476 million, £15 million below provision. The remaining expenditure relates to advice and assistance and the duty solicitor schemes.

Sexual Harassment

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps are being taken to examine the implications of the decision of the Dover magistrates court not to hear the sexual harassment case brought by the Crown Prosecution Service on behalf of a British crew member on Stena Sealink's Fantasia ferry on the ground that the alleged incident occurred on a foreign registered vessel; and if he will make a statement in respect of United Kingdom citizens employed on foreign-flagged vessels.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I understand that the case was dismissed because the court was not satisfied it had the necessary territorial jurisdiction. In general, courts will have jurisdiction for an offence committed in territorial waters, on a British ship, or if the accused is a British subject. Where the offence is committed on the high seas, the matter is likely to fall within the jurisdiction of the country with which the ship is registered.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Beith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals against a refusal of asylum on safe third country grounds were made to the Immigration Appeals Authority in 1994; and how many of these appeals were dismissed by the special adjudicator.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: There were 763 appeals heard by the special adjudicators in 1994 where the Secretary of State had certified that the person's claim to asylum was without foundation. Four hundred and twelve of these appeals were dismissed by the special adjudicator under the special appeal procedures for claims without foundation. While these appeals included appeals against a refusal of asylum on safe third country grounds, the figures kept do not distinguish between the different types of cases within the overall category of those certified to be without foundation.

Mr. Bryce Taylor

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what sums of legal aid have so far been awarded to Mr. Bryce Taylor in respect of the action being taken against him by Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No payment has as yet been made from the legal aid fund in respect of the action between HRH the Princess of Wales and Mr. Bryce Taylor. The final cost to the legal aid fund will depend on the outcome of the case, and, if appropriate, any legal aid cost will be subject to taxation by the court.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Child Labour

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will discuss with high street retailers the practice of commissioning garments from suppliers who employ child labour in their fabrication.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Technology explained in his answer to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 19 January 1995, Official Report, column 592, goods produced by unacceptable labour practices are generally indistinguishable in appearance from the same type of goods produced by other means. Moreover, the varied and complex channels of production and their distribution mean that there are severe practical difficulties in identifying their origin.

The majority of high street retailers have stated that they would not knowingly source from suppliers whose garments have been manufactured using illegal child labour. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade would be prepared to discuss this issue when he next meets representatives of the retail industry.

British Gas (Complaints)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the trend of complaints against British Gas by gas consumers.

Mr. Eggar: The Gas Consumers Council is responsible for investigating consumer complaints and the Office of Gas Supply, Ofgas, is responsible for monitoring British Gas's activities as a public gas supplier. The number of complaints about British Gas received by these bodies in the last three years as follows:

	OFGAS	GCC
1992	1,624 (328)	25,280
1993	1,658 (329)	20,428
1994	2,192 (320)	24,359

Note: The figures in brackets represent the number of Ofgas complaints subsequently referred to the GCC. The GCC totals include those cases referred from Ofgas.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in the negotiations with United States authorities regarding proposals by British Nuclear Fuels plc to import radioactively contaminated nitric acid from the US Energy Department nuclear complex at Harford.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 1 November 1994, Official Report, column 1025.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the policy position set out by EC Energy Commissioner elect, Christos Papoutsis, during the confirmation hearings before the European Parliament on 9 January, in regard to the uneconomic status of recycled commercial plutonium for nuclear fuel and the attendant problems of safeguarding plutonium.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government's policy on the question of whether to reprocess or to seek alternative spent fuel management options is that this is a matter for the owners of the spent fuel.

With regard to the remarks referred to by the hon. Member, I am informed that Mr. Papoutsis made it clear at the time that he was speaking in a personal capacity.

Nuclear Review

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the conclusions of the nuclear review.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 19 October 1994, Official Report, column 239.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the matters discussed, and agreements reached, at the European Union negotiations with the United States Government in Washington on 10 to 12 January on the 10-year extension of the US-EURATOM nuclear co-operation agreement of 1959.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Negotiations are continuing between the European Commission and the United States aimed at developing a new agreement for nuclear co-operation to replace the existing agreement which is due to expire on 31 December 1995. A copy of the Commission's press release reporting the outcome of the latest negotiating round has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. It would be inappropriate to go into the details of the negotiations while talks continue.

Printing Industry (Paper Costs)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from the printing industry about changes in the cost of paper over the last 12 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received no direct representations from the printing industry. Ministers and officials in the Department have regular contact with the British Printing Industries Federation and are aware of the sector's concerns about paper price increase.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what studies his Department has made into the change in the costs of paper for the printing industry in the last 12 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Department is aware of the increase in paper prices over this period but has not made any specific studies into the subject.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the change in (a) the cost of paper for the printing industry, (b) the average cost of raw materials and (c) the average change in the cost of finished products over the last 12 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Price indices for raw materials purchased and for home sales by the printing and publishing industry can be obtained from the Central Statistical Office's "Business Monitor", MM22, tables 3 and 4, or alternatively from CSO's central shared database. Access to both is available in the Library of the House. Separate details for the cost of paper purchased by this industry are not available from official sources.

Barnsley and Doncaster (Exports)

Mr. Illesley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the value of exports from Barnsley and Doncaster to (a) European community countries, (b) European free trade area countries, (c) Arab League countries and (d) the rest of the world for the most recent period for which figures are available.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information is not available since the official statistics of trade of the United Kingdom are not compiled for individual regions within the UK.

British Gas (Killingworth)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment has been made of the impact on Newcastle university of the loss of research and development resources at British Gas, Killingworth.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that British Gas places research contracts with universities throughout the United Kingdom on the basis of their capabilities. The existing work programmes at Newcastle university will continue in accordance with the contracts and new proposals will be considered, along with those from other universities, in the same manner as before.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what offer of regional assistance was made to British Gas to retain employment for those persons who are employed at Killingworth.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No offer of regional selective assistance has been made to British Gas and no application for such assistance has been received.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current capacity of the United Kingdom's renewable energy supplies; what is his target for renewable generating capacity by the year 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The total electrical capacity of the United Kingdom's renewable energy supplies operational at the end of 1993 was estimated to be 1,749 MW DNC—declared net capacity—including 256.4 MW DNC of capacity under non-fossil fuel obligation arrangements.

The Government are working towards a figure of 1,500 MW DNC of new electricity generating capacity from renewable energy sources by the year 2000.

Figures are published annually in the "Digest of UK Energy Statistics".

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment has been made as to the impact of the closure of research and development facilities at Killingworth on developing technology and employment prospects in such technology within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that much of the work carried out at engineering research station at Killingworth will be transferred to the gas research centre at Loughborough. Appropriate equipment and facilities will be moved there and the research staff are being strongly encouraged to relocate. I understand that British Gas does not believe there will be an adverse impact on the prospects for developing technology or employment in such technology.

Nuclear Materials (Safeguards)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 11 January 1995, Official Report, columns 184-85, if he will update the total of notifications of withdrawal of nuclear materials from safeguards, indicating the uses to which the materials were put and whether any withdrawals were permanent.

Mr. Eggar: There have been four notifications of withdrawal of nuclear material from safeguards since my answer last year. All were permanent withdrawals and involved small amounts of nuclear material for R and D or analytical purposes, or depleted uranium for sources shielding.

Indonesian Aircraft

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he learned of the Indonesian Government's interest in setting up a plant in Europe to assemble N250 aeroplanes; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade met the Indonesian Minister for Research and Technology on 22 December 1994 when future plans for the Indonesian N250 aircraft were raised. I understand that these plans have also been discussed with UK aerospace companies. Decisions on participation will be a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Yorkshire Mining Museum

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how long his Department will take to pay the £102,063 non-quota grant from the European regional development fund to the Yorkshire mining museum, once the funds are received from the European Commission; and what recompense he will make to the museum for the delay in receiving funds.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This project was not funded by the European regional development fund non-quota programmes but as a single project. The grant has been received from the European Commission and payment to the Yorkshire mining museum was made on 20 January by the Department of the Environment. There are no compensation provisions.

Uranium Storage

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what type of uranium is stored at Chapelcross.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 19 January 1995]: Depleted uranium.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally in the last two days to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 20 January 1995]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions he or his Ministers met representatives of Ian Greer Associates informally in the last month and discussed matters relating to the interests of the clients of Ian Greer Associates.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 20 January 1995]: None.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions in the last month he or his Ministers met representatives of Ian Greer Associates informally to discuss matters relating to the interests of the clients of Ian Greer Associates.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 20 January 1995]: None.

HPC Virus

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to invoke Crown use in relation to the use of the virus HPC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Crown use provisions remain available as a last resort.

Although concern has been expressed concerning the supply and cost of test kits for the hepatitis C virus, the supply is adequate and continuing competition can be expected to ensure value for money.

HEALTH

Community Care

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to remove from NHS approved registered lists firms or individuals involved in significant community care fraud.

Mr. Sackville: National health service contracting authorities already have powers under the various public contracts regulations to exclude from tenders suppliers who have been convicted of a relevant offence or who have been guilty of gross professional misconduct. These powers are used in appropriate cases, but are matters for decision by each contracting authority in the light of the known facts of each case.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the absenteeism rate for the Medicines Control Agency in each year since 1991;

(2) what was the absenteeism rate for National Health Service Estates in each year since 1991;

(3) what was the absenteeism rate for the NHS Pensions Agency in each year since 1991;

(4) what was the absenteeism rate for her Department in each year since 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The absenteeism rate for 1993 for the Department of Health including the Medicines Control Agency, National Health Service Estates and NHS Pensions Agency is 9.7 working days absence per staff year. Information for the Department, excluding the three agencies, for 1993 cannot be separately identified. Information is not available for 1991 and 1992.

1. Source: Occupational health service.
2. Working days absences exclude weekends and bank holidays for staff working a "Monday to Friday" week.

Cancer

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of (a) the cost of the organisational audit developed by the Macmillan Fund in measuring the effectiveness of cancer care services and

(b) the minimum standards for breast cancer care proposed by the Macmillan Fund.

Mr. Sackville: No such work has been commissioned centrally.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many specialist breast cancer consultants there are in the NHS;

(2) what is the average cost of supporting a cancer patient (a) at home and (b) in hospital.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Utting Report

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department has taken in response to the criticisms made in the Utting report of 1991.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the Children Act report, copies of which are available in the Library.

Residential Child Care

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with local authorities and other providers of residential child care about standards of such care; and what proposals she has made for tackling current problems.

Mr. Bowis: Ministers and officials have regular discussions with representatives of local authority and independent sector organisations on a wide range of issues including that of residential care for children.

For the Government's report on action in this area, I refer the hon. Member to the Children Act report, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Harvey : To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residential child care staff there were with relevant qualifications in each year since 1980; and what information she has about the turnover rate of (a) qualified and (b) unqualified residential child care staff.

Mr. Bowis: Information on qualifications and turnover of residential child care staff was collected in 1993 by the Local Government Management Board and published in "Social Services Workforce Analysis: 1993 Survey", copies of which are available in the Library. Information on qualifications and turnover of local authority social services staff is not available centrally.

EC Butter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which regional health authority and district health authorities use European Community intervention board butter (i) for patients' use and (ii) for use in hospital coffee shops; and if she will make a statement;

Mr. Sackville: We are not aware of any regional or district health authorities currently buying intervention board butter. The main national health service purchasers are NHS trusts, of which the vast majority buy in the butter under national contract arrangements for use in hospitals in accordance with EEC regulation No. 2191/81, as amended. Eligible consumers within any hospital may include hospital in-patients and out-patients, and the hospital staff using the hospital catering facilities.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state in respect of the appointment of the chairman of the Doncaster royal infirmary NHS trust (a) the salary awarded, (b) the term of office and (c) the number of hours per week required to be devoted to the job.

Mr. Sackville: Mr. Raymond Tonkinson was appointed as chairman of the Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu hospital national health service trust for a two-year term, from 17 October 1994 until 30 November 1996. He is entitled to receive an annual remuneration of £17,145. Trust chairmen are normally expected to devote 16 to 24 hours a week to their duties.

Mortality Rates

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys intends to publish the figures on standardised mortality ratios by social class derived from the 1991 census.

Mr. Sackville: Standardised mortality ratios by social class are published 10-yearly. Those based on data from the 1991 census will be included in a volume in the decennial supplement series planned for publication in late 1997. The latest available information is in the occupational mortality decennial supplement 1979–80, 1982–83, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mental Health Task Force

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how and when the NHS executive and the mental health task force plan to review progress with local action plans to improve mental health services in London for severely mentally ill people, in accordance with the task force report on priorities for action.

Mr. Bowis: Progress is being carefully monitored by the national health service executive's regional offices. The mental health task force has worked with the regional offices to review local action plans and has recently completed a programme of follow-up visits to the district health authorities in London to check progress.

Blood

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to disallow the sale for profit of blood donated to the national blood transfusion service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The national blood service does not sell for profit the blood which is freely donated by our volunteer donors.

Skin Donations

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to amend the wording on organ donor cards to refer specifically to skin donation after death; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Both the organ donor card and the national health service organ donor register already include among other options a request that "any part of my body can be used for the treatment of others".

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress towards a national skin bank in the last three months.

Mr. Sackville: The United Kingdom Health Departments have commissioned a review to look into the current arrangements for the retrieval, storage and use of tissue, including skin, in the United Kingdom. The findings are not yet complete; when they are we shall give careful consideration to what skin banking arrangements will be needed for the future.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the level of underdrawing on capital allocations in each of the last five years by region (a) as a cash total and (b) as a proportion of total allocation made for that year.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

1989–90 Capital Underspending

[1] South West Thames' final capital limit was £4.681 million. After taking account of receipts, net spend was -£7.897 million—capital receipts exceeded spending by this amount—making the underspend against the cash limit £12.436.

[2] Mersey Regional health authority's final cash limit was -£1.907 million after transfers to trust external financing limits. After taking account of receipts, net spend was -£2.7 million—capital receipts exceeded spending by this amount—making the underspend against the cash limit £0.793 million.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current level of underdrawing on capital allocations in each region.

Mr. Sackville: All regional health authorities currently expect to draw down all of their capital cash limits in 1994–95.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average time taken to approve new capital schemes in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was (a) total NHS expenditure, (b) current expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (c) capital expenditure on the hospital and community health services, (d) expenditure on the family practitioner services, (e) expenditure on centrally funded NHS services and (f) expenditure on personal social services in England in each year since 1974–75 giving each in (i) cash terms, (ii) adjusted using the relevant pay and prices index and (iii) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator;

(2) if she will give for each year since 1974–75 total capital spending on hospital and community health services and spending in net terms after deducting proceeds from land and property sales (a) in cash terms, (b) adjusted using the GDP deflator and (c) adjusted using the relevant index of NHS prices.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The information will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the per capita spending on health and personal social services in cash terms and adjusted for NHS pay prices and for input volume for each year for which estimates have been made from 1989–90 to the latest available year for (a) all ages, (b) births, (c) zero to four years, (d) five to 15 years, (e) 16 to 64 years, (f) 65 to 74 years and (g) 75 years and over, giving the amount spent on (i) hospital and community health services, (ii) family practitioner services, (iii) personal social services and (iv) total in England.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Estimates of spending per head by age group for the personal social services and for the family health services are no longer produced. The latest available are shown in the table.

Estimates for the hospital and community health services are still produced annually, but as a result of changes in data resources, definitions and the methodology used, comparable figures for a series of years cannot be produced. The latest estimates are also shown in the table.

Health Services (Demand)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the most recently available estimates of the percentage changes in demand on the hospital and community health services due to demographic change for each year from 1972–73 to 1999–2000.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The available information is shown in the table.

1 Estimates for years 1975–76 to 1980–81 are based on the following age bands: births, age bands 0 to 4, 5 to 15, 16 to 44, 45 to 64, 65 to 74, 75 to 84, and 85 and over.

Estimates from 1981–82 are based on; births, age bands 0 to 4, 5 to 15, 16 to 44, 45 to 64, and single year age groups between aged 65 to 89, and aggregated years 90 and over.

2 Figures are based on data from the 1991 census.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give for April to September 1987 and for each subsequent six month period (a) the numbers of people admitted from waiting lists to hospital for in-patient treatment, (b) the numbers of people removed from in-patient waiting lists for reasons other than treatment, (c) the numbers of people admitted from waiting lists for day case treatment, (d) the numbers of people removed from day-case waiting lists for reasons other than treatment, (e) the numbers of people on in-patient waiting lists who self deferred and (f) the numbers of people on day-case waiting lists who self deferred.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The information requested for admissions and self-deferrals is given in the tables. Information on the number of people removed from waiting lists for reasons other than treatment is not held centrally.

TREASURY

Nicaragua (Debt Relief)

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures the Government will take to encourage EU partners' support for the International Monetary Fund and Paris Club proposals to grant Nicaragua further debt relief.

Mr. Nelson: The Government will continue to press other Paris Club creditors at all international meetings to offer all eligible countries including Nicaragua debt relief consistent with the agreement reached by the Paris Club last December. We will also continue to press for action on multilateral debt, along the lines we proposed in Malta and Madrid, for those countries which will still have unsustainable debt liabilities to the multilateral institutions even after generous Trinidad terms debt relief.

Golden Shares

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what undertakings Her Majesty's Government retain a golden share; and in what circumstances rights relating to that golden share are to be used by Her Majesty's Government.

Sir George Young: The table shows all the companies in which the Government holds special—or "golden"—shares. Where this is applicable, the table shows the expiry date on or before which the Government may redeem a special share. Special shares are held by—or on behalf of—the Secretary of State with policy responsibility for the privatised industry. The rights attaching to individual special shares vary and it is not possible to define in advance the circumstances in which they will be exercised.

Crown Buildings (Insurance)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the main buildings, in which the Crown has an interest, for which there is neither buildings nor contents insurance cover; what considerations underlay the decision not to take out insurance cover; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Government's long-standing policy on insurance is that decisions on whether to insure commercially should be made on value-for-money grounds. Across Government as a whole, the cost of paying premiums could be expected to exceed the value of claims met by insurance companies. Therefore, use of commercial insurance, including buildings or contents insurance cover, by Government Departments and other Crown bodies is confined to a very small number of cases where special considerations apply.

Investment

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the levels of investment in the United Kingdom and in the United Kingdom's main international competitors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Information on investment levels is set out in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development annual publication, "National Accounts", available in the House of Commons Library.

VAT

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the European Commission's latest proposals for imposition of VAT in circumstances currently exempt under the sixth VAT directive, and its implication for charities.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The latest proposals from the European Commission which would affect the exemptions in the sixth VAT directive date from July 1992. No conclusions have been reached, and any possible impact on charities would in any case by negligible. The UK's zero rates are not affected.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his estimates of the budgeted and actual expenditure on (a) Her Majesty's Treasury administration and (b) Inland Revenue administration, for each year from 1979 to 1994 in 1993 prices.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 January 1995]: The table details the administration expenditure for HM Treasury and Inland Revenue going back to 1979–80 in 1993–94 prices. The table compares the gross voted administrative expenditure, including capital, less appropriations in aid-budget-to the outturn expenditure-actual-for the same expenditure. Over the period, there have been several significant changes to the way public expenditure is recorded. The most significant changes have been the delegation to Departments for capital expenditure on information technology in 1980–81; of accommodation costs in 1983–84 and of superannuation in 1993–94. There have also been some machinery of Government changes, including in 1992–93 the transfer of some of the DTI's regulatory functions to the Treasury. Recalculation of the figures to compensate for these changes could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Schedule E Tax

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a tax allowance under schedule E tax, so that an individual, employed through an agency, who has to meet his or her own accommodation and travel expenses when having to work away from home under contract, is able to set such expenses against tax as in the case of an employee required to work at a remote location to his or her usual place of work.

Sir George Young [holding answer 20 January 1995]: This is a matter which we keep under active review, but to date it has not been possible to find a solution which does not infringe the general rule that the tax relief is not available for the normal costs of home–to–work travel.

Home Ownership

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will identify those measures in each of his last two Budgets which were specifically intended to promote home ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The last two Budgets have given general encouragement to home ownership by promoting sustained economic growth. In addition, they have included specific measures to encourage local authority and housing association tenants to become home owners.

Civil Servants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff in his Departments have reported an offer of employment from an outside employer since February 1993 as required under the civil service management code; and how many of these records were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 January 1995]: Eight Treasury staff have reported offers of employment from an outside employer since February 1993, one of which was followed by an application to join the company concerned.

In addition, 56 staff in other Departments responsible to the Chancellor have reported offers of employment from outside employers since February 1993, 53 of which were followed by applications to join the company concerned.

PRIME MINISTER

MI5 Headquarters

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what are the procedures that need to be followed by a hon. Member to be able to visit the MI5 headquarters; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is not normal practice for the Security Service to host visits to Thames house by hon. Members.

Seals

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) of 24 March 1994, Official Report, columns 343-44, what was the outcome of the discussions with Russia on seal hunting.

The Prime Minister: The British mission in Moscow raised this issue with the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs in March last year, and left the Russians in no doubt of the strength of United Kingdom public opposition to the practice of seal culling. We continue to take suitable opportunities to raise this matter with the Russians.

Weapons of Torture

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set up a Government inquiry into the sales of weapons of torture by British companies to states where Amnesty International has documented torture.

The Prime Minister: The Government give careful consideration to proposals for the export of weapons. In considering such proposals, special care is taken over the political and military implications of allowing consignments to go overseas. Particular attention is paid to countries with poor human rights records, where equipment might be used for internal repression. I do not therefore believe there is any need for a Government inquiry.

Social Development Summit

Ms Corston: To ask the Prime Minister if he will participate in the world summit on social development on 6 to 12 March in Copenhagen.

The Prime Minister: I will make a decision on attendance nearer the date.

Ms Corston: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he gave to sending an official British representative to the preparatory meeting in New York sponsored by the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development and the United Nations Development Programme for the world summit on social development in Copenhagen in March.

The Prime Minister: Officials from the Foreign Office, Overseas Development Administration and Department of Employment are in New York attending the final preparatory committee meeting for the world summit on social development, which will take place in Copenhagen in March. Some of those officials attended the seminar sponsored by UNRISD and UNDP, which took place in the week prior to the preparatory committee meeting.

Holocaust Museum

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he will support the creation of a Holocaust museum in London comparable with those in other major capital cites in Europe and north America.

The Prime Minister: I understand that the imperial war museum is considering creating a new museum which would cover the holocaust and other 20th century acts of genocide. That is a matter in the first instance for the trustees of the imperial war museum to consider.

Nex Steps Agencies

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 275, if he will list the Government Department next steps agencies with regional offices in the west country specifying in each case (a) its location, (b) the number of staff in each and (c) the annual cost.

The Prime Minister: The table lists next steps agencies with offices in the west country. The information requested about these offices is not held centrally. This is a matter for the next steps agencies concerned.

Nolan Committee

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place a transcript of each day's proceedings of the Nolan committee in the Library as it is published.

The Prime Minister: Publication of transcripts of each day's proceedings is a matter for the Committee on Standards in public life. I understand that copies are available from the company appointed by the committee to prepare its official transcript. The Library can, of course, subscribe to this service.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has for sanctions to be available in the case of a witness who deliberately misleads the Nolan committee.

The Prime Minister: There is no reason to believe that such circumstances will arise.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister whether Ministers have informal meetings on matters of public policy with lobbying groups in the course of meetings which they are attending in a private capacity.

The Prime Minister: Ministers do not hold or attend meetings on matters of public policy in a private capacity.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister following the letter he has received from Miss Pamela Dix of Woking, secretary of United Kingdom Families of Flight 103 of 21 December 1994, if he will amend his answer to the oral question from the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 15 December 1994, Official Report, column 1068.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to him on 10 January 1995, Official Report, column 20.

Home Ownership

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Prime Minister if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government to promote home ownership; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 January 1995]: Yes. Owner-occupation in the United Kingdom has risen from just over 54 per cent. in 1979 to over 66 per cent. now. Home ownership is more affordable than for many years. Surveys show that owner-occupation is the preferred housing choice of about 80 per cent. of people. The Government remain fully committed to promoting the continued growth of sustainable home ownership, both by prudent management of the economy and through specific policies to help people become home owners.

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by the Department or agency.

Mr. David Hunt: I have been asked to reply.

In the Departments and agencies for which I and my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister have responsibility the information for the calendar year 1994 is as follows:

Title:	The General Management Development Programme.
Objectives	To contribute towards achieving results through corporate and executive development.
Organisation	Sundridge Park Business School.
Total cost	£37,392.
Number of attendees	6.
Responsibility of attendees	Business and Support Managers in Business Suppliesdivision, HMSO
Evaluation	Verbal feedback and written course appraisals from attendees

2.

Title:	Strategic Management Programme
Objectives	To help senior managers develop their strategic management skills, enabling them to apply these skills in the context of their own organisations
Organisation	Henley management college
Total cost	£10,516
Number of attendees	1
Responsibility of attendees	Senior managers in HMSO
Evaluation	Verbal feedback and written course appraisal from attendees

No staff attended any other external training and tuition courses in 1994 where total costs for the individual exceeded £5,000.

EMPLOYMENT

Low Pay

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) male and (b) female employees and the total number of employees estimated to be on low pay for each of the standard regions of the United Kingdom; and if he will publish comparable available data for each of the member states of the European Union.

Mr. Oppenheim: Definitions of low pay are arbitrary and take no account of particular circumstances. There is therefore no definition of low pay upon which such an analysis can be based.

Training Schemes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide for each of the past five years and for (a) those unemployed for six to 12 months, (b) those unemployed for 12 to 24 months and (c) those unemployed for more than 24 months, the percentage of those leaving adult training schemes who progressed to (i) full-time work, (ii) part-time work, (iii) self-employment, (iv) further education or training and (v) unemployment in, respectively, Southampton, Itchen, Southampton and Hampshire.

Mr. Paice: Information is not available for individual constituencies and local authorities. Information for Hampshire training and enterprise council is given in the table. It is not possible to give separate figures for those unemployed for 12 to 24 months and more than 24 months.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Rwandan Refugees

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of African states which met in Nairobi earlier this month to consider the problem of Rwandan refugees who refuse to return home; and if he will make logistical support available to assist African states who seek to break the hold of the defeated Rwandan Government on the refugee camps in Zaire.

Mr. Baldry: We welcome the involvement of regional Governments in efforts to solve the problems of Rwandan refugees. We are supporting international action to secure the safe return of Rwandan refugees to their homes from the camps in Zaire and elsewhere and will look carefully at any firm proposals for logistical support when received.

Iraq

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the Overseas Development Administration team that recently visited the Iraq-Iran border on the number of refugees moving from Iraq to Iran and the reasons for their movement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 19 January 1995]: It is estimated that some 645,000 Iraqi refugees are currently in Iran, of whom 500,000 arrived before 1991, and the remainder following the Gulf war. The ODA team visited the area bordering the southern Iraq marshes and focused on the needs of recent refugees. There are around 5,000 in the camp at Himmet on the Iranian side of the border. At present, fewer than 50 persons a week are succeeding in crossing the border. Many more, possibly up to 250,000, may be unable to reach the border because of Iraqi military action. Informants told the team that many people are fleeing not just because of Saddam Hussein's brutal suppression of opposition in the south and destruction of the marshlands, but also increasingly because of economic hardship due to the loss of their livelihood and human rights abuses in the whole of central and southern Iraq.

Israel

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress being made in transferring British and multilateral development funds to the Palestinian national authority while securing the proper accountability for the appropriate expenditure of those funds.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 19 January 1995]: British bilateral aid to the Palestinians in the current financial year is expected to amount to £6.5 million. Some £3.5 million comprises bilateral know-how projects and support for projects managed by British non-governmental organisations. These are subject to our normal monitoring and accounting procedures. The remaining £3 million was a contribution towards the net salaries of the Palestinian civilian police. The payment mechanism used, which included monitoring and audit of disbursements by the Crown Agents, ensured full accountability for our funds.

In addition, we contribute to multilateral programmes including those of the World bank, the European Community and United Nations agencies. These funds are subject to the accountability requirements of the institutions concerned. Full details of multilateral assistance to the Palestinian authority are not available. The World bank estimates that since the Israeli-Palestinian declaration of principles in September 1993 it has disbursed $61 million from funds under its management. The European Community expects to have disbursed some 56 million ecu—£44 million—by the end of February.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being planned by the World bank and African development bank to block loans to Nigeria until democracy is restored.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: Under their articles of agreement, the World bank and African development bank are required to take only economic and technical considerations into account in their decisions on lending.

South Africa

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his Department's specific policy to encourage small British firms to invest in South Africa.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The British investment in South Africa promotion scheme aims to help the development of small and medium enterprises in South Africa, particularly those from disadvantaged communities, by promoting and assisting new investment in South Africa by small British businesses.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the ODA is prepared to fund small British businesses in the field of information technology who wish to work in South Africa.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him today. Small British businesses in the field of information technology are eligible under the scheme.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is ODA policy to assist small British firms which wish to do business in South Africa; and what proportion of the budget for South Africa is geared towards funding small British businesses.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him today. The sum allocated for the British investment in South Africa promotion scheme is £2 million. We do not set spending targets for our aid programme to South Africa by sector or project.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the result of ethnic monitoring of the ownership of British firms that have received contracts from the ODA for work in the field of information technology in South Africa.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: ODA does not monitor the award of contracts to British firms under aid programme by ethnic ownership.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the ODA is prepared to fund small black British firms which have viable projects with black South African partners in the field of information technology in South Africa.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The selection of projects agreed for funding under the aid programme to South Africa is made in the context of the priority areas of focus we have agreed with the South African Government. Where projects involve the supply of British goods and services, we employ our normal competitive tendering arrangements.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much British development aid money in South Africa is being spent on (a) large British firms, (b) medium-size British firms and (c) small British firms in the field of information technology.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: We do not collate information on British firms, contracted under the aid programme, according to their size.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Extradition

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the changes in extradition procedures applying in Ireland of which he has been informed by the Irish Attorney-General; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have not been informed by the Irish Attorney-General of any such changes since the latest amendments to the extradition legislation of the Republic of Ireland which came into force on 22 August 1994. Any changes in their internal procedures are a matter for the Irish authorities.

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his oral answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 448, to the supplementary question by the hon. Member for Thurrock in the matter of Brendan Smyth, if he will explain his reference to a holiday alleged to have been taken in Ireland by the hon. Member for Thurrock; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I was mistaken. I have written to the hon. Member.

EDUCATION

Youth Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the spending on the youth service in each local education authority for (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93, (c) 1993–94 and (d) 1994–95.

Mr. Boswell: The table sets out net recurrent expenditure by LEAs in England on the youth service for 1991–92 and 1992–93, the latest year for which figures are available. These figures are in actual terms and are drawn from LEAs' own returns of their expenditure to the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to place the funding of the youth service on a statutory footing.

Mr. Boswell: No further legislation is planned. In the case of the youth service, local authorities have a need to decide, within the resources available to them, the appropriate level of provision in order to fulfil their duties deriving from sections 41 and 53 of the Education Act 1994. The Government do not determine this centrally.

Mature Students Allowance

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what are the implications for students of the withdrawal of the mature students allowance starting in the academic session 1995–96;

(2) what sources of finance are available to mature students; and what assessment she has made of the impact on the living standards of such students of the removal of the mature students allowance in 1995–96;

(3) if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of the mature students allowance for students beginning higher education in 1995–96 following the paper "Main Rates of Student Grants and Loans for 1995–96".

Mr. Boswell: The older students allowance is currently payable under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations as part of a means-tested mandatory award for eligible students on designated courses. It is not targeted at any specific maintenance need which the student may have and its retention could not be justified in the present financial climate. It remains available to eligible students who are already on their courses, but not to new students starting courses on or after 1 September 1995. A range of other sources of financial support for older students exists depending upon their individual circumstances and the type of course they attend.

Teachers Salaries

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list for each local eduction authority (a) the current annual cost of teacher salaries, (b) the cost of a 2 per cent. increase in teachers' pay for 1994–95 and (c) the cost of a 2.5 per cent. increase in teachers' pay.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table sets out the 1992–93 expenditure recorded by LEAs in England on teaching staff salaries in nursery and primary, secondary and special schools. These are the latest available figures for LEA-maintained schools. To provide an estimate of the cost of pay awards, the 1992–93 figures have been uprated by the 1993 teachers' pay award, 1.5 per cent. to arrive at notional 1993–94 baselines on which cost of hypothetical increases in teachers' pay for 1994–95 of 2 per cent. and 2.5 per cent. has been calculated. These estimates take no account of changes in teacher numbers or other factors that will have affected the teachers' pay bill. The actual increase in teachers' pay 1994–95 was 2.9 per cent.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the highest and lowest maximum discretionary awards provided by local education authorities in England for (a) further education students and (b) higher education students.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is not collected centrally. The provision of discretionary awards is a matter for local education authorities which determine the distribution and size of awards in the light of local needs and priorities.

Special Needs

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals she has to develop a national strategy for special needs students in the 16-plus age range to supply a national progression for them after statutory schooling; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Education Act 1993, the code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs and the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 already provide a comprehensive framework for the progression of students with special educational needs from schools to post-16 education, training or employment.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many school playing fields there were in each local education authority in each of the last four years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table sets out data from the Sports Council's register of recreational land, giving the number of school sports pitches by local education authority in England as at July 1994. Information for earlier years is unavailable.

Not all local education authorities have submitted full returns and the figures should be interpreted with caution. The register excludes playing fields on sites with an area of less than 0.4 hectares, so a number of small school playing fields are not recorded.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the basis for action by the Further Education Funding Council for England and against the governing bodies of colleges; and if she will make a statement on the adequacy of those powers.

Mr. Boswell: Under section 5(7) of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, the Further Education Funding Council for England may make any grants, loans or other payments to the governing body subject to terms and conditions which enable the council to require the repayment in whole or in part of sums paid by the council if any of the terms and conditions are not complied with and require the payment of interest in respect of any sums not so repaid. The council is required to keep this power under review. The instruments of government for further education corporations also require the statement of accounts to comply with any directions given by the council.

In the event of mismanagement, breach of duty or unreasonable actions by a governing body, responsibility rests with my right hon. Friend. She is satisfied that the range of powers available to her and the council are, taken together, adequate.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the absenteeism rate for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in each year since 1991.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office diplomatic wing administration does not collect statistics on absenteeism centrally.

Comprehensive sick leave records are not available for 1991, 1992 and 1993; details could be completed only at disproportionate cost.

In the case of ODA, the figures for sick leave are available but will take a little time to produce. I shall write to the hon. Member when they are available.

Rwanda

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to assist with the establishment of an international criminal tribunal with regard to militia murders in Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom was a co-sponsor of Security Council resolution 955 of 8 November 1994 which established an international criminal tribunal for Rwanda.

We have recently indicated to the prosecutor of the tribunal that we will be contributing up to £200,000 to fund UK staff and to provide equipment for his office.

UN Social Development Programme

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the formal representations made by Her Majesty's Government since 1993 in the preparation of each of the three drafts of the UN declaration and action programme on social development, giving the dates of each.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have participated actively in each of the four preparatory committee meetings held in New York to agree the documentation for the world summit for social development. The dates for these are: 1 to 11 February 1994, 22 August to 2 September 1994, 24 to 28 October 1994—an intersessional meeting—and 16 to 27 January 1995. We have also been very active in the many EU co-ordination meetings that have taken place in Brussels and New York, putting forward many suggestions for strong texts on the three core issues which have been taken up by the EU as a whole.

East Timor

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he supports United Nations policy that Indonesia should resolve the dispute over East Timor through a referendum of the people of East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: We support the UN Secretary-General's efforts to promote a just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable settlement to the question of East Timor, taking account of the wishes and interests of the East Timorese. He informed the Foreign Ministers of Portugal and Indonesia on 9 January of his intention to facilitate the convening of an "all-inclusive intra-East Timorese dialogue" to help establish an atmosphere conducive to achieving a solution, which we welcome. The question of a referendum did not arise.

Chinese Foreign Minister

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects a visit from the Chinese Foreign Minister to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: We would welcome a visit to the United Kingdom by the Chinese Foreign Minister but, as yet, no dates have been discussed with the Chinese Government.

Harjit Singh

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the report on the hearing of 26 November 1994 into the case of Harjit Singh has now been prepared by his officers in the high commission in New Delhi.

Mr. Baldry: We understand that the hearing in the case of Harjit Singh, which was scheduled for 26 November was postponed yet again. The next hearing is scheduled for 28 January.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet received an invitation to help Kenya adopt a new constitution suited to multi-party democracy; and what has been his response to this request for assistance.

Mr. Baldry: We have not yet received a formal request from the Kenyan Government to provide an expert to help take forward the process of constitutional reform. If we do, we shall give it careful consideration.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many opposition leaders are currently in prison in Nigeria; and what representations he has made on this issue to the Nigerian Government.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: A number of political leaders are currently in detention. With our European Union partners we have made several representations to the Nigerian Government calling for the release or proper trial of those detained.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which specific human rights abuses in Nigeria he has raised with the Government of that country.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: With our European Union partners we have called for the release or early trial of all political detainees, and for the lifting of travel restrictions on political activists. We have deplored repressive decrees issued by the Nigerian Government, including the proscriptions of media houses and increases in the power to order detention without trial. We continue to raise these issues with the Nigerian Government, with our partners and bilaterally, raising individual cases of abuse wherever appropriate.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which Nigerian military or security personnel he has denied visas in line with European Union policy.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: It is not our policy to reveal details of individual visa applications. Since June 1993, however, in line with agreed European Union measures against Nigeria, visas have not been issued to members of the military and their dependants, except in a small number of exceptional cases.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the impact on Nigeria of the decision by European Foreign Ministers to suspend co-operation in the military sphere with the Nigerian Government.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: Since the European Union measures against the Nigerian military were announced in 1993, Nigerian military personnel have ceased to attend military training courses in the European Union. The British military assistance team to the Nigerian national war college was withdrawn in June 1993.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arms sales have taken place to Nigeria since the annulment of the June 1993 election.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to give details of individual arms sales. Information on transfers of major equipment is contained in the UN register of conventional arms, copies of the United Kingdom return to which are in the library.

In December 1993, with EU partners, we announced that all new applications for export licences for defence equipment would be reviewed, on a case-by-case basis, with the presumption of denial.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there has been consideration of an embargo on the importation of Nigerian oil until democracy is restored in that country.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The European Union measures against Nigeria will be reviewed, or strengthened, in the light of progress towards a return to democratic civilian rule. All options will, of course, be considered.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the United Nations Commission for Human Rights to investigate human rights abuses in Nigeria.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The 51st session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights will meet from 30 January to 10 March. The EU will be making a strong statement about its concerns regarding human rights abuses in Nigeria.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons Ombudsman

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the salary paid to the prisons ombudsman;

(2) how many staff work in the prisons ombudsman's department; what is their role; and what salaries they are paid.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The prisons ombudsman is paid at a rate equivalent to the civil service grade 5 salary scale which ranges from £38,341 to £56,953.

The prisons ombudsman's office currently has ten staff, two assistant prisons ombudsmen, five higher executive officers, two administrative officers and a personal secretary. Their role is to assist with investigations of complaints from prisoners about their treatment in prison. The salary scales for the grades are:

Assistant Prisons Ombudsman (Grade 7)	£25,837–£40,012
Higher Executive Officer	£16,000–£21,564
Administrative Officer	£9,393–£12,450
Personal Secretary	£13,322–£16,320

A third assistant prisons ombudsman and another higher executive officer will join the staff in January.

Prisoners (Unlocked Hours)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prisoners held in establishments at (a) Doncaster, (b) Lindholme, (c) Wolds, (d) Wakefield, (e) Durham women's wing and (f) New Hall, Wakefield, prisons, were unlocked for a total of at least 12 hours on the last week day of each month for the last six months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 18 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the percentage of prisoners held in Doncaster, Lindholme, Wolds, Wakefield, Durham women's wing and New Hall prisons, who were unlocked for a total of at least twelve hours on the last weekday of each month for the last six months.

All prisoners at Doncaster, Lindholme, Wolds, Durham women's wing and New Hall were unlocked for at least twelve hours on the last weekday of each month for the last six months. Prisoners at Wakefield are currently unlocked for 11.6 hours on weekdays.

More detailed information is given in the following table:

Secure Units

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the number of prisoners being held in special secure units in England and Wales on 10 January;

(2) under what security category each prisoner is classified who is at present being held in a special secure unit;

(3) what is the number of special secure units in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about special secure units in prisons in England and Wales.

There are three special secure units in prisons in England and Wales, at Full Sutton, Parkhurst and Whitemoor prisons.

At present only the unit at Full Sutton is in use. On 10 January this year it held eight prisoners, all of whom are category A (exceptional escape risk).

Prison Education Officers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison education officers were employed in each year since 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of prison Education Officers employed each year since 1991.

Teaching staff, are not and have not been Prison Service employees. The Prison Service does not maintain central records of the numbers of staff deployed to prison Education Departments by the various education providers.

Prison Staff

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prison officers and (b) prison auxiliaries were employed in each year since 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prison officers and prison auxiliaries employed by the Prison Service since 1990.

I attach a table showing the number of prison officers and prison auxiliaries employed by the Service at 1 April each year since 1990. This is with the exception of 1991 where the figures are for 1 October, as April figures are unavailable.

The figures for prison officers include the figures for senior officers and principal officers. All specialist officers and prison officers in initial training are also included.

Year	Prison officers	Prison auxiliaries
1990	20,785	994
1991[1]	21,421	1220
1992	23,029	1278

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absenteeism rate for the United Kingdom Passport Agency in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Figures are available only for absenteeism due to sickness in the United Kingdom Passport Agency. The information is recorded in terms of days absence per staff member per year and is as follows:

	Days
1993	15.01

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absenteeism rate for Her Majesty's Prison Service in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the absenteeism rate for Her Majesty's Prison Service in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Figures are not collected centrally on absenteeism, but we do have information on sick absence, which accounts for virtually all absence from work other than leave. The average number of days sick absence per uniformed prison officer per year in 1991–92 was 13.97; in 1992–93 it was 12.76; and in 1993–94 it was 13.05. These statistics relate to basic grade prison officers, senior officers and principal officers who together comprise nearly two–thirds of all Prison Service staff.

The sick absence of other staff is recorded by the Home Office, but cannot be separately identified for Prison Service staff.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absenteeism rate for the Home Office in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Howard: Figures are not collected centrally on absenteeism.

The average number of working days lost through sick absence per staff year in the Home Office, including its agencies was as follows:

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absenteeism rate for the Forensic Science Service in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Maclean: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Forensic Science Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dr. Janet Thompson to Mr David Chidgey, dated 23 January 1995:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question about the absenteeism rate for the Forensic Science Service in 1991, 1992 and 1993. As you know, the arrangement now is that the Chief Executive of an Executive Agency, with the agreement of the Minister, replies to Members of Parliament on operational matters. I am therefore replying on behalf of the Forensic Science Service.

The average number of days sick absence per member of staff per year in 1992–93 was 6.4, and in 1993–94 was 6.61. These figures include long term sick absences.

The figures for 1991–92 were recorded centrally by the Home Office and cannot be identified separately.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the absenteeism rate for the Fire Service College in 1991, 1992, and 1993.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the chief executive of the Fire Service College, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from N. K. Finlayson to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 19 January 1995:

Your Parliamentary Question asking for information about the absenteeism rate for the Fire Service College in 1991, 1992 and 1993 has been referred to me by the Home Secretary for reply, as the matter falls within my delegated authority.

I regret that the information for the College is not available in the form requested for the dates requested. The College became an Executive Agency on 1 April 1992. Prior to that date and since, details of sickness absences have been included as part of the overall figures for the Home Office.

For the 12 months ending in September 1994 the average number of sick days per member of staff was 7.7 days.

Prisoners (Paracetamol)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what policy guidelines are issued to prison staff on the prescribing and administration of paracetamol to inmates; and what variations exist between different prisons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Gunnell dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question concerning the policy guidelines on the prescribing and administration of paracetamol.

There are no specific policy guidelines issued on the prescribing of individual drugs with the exception of controlled drugs. Each prison is supervised by a qualified pharmacist and arrangements for the distribution of drugs is agreed between the pharmacist and the prison medical officer, according to local requirements.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training programmes are available for staff at Doncaster prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply, in the absence of the Director General from the office to your recent Question about training programmes available to staff at Doncaster prison.

All Prisoner Custody Officers (PCOs) undergo initial training to a specification approved by the Prison Service before certification. I am advised by the Director of Doncaster prison that the following in-service training programmes are provided:

Weekly Continuation Training of Prisoner Custody Officers, including security practices, control and restraint, first aid, suicide awareness, hostage incidents and anti-bullying.

Specialist Courses for Prisoner Custody Officers include: hostage negotiations, the escort and movement of category A prisoners, drug testing and identification, use of short duration breathing apparatus, sentence calculation, drug dog handler training and dealing with young offenders.

Training for non-Prisoner Custody Officers, who have each received a minimum of forty hours training including personal security, prisoner and premises security, race relations, health and hygiene and being first on the scene at a hostage incident.

Management Training, which included a specialist senior management course prior to the opening of Doncaster. Operational directors have attended the Command of Serious Incidents course at the Prison Service College.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners can be accommodated in the health care centre at Doncaster prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Doncaster prison.

The Health Care Centre at Doncaster can accommodate 59 patients. Twenty-seven places are in three wards, 12 are in double rooms and the remainder in single rooms.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what numerical criteria were contained in the contract between the Home Office and the Premier Prison Service Ltd. at Doncaster; and how many (a) escapes from court, (b) escapes from the prison, (c) grievance resolutions, (d) assaults on prisoners and (e) assaults on staff there were in the first six months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. John Gunnell, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply, in the absence of the Director General from the office to your recent Question about the contract with Premier Prison Service Limited to run Doncaster prison.

The contract for managing Doncaster prison, a copy of which is held in the House of Commons library, specifies a range of performance criteria, against which the performance of Premier Prison Service is measured.

The following are the principal criteria:

Escapes from the prison: there should be no more than two by the end of the first year of operation and thereafter no more than one in each year of operation.

Escapes from escort: there should be no more than eight in each year for the first three years and no more than six in the fourth year.

Time out of cell: prisoners on normal location should be out of their cell for a minimum 12 hours per day.

A positive regime: prisoners on normal location should be able to participate in at least a minimum of 12 hours each day of regime activities, including education: adult prisoners should have access to a minimum of six hours of education and training each week, young prisoners under 17 should be provided with 15 hours of education and training each week.

Visits: the statutory minimum as set out in Prison Rules must be met.

Grievances: ninety per cent of grievances capable of resolution at prison level must be resolved within seven days.

Assaults: there should be no more than 148 assaults on prisoners by the end of the first year of operation, and no more than 77 assaults on staff by the end of the first year of operation. The contractor will be in default when both of these targets are exceeded.

In general, Premier Prison Service do not have a contractual obligation to supervise prisoners at court, since the court escort and custody service in that area has been contracted to Group 4 Court Services Ltd. They are, however, responsible for Category A prisoners taken from Doncaster prison to court. None has escaped from the custody of their escorting officers at court, or on journeys to an from court.

There has been one escape from Doncaster. On 10 August 1994, a prisoner escaped through the visitors exit with the help from a visitor. The prisoner was recaptured and criminal proceedings are pending.

There have been 546 resolved grievances in the first six months of operation of Doncaster prison.

At 31 December 1994, the latest date for which figures are available there had been 38 proven assaults by prisoners against other prisoners and 93 proven assaults against staff.

Prisoners (Shopping)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many private shopping visits were made by prison officers for inmates in prisons in England and Wales during the week of 2 to 7 January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about private shopping trips made by prison officers for inmates during the week of 2 to 7 January.

On 19 December the Home Secretary announced in the House that the practice of prison officers going shopping at the behest of prisoners had stopped. Purchases will take place only through the prison canteen. No private shopping trips by prison officers were reported during the week of 2 to 7 January.

Prisoners (Phone Calls)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the prison policy followed in prisons in England and Wales where private phone calls made by inmates can be paid from public expenditure.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the policy followed in prisons in England and Wales where private phone calls made by prisoners can be paid from public expense.

Following the installation of cardphones in all establishments, prisoners are required to purchase phonecards from their earnings or private cash to make personal calls. Prisoners are only allowed access to an official telephone to make urgent legal and compassionate calls. Prisoners are expected to pay for all calls using an official telephone, unless the governor is satisfied that the prisoner has insufficient funds to meet the cost of the call or the cost is so small as to not justify its collection.

Prison Security

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is the policy of his Department to instruct prison governors and chief officers to visit every area of the prison for which they are responsible on a daily basis.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about instructions on managers visiting the areas for which they are responsible.

Under Standing Order 3A, the governor exercises a close and constant supervision of the prison. All parts of the prison where prisoners are located, including the hospital, are visited and inspected daily by the governing governor or another of the establishment's governors. The remainder of the prison will be inspected by such other managers as the governor designates.

Prison Governors Association

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to meet the chairman and officers of the Prison Governors Association.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Home Secretary has no present plans to meet the chairman and officers of the PGA, nor has the association made such a request. I last met with the Prison Governors Association on 15 November 1994.

Solitary Confinement

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have spent more than a total of one month in solitary confinement in the latest year for which figures are available; and what is the extra cost per prisoner per month of solitary confinement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. David Nicholson, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many prisoners have spent more than a total of one month in solitary confinement in the latest year for which figures are available; and what is the extra cost per prisoner per month of solitary confinement.

No prisoners in England and Wales are kept in solitary confinement, which is a form of punishment designed to deprive a prisoner of all human contact.

Under Prison Rule 43, however, and Young Offender Institution Rule 46, governors may remove prisoners from association with other prisoners for the maintenance of good order and discipline or in their own interests. Information is not available in the form requested, but on 30 June 1994 the number of prisoners segregated under Prison Rule 43 and YOI Rule 46 were:

	30 June 1994
Good order and discipline:	310, of which 152 for a period of more than one month;
In own interests:	887 held in rule 43 units or segregation unit on rule 43/46.

Information on the cost of holding prisoners under these Rules is not available.

Immigration

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases he is aware of involving persons released on bail from Immigration Act detention by the Immigration Appeals Authority who have subsequently absconded or otherwise failed to comply with the terms of bail; and in what time period these cases arose.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Data Centre, Bootle

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the privatisation of the data centre in Bootle; what redundancies have ensued; if these redundancies were referred to by the Sema Group in its bid to take over the running of the centre; and what funding his Department provided towards the cost of redundancies.

Mr. Howard: Home Office administrative information technology services have been the subject of a market test under the Government's "Competing for Quality" programme. As previously announced in reply to a question on 19 July 1994, Official Report, column 176, following the conclusion of the test, it was decided to award a contract for the supply of these services to Sema Group plc. Its bid was judged to represent best value for money following an evaluation on the basis of the full costs to the Home Office of the competing bids.

With some limited exceptions, staff in the undertaking were transferred to Sema Group under the terms of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. The Home Office did not make any staff redundant: subsequent redundancies by Sema Group are a matter for the company.

In submitting its bid, Sema Group made it clear that the number of staff required for the provision of services under the contract would be dependent on the outcome of an operational review which they would conduct, if awarded the contract.

All payments to Sema Group in connection with the services subject to the market test, including payments associated with their transitional and restructuring costs, have been made in accordance with the contract for the supply of IT services, the precise details of which are commercial in confidence.

Welsh Language

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are being made by the Data Protection Registrar to ensure use of the Welsh language in its operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Data Protection Registrar tells me that application forms for registration are currently available in Welsh; that entry on to the register resulting from a Welsh language application is made available to the applicant in Welsh; that the letter confirming registration is also in Welsh; that arrangements are made for letters received in Welsh to be answered in Welsh; and the Office's Wales-based investigation officer is able to conduct interviews and provide oral information through the medium of Welsh.

I understand that the registrar will be reviewing these arrangements before preparing a plan for submission to the Welsh Language Board in accordance with the provisions of the Welsh Language Act 1993.

Sentences

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the proportion of defendants who received (a) custodial and (b) non-custodial sentences following conviction by magistrates in England and Wales in each year since 1988;

(2) How many persons were sentenced to a term of imprisonment following conviction by magistrates in England and Wales in each year since 1988.

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the table. The 1994 data will not be available until the autumn.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 10 January, Official Report, column 89, how many of the offers of awards made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority under the tariff scheme in November have led to appeals.

Mr. Maclean: Seven.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many payments were made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority in (a) November 1994 and (b) December 1994 in the bands (i) £1,000 to £4,999, (ii) £5,000 to £9,999 and (iii) £10,000 and above.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not currently available.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offers of payment were made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority in September, October and December 1994; and in which of the tariff bands these awards fell.

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority made 605 offers of award in the following bands:

	Awards offered
Band	September	October	November
2	1	8	18

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many awards were made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94.

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board made 36,638 awards in 1992–93 and 40,635 in 1993–94.

Prison Service

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Prison Service's annual report to be published; and what is the reason for its delay.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the publication of the Prison Service's Annual Report and the reason for its delay.

Although it relates to a past period, publication of the 1993–94 Prison Service Annual Report has been delayed to allow the Report to be updated to reflect the events at Whitemoor and Parkhurst. The report is expected to be published soon.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what special instructions he has given to the assistant chief constable of Essex police with regard to the export of livestock through Brightlingsea.

Mr. Maclean: None. The policing of such events is an operational matter for the chief constable.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 495, concerning overseas travel at public expense by spouses of Ministers what proportion of the spouses' visit was dedicated to official visits and business.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 20 January 1995]: On the two occasions concerned, programmes were drawn up for the spouse by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office with practically all the spouse's time dedicated to official visits and duties.

Ethnic Minority Funding

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the distribution of section 11 funds for 1995–96.

Mr. Nicholas Baker [holding answer 20 January 1995]: Allocations for existing projects which will still be running in 1995–96 should be notified to grant recipients shortly. We hope to announce the outcome of applications for new projects starting in 1995–96 by the end of February.

Young Offenders

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many serving prisoners were sentenced, pursuant to (a) section 53(1) and (b) section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933; and how many of these prisoners are now serving their sentences in adult prisons and young offenders' institutions, respectively.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 23 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many serving prisoners were sentenced pursuant to (a) section 53(1) and (b) section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933; and how many of these prisoners are now serving their sentences in adult prisons and young offenders' institutions, respectively.

On 30 November 1994, 54 young offenders were held under section 53(1); all apart from two were held in young offender institutions or a remand centre. Nine young offenders were held under section 53(2) life; of these one male was held in an adult establishment. 353 young offenders were held for determinate sentence under section 53(2) of whom 26 were held in adult institutions. Sentenced young offenders include some 21 year olds.

TRANSPORT

Roads Programme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to include a measure of employment effects when assessing the local impacts of new roads.

Mr. Watts: The Department's current appraisal methods do not attempt to measure the indirect local economic impacts of road schemes, such as employment. A succession of studies has concluded that to include a measurement of indirect effects in addition to the direct economic benefits risks double counting.

Drivers' Hours

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will urge the European Council of Ministers to tighten regulations governing drivers' hours; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We see no need at present for any significant change in the European Community rules on driving hours and rest periods. However, we do attach importance to more consistent and rigorous application and enforcement of existing rules throughout the Community. The Transport Council expressly agreed that objective during the German presidency. With a view to strengthening enforcement, the European Commission has published a draft regulation proposing an addition to the tachograph that would require the digital recording of drivers' hours on smart cards.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in each of the last five years for which figures are available, how many offences were identified by the vehicle inspectorate in relation to drivers' hours in (a) Derbyshire and (b) North Yorkshire; and what percentage these figures represent of the overall national figures.

Mr. Norris: The figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Licensing Authority Staff

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many licensing authority staff were employed by the licensing authorities by traffic area on (a) 1 April for each year since 1989 and (b) at present.

Mr. Norris: The table gives total numbers of staff employed in each traffic area office in support of the traffic commissioners-licensing authorities.

Traffic Area	1 April 1989	1 April 1990	1 April 1991	1 April 1992	1 April 1993	1 April 1994	Present

Goods Vehicle Operator Licences

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many goods vehicle operator licences were (a) revoked, (b) suspended, (c) curtailed and (d) subject to formal penal warnings by traffic area in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: The figures requested are contained in the appendices to the annual reports of the licensing authorities which are available in the Library of the House.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many public inquiries were held for goods vehicle operator licences for each of the last five years for which figures are available by traffic area; and if he will give, in each case, the reason for the public inquiry.

Mr. Norris: The figures requested are contained in the appendices to the annual reports of the licensing authorities which are available in the Library of the House. To set out the reason for the public inquiry in each case could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Seat Belts

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has of (a) the number and (b) percentage of people in cars not using seat belts in (a) front seats and (b) rear seats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Transport Research Laboratory carries out six-monthly surveys of seat belt wearing rates. The most recent survey in October 1994 indicated that nationally 92 per cent. of drivers, 93 per cent. of front seat passengers and 67 per cent. of rear seat passengers were wearing seat belts in cars.

Cycling

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has drawn about planning for cyclists following his recent trip to Holland; and what plans he has to meet representatives of cycling organisations to discuss his Department's future policies for cycling.

Dr. Mawhinney: My recent visit to the Netherlands will be useful in developing ideas based on last year's Government statement on cycling policy. I shall be meeting representatives of the cyclists public affairs group to continue discussions on a number of issues.

Traffic Commissioners (Public Inquiries)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce guidelines to ensure consistency in the judgments reached by traffic commissioners in respect of public inquiries held by traffic commissioners; and if he will make a statement as to the merits of education or revocation where previous offences have been proven.

Mr. Norris: Traffic commissioners must judge each individual case on its merits, and it is up to the traffic commissioner concerned, having full regards to all the circumstances, to decide whether revocation or another course is preferable in a particular case. The traffic commissioners and their deputies have regular meetings, however, to discuss the general handling of cases, and the senior traffic commissioner issues guidelines on specific aspects of the legislation, in order to promote consistency.

Hedge Planting

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure the maximum provision of hedge planting on the boundaries of new and widened roads for which his Department has a responsibility.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. John Fraser, dated 23 January 1995:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the provision of hedges along trunk roads and motorways.

The Highways Agency fully recognises the importance that hedgerows can have in integrating roads into the adjoining landscape, and the benefits they can bring to nature conservation. For this reason we are keen to see hedgerows retained, and in some cases restored, along boundaries wherever possible.

However, due to the difficulties associated with gaining access to maintain properly boundary hedgerows and fencing, it is our usual practice to provide hedgerows as accommodation works through negotiation with adjacent landowners. We estimate that, on average, around 100km of hedgerow are put back into the landscape in this way each year.

Any feature provided as an accommodation work becomes the property of the landowner once the establishment maintenance is complete, usually after three years. Because of this, some landowners are unwilling to accept hedge planting and we are not empowered to offer any inducements to persuade them to do so. In exceptional circumstances, where hedgerows are deemed essential to the integration of the road, and landowners are unwilling to accept hedge planting as an accommodation work, we may therefore undertake to plant hedges and maintain them throughout the life of a road scheme.

Advice on the use of the hedgerows in landscape design is included in the Design Manual for Roads and Bridges, Volume 10 (the Good Roads Guide), a copy of which is in the House of Commons library.

Driving Skills Training

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to encourage the use of driving skills training as a response to driving without due care and attention offences.

Mr. Norris: We have no training plans related specifically to drivers who have committed offences, but my right hon. Friend will shortly be launching a voluntary training scheme for drivers who have recently passed the driving test. I welcome the fact that certain police forces are providing driver rectification schemes.

London Transport (Funding)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sum is available to London Transport in its current financial year for the support of services considered desirable for social reasons; what criteria are applied by him or adopted by London Regional Transport; and what is the appropriate level of support in pence per passenger mile on those services.

Mr. Norris: The total Government grant available to London Transport in the current financial year is £373 million, excluding the ring-fenced provision for new lines. London Transport is responsible for decisions on the allocation of Government grant and its other resources, and on the general level and structure of services. Social benefits are among the factors taken into account by London Transport in so doing. There is no presumption in favour of any particular level of support per passenger mile.

Accident Prevention

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he is giving to the research findings of Douglas Stewart of the department of engineering at the university of Aberdeen in relation to accident prevention for child pedestrians and the use of pedestrian guard rails.

Mr. Norris: The Department is aware of Dr. Stewart's research on these subjects. Our research programme into accident causation will continue to look at ways of effectively evaluating these and other initiatives.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport from which individuals and organisations he seeks advice on the design of road curves.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Tam Dalyell, dated 23 January 1995:

The Minister for Local Transport and Road Safety, Mr. Stephen Norris, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about advice on the design of road curves.

The Agency and previously the Department of Transport have provided advice on the design of road curves for many years. This advice reflects the results of monitoring the performance of the network and special studies which have been carried out, in the main, by the Transport Research Laboratory.

Additionally, experience abroad is monitored through our various contacts, e.g., Members of the Permanent International Association of Road Congresses, and relevant technical papers are examined to see if any points emerge which require follow up.

Finally the requirements are exposed to peer group review from time to time through professional meetings etc. Where the Highway Agency's engineers find fully substantial evidence that the advice is in need of amendment then revised guidance is issued. There is full liaison with the Scottish Office, Welsh Office and DOENI over their requirements.

Unmanned Crossings

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the accident between a minibus and a train on the East Suffolk line at the Brampton level crossing on 21 December 1994; and what changes he is proposing to order for unmanned crossings as a consequence.

Mr. Watts: The collision between the 09.05 Ipswich to Lowestoft Sprinter train and a camper van occurred at about 10.15 am on 21 December on the automatic, open-level crossing at Brampton station, Suffolk. There was no derailment nor any injury to those on board the train. The driver of the van was seriously injured and was taken to hospital; the passengers, six children, were shaken but uninjured.

The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate and Railtrack are investigating the circumstances of this collision. There are no plans to alter the protection at this crossing at present. Railtrack and the Health and Safety Executive will continue to conduct publicity campaigns and research on level crossing safety.

Opencast Coal (Transport)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to ensure the transport of opencast coal by rail rather than road.

Mr. Watts: It is for local authorities to consider the use of rail and other alternatives to road when appraising planning applications for opencast coal extraction. The Government provide grants for the use of rail for freight where justified by environmental and other benefits.

Rail Freight

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what volume and value of freight was carried by British railways for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Watts: This information is contained in tables 1.12 and 5.11 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1994", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Questions

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the reason for the delay in replying in full to the hon. Member for Pembroke's question, tabled on 17 November 1994, for which the hon. Member received a holding answer on 23 November 1994.

Mr. Norris: A number of errors occurred in the processing of this question. I am writing to the hon. Member with full details and an apology.

Railway Station, Stratford

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions and on what dates he, Ministers or former Ministers in his Department met persons in Stratford, London, to discuss matters relating to the implications of building a new railway station at Stratford.

Dr. Mawhinney: There have been numerous meetings between present and former Ministers in my Department and persons interested in the implications of providing a station on the channel tunnel rail link at Stratford. I will be meeting representatives of the Stratford Promoter Group shortly about their proposals for a station.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions and on what dates he or Ministers or former Ministers in his Department informally met representatives of Decision Makers Ltd. to discuss matters relating to the development of a station at Stratford.

Dr. Mawhinney: Neither I nor my ministerial colleagues have held any such meetings to discuss matters relating to the development of a station at Stratford; records of the informal meetings of former Ministers are not kept by my Department.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the last six months civil servants in his Department met persons representative of interests in Stratford to discuss matters relating to proposals for a new Stratford station.

Dr. Mawhinney: There have been many meetings between officials in my Department and persons whose interests include a station on the channel tunnel rail link at Stratford.

Railway Station, Ebbsfleet

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he was personally briefed on Ebbsfleet by representatives of Decision Makers Ltd. either formally or informally.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received no such briefing.

Through Ticketing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many stations in (a) Grampian region, (b) Tayside region, (c) Highland region, (d) Scotland and (e) England will be capable of selling tickets to all destinations in the United Kingdom under the proposals published by the Rail Regulator, what is the ratio of stations to head of population for each of these areas, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts. [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The number of stations capable of selling tickets to all destinations will be unchanged.

The Rail Regulator is currently consulting on a range of options for ticket retailing obligations at stations. No decisions on the number of stations required to sell through tickets will be made until the consultations exercise is completed.

WALES

Civil Servant Travel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which airlines have been granted preferred carrier status for civil servant travel to overseas destinations.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has not granted preferred carrier status to any airline. The preferred carrier for any particular civil servant's travel depends on the circumstances of the journey concerned and the value for money.

Farm Hygiene Inspections

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farms were visited by Agricultural Development Advisory Service officers for the purposes of carrying out hygiene inspections in Wales in each year since 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of dairy farm hygiene inspection visits undertaken by ADAS in Wales is as follows—in financial years:

Year	Number
1990–91	2,721
1991–92	2,888
1992–93	2,557
1993–94	2,790
1994–95—to 31 December 1994	1,939

Opencast Mining

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of all sites for which approval has been sought for opencast mining operations, or on which opencast mining is currently taking place, indicating the latest estimate of annual tonnage extracted.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the total volume of opencast coal mined in Wales for each year since 1975 together with its percentage share of the total volume of coal mined and his comparable estimates for the next five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Figures for the production of opencast coal are not held centrally. However, the County Planning Officers Society has published figures from 1983–84. The figures relating to Wales are as follows:

Year	Thousand tonnes	Percentage of UK total
1983–84	1,547	10.5
1984–85	1,738	11.7
1985–86	2,174	14.2
1986–87	1,522	10.4
1987–88	1,677	10.3
1988–89	1,748	9.7
1989–90	2,088	11.2
1990–91	1,865	10.2
1991–92	2,402	12.6
1992–93	2,423	13.6
1993–94	2,504	15.4

The future production of opencast coal in Wales will depend on the commercial plans of the coal operators and planning decisions.

Dental Services

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many salaried dentists were employed by each family health service authority in Wales in December 1994; and how many unfilled vacancies there were.

Mr. Richards: On 1 December 1994 there were three salaried dentists in post in Dyfed, Gwynedd and Powys. There were three unfilled vacancies in Gwynedd.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dentists in Wales were providing NHS treatment in each of the family health services authority areas in each year since December 1990.

Mr. Richards: Information, relating to the number of dentists at 30 September, is given in the table:

Number of dentists providing NHS treatment[1]

FHSA	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994

[1] Principals, assistants and vocational trainees. Each dentist is included in the FHSA in which the majority of time is spent.

Mr. Ainger : To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent on providing the services of salaried dentists, including all establishment costs, employed by each Welsh family health services authority in 1992–93, 1993–94 and to date in 1994–95.

Mr. Richards: Expenditure on salaried dentists has been incurred by three FHSAs in Wales. Details of these are as follows:

	1993–94 £	1994–95 (to 31.12.94) £
Dyfed FHSA:
Remuneration	16,553	17,271
Expenses	66,789	28,206

Cormorants and Goosanders

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what requests he has from individuals and organisations to issue licences to shoot cormorants and goosanders on any Welsh river other than the River Wye; and what has been his decision in response to those requests.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Very few applications have been received to kill birds on other rivers in Wales in recent years and no licences have been issued.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the first licences were issued for the shooting of cormorants and goosanders on the River Wye.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: On 14 December 1994.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cormorants and goosanders have been shot on the River Wye following the issuing of licences by his Department.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Up until 18 January 1995, three goosanders and no cormorants had been shot under current licences.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which organisations requested that licences be issued for the shooting of cormorants and goosanders on the River Wye.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. The applications were from individual fishery owners.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he requested advice from the Countryside Council for Wales on the issuing of licences for the shooting of cormorants and goosanders on the River Wye.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In November 1994 as far as the current licences are concerned.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice was sought by his Department before issuing licences for the shooting of cormorants and goosanders on the River Wye.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Advice and recommendations were provided by Agricultural Development Advisory Service wildlife consultants. These took account of comments by the Countryside Council for Wales and information provided by the National Rivers Authority.

A-level Students

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with representatives of Welsh local education authorities and further education colleges concerning competition for students wishing to follow A-level courses.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with Welsh LEAs or FE colleges regarding this matter.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration has been given to the Calonste Gulbenkian Foundation report into discretionary awards; and what action he proposes in the light of its findings.

Mr. Richards: I refer the hon. Member to the reply, given to the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Boswell) on 23 November Official Report, columns 177–98, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Further and Higher Education.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the maximum annual discretionary award available to (a) further education students and (b) higher education students in each of the county councils in Wales.

Mr. Richards: The amount and conditions of a discretionary awards for students on courses of further education or courses of higher education which are not designated for mandatory awards purposes are entirely a matter for local education authorities. LEAs may also make discretionary awards to students on designated courses of higher education who are personally ineligible to receive mandatory awards. The amount and conditions of such an award must be the same as for a mandatory award for that course.

Further Education Access Fund

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the total Welsh further education access fund each further education college received on behalf of its students in 1992–93, 1993–94 and to date in 1994–95.

Mr. Richards: Details of allocations of access funds to further education institutions in Wales in the years 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 are given in the following table.

Allocation of access funds

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many individual applications were made to the further education access fund in 1992–93, 1993–94 and to date in 1994–95; and which further education colleges those students were attending.

Mr. Richards: Further education colleges in Wales received a total of 2,493 applications for assistance from the access funds in academic year 1992–93. Details of the applications received by each further education college are given in the following table. Similar information for academic years 1993–94 and 1994–95 is not yet available.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria are used to decide if a student is eligible for assistance from the further education access fund.

Mr. Richards: The Further Education Funding Council pays grants to institutions within the further education sector in Wales so that they may provide financial help to students whose access to further education might be inhibited by financial considerations or who, for whatever reason including physical or other disabilities, face financial difficulties.

In order to be eligible for assistance from the access funds, further education students must satisfy the residence requirement, be following full-time—including sandwich—courses of further or adult education and be aged 19 or over. It is for each institution to decide its own criteria and procedures for considering applications and making payments of access funds to eligible students, subject to the terms and conditions specified by the council and any other guidance from the council.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has in mind for the review of the role and function of the fundholding project management group at the end of the first year.

Mr. Redwood: The group will conduct its own review after the end of its first year of operation. I will then consider its future in the light of that review and circumstances obtaining at the time.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the number, date and place of the meetings of the general practitioner fundholder steering group since 23 March 1994; what sub-committees have been set up and to cover which topics; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the papers and studies commissioned and actions taken to implement the recommendations of the general practitioner fundholding project management group.

Mr. Redwood: The GPFH steering group has met on three occasions at the Hensol conference centre on 10 May, 13 September and 15 November 1994. No sub-committees have been set up.

The following topics have been considered:

Steering Group Terms of Reference
Weighted Capitation
Financial Management
Survey of GP practices
Fair Purchasing

Most of this work is continuing.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the initiatives by the general practitioner fundholding project management group, taken in (a) promotion of general practitioner fundholding to non-fundholders, (b) setting up a strategic planning process, (c) meeting the need for financial control and an acceptable method of determining allocations, (d) evaluating the scheme and (e) evaluating the implications of the onset of unitary authorities on the relationship with fundholders.

Mr. Redwood: The GP fundholding project management group has no executive function. Any action required in respect of views or recommendations arising from its work will be a matter for my Department.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the executive committee of the general practitioner fundholding project management group and its membership and functions.

Mr. Redwood: The GPFH steering group does not have an executive committee.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the Welsh conference on general practitioner fundholding mentioned in his letter of 23 March 1994 to all general practitioner fundholders.

Mr. Redwood: The conference was held on 14 June 1994. The Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones), gave the keynote address and other speeches dealt with matters relating to the scheme. GP Fundholders and representatives from DHAs, FHSAs, and hospitals responded to an invitation widely distributed in the service.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the percentage figures for (a) brand name and (b) generic prescribing for the average of all general practitioner fundholders in Wales in (i) the second year before they became fundholders, (ii) the year before they became fundholders, (iii) the first year after they became fundholders and (iv) the average of each subsequent year;

(2) if he will list the percentage brand name and generic prescribing ratio for the average of all general practitioner fundholders in (a) the second year before they became fundholders, (b) the year before they became fundholders, (c) the first year of fundholding and (d) the average for all subsequent years;

(3) if he will list the average value of capital projects at the surgery premises of (a) general practitioner fundholders and (b) non–fundholding general practitioners, in each of the past three years.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the percentage figures for (a) brand name and (b) generic prescribing for (i) general practitioner fundholders and (ii) non–general practitioner fundholders in each family health service authority in Wales for each of the past three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: Information is not available in the form requested. The percentages of generic prescribing in each family health services authority in Wales is as follows:

	October 1992	October 1993	October 1994
Clwyd Fundholders	40.89	50.00	53.66
Dyfed Fundholders	50.87	52.87	51.62

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will specify the policy objectives of the general practitioner fundholding project management group, relating to the NHS in Wales and the other developments relevant to the development of the general practitioner fundholding scheme.

Mr. Redwood: I wrote to the hon. Member on 17 January about the GP fundholding project management group's terms of reference and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to institute a full valuation of the surgery premises at (a) general practitioner fundholders and (b) non–fundholders; what estimate his Department has made of the average value of surgery premises of (i) general practitioner fundholders and (ii) non–fundholders; what estimate his Department has made of the rate of change of that average capital value of (1) general practitioner fundholders and (2) non–fundholders' surgery premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: General practitioners are independent self employed contractors in the NHS. Under their terms of service, they themselves are required to provide adequate practice premises from which to see their patients. The capital value of, and investment in, the premises they own is a matter for them, and their interest in any premises they may rent is between them and their landlord. It would not be appropriate therefore for me to institute a full valuation of their practice premises.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list short-term loans given to each NHS trust in Wales, since its inception, stating what the interest rate was, what the term was, if security was requested and provided and for what purpose the loan was requested; and if he will detail any requests that were refused and the purpose for which they were sought.

Mr. Redwood: Information on short term loans to NHS trusts in Wales is as follows:

Trust	Loan (£000)	Interest rate per cent.	Term (days)
Nevill Hall and District	220	5.2	10
	230	5.3	7
	175	5.2	10
	175	5.3	7
	175	5.2	12
	175	5.3	7
Pembrokeshire	150	5.2	14
	100	5.3	7
	300	5.7	10
	200	5.8	11
Morriston	1,029	5.1	92
	1,162	5.2	124
	800	5.3	31
	850	5.4	41
Gwynedd Community Health	580	5.0	29
	150	6.2	111
	200	6.4	99
Bridgend and District	1,000	6.2	121
	1,000	6.3	91
South East Wales Ambulance	500	5.3	183
	500	6.2	155
North Wales Ambulance	130	5.1	60
Derwen	105	5.2	13
Rhondda Healthcare	300	5.2	14
Clwydian Community Care	900	5.3	178
	500	6.0	182
Velindre	15	5.2	14
Gwynedd Hospitals	500	5.3	10

Security is required only in the case of commercial loans. All short–term loans to NHS trusts in Wales have been provided by my Department for financial management purposes. No such applications have been refused.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what was the absenteeism rate for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(2) what was the absenteeism rate for the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(3) what was the absenteeism rate for the Intervention Board in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(4) what was the absenteeism rate for the Central Veterinary Laboratory in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(5) what was the absenteeism rate for the Central Science Laboratory in 1991, 1992 and 1993;

(6) what was the absenteeism rate for the Pesticides Safety Directorate in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Waldegrave: These matters are the responsibilities of the chief executives concerned. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member direct.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 20 December 1994:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about absenteeism rates in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD), as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible as Chief Executive.

The VMD has a total staff of 102 as at 1 December 1994. In terms of absenteeism related to sickness, the information you requested for the Directorate is as follows:

Year	Percentage
1991	3.4
1992	2.6

Letter from Dr. J. M. Walsh to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 23 January 1995:

Recently, you tabled a Parliamentary Question (PQ 240) enquiring after the absenteeism rate for ADAS in 1991/1993. Subsequently, you requested additional data for 1994. The figures are as follows:

Year	Average days per person
1992	6.7
1993	[1]8.5
1994	7.8 (year to 14 December 1994)

[1] Introduction of new work recording system.

Please note that these figures contain many reasons for absenteeism such as sick leave, maternity leave, special leave for other purposes.

Letter from Guy Stapleton to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 23 January 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question about the absenteeism rate for the Intervention Board in 1991, 1992 and 1993, as the matter is one within my operational responsibility.

Sick absence rates in the Intervention Board for the financial years 199–91, 1991–92 and 1992–93, calculated as a percentage of total man years, were:

Year	Percentage
1990–91	4.4
1992–93	6.7

The increase in 1992–93 was mainly the result of a relatively small number of the Agency's staff who were then on long-term sick leave. Most of these officers have since retired on medical grounds.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 23 January 1995:

To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what was the absenteeism rate for the Central Veterinary Laboratory in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

As you know the Minister has asked that I write to you direct with the answer to your question.

CVL was launched as an Executive Agency on 2 April 1990. Information on absences since that date is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Dr. P. I. Stanley to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 23 January 1995:

Absenteeism Rate in the Central Science Laboratory 1991–93

The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) was launched as an executive agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 1 April 1992. Questions relating to staff when they formed part of the core Department before the Agency's launch are for the Minister to consider.

Since becoming an Agency CSL has kept management information, including details of absenteeism (unauthorised absences), on a financial year basis. During the 1992–93 financial year there were no unauthorised absences and during 1993–94 there was a single incidence of eight days duration involving a junior member of the scientific staff. This was out of a total number of staff in post of 488.

On 1 April 1994 CSL was re-launched as an enlarged Agency following the merger with the Food Science Laboratories at Aberdeen and Norwich. To date in the current financial year there have been no instances of absenteeism in the enlarged Agency.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 23 January 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your Question about absenteeism rates in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate.

The Directorate was launched as an executive agency on 1 April 1993. Information on absences since that date is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Questions relating to staff when they formed part of the core Department before the agency's launch are for the Minister to consider.

Flooding

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 614, what evidence he has that agricultural practices which leave land without grass or crop cover can lead to an increased rate of run-off.

Mr. Jack: Grass or, indeed, any kind of crop cover has the ability to retain water, thereby leading to a natural decrease in the rate of run-off. The precise effect of crop cover on rates of run-off will however vary according to a number of factors including slope of the land, type of soil, rate of rainfall and agricultural practices.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 613, what assessment he has made of the need for extensive surveys and flood modelling to assess if more run-off from the land is occurring and flood damage is becoming more frequent and widespread.

Mr. Jack: Changes in flood response in any particular catchment depend on a combination of factors notably land use, topography and climate. Ministry research carried out by the Institute of Hydrology suggests little evidence of any significant overall trend in the rate of runoff from land over time. In the light of this, the Ministry has no plans for more extensive surveys over and above those being undertaken by the National Rivers Authority to inform local planning authorities of flood risk areas.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Deva: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that other member states comply with the rules in the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jack: Ensuring member state compliance with Community rules, including those concerning the CAP, is the responsibility of the European Commission.

The most effective sanction against non-compliance with CAP regulations is the Commission's powers to "disallow"—not reimburse—member states' expenditure which it believes was not in accordance with the rules. In December 1994, in its decision on the clearance of the 1991 CAP accounts, the Commission disallowed £1.2 billion of member states' 1991 CAP expenditure—almost 5 per cent. of the total. The Government will continue to do everything possible to ensure that the Commission makes full and proper use of these powers. For example, as a result of the United Kingdom's legal challenge to Commission disallowance decisions relating to breaches of the EC milk quota legislation by Italy, Spain and Greece, the disallowance due is increased by over 50 per cent.

We also fully support a measure soon to be implemented which, among other things, seeks to speed up the clearance of accounts process and improve the financial management of the CAP in all member states.

In addition, we are always ready to press the Commission to take action against another member state whenever evidence of breaches of the rules comes to light. Our agricultural attachés in other member states have specific instructions to be alert to such breaches. As a result of our initiatives, the Commission has recently ruled illegal state aids to French pig producers and Irish mushroom growers, requiring the aids to be repaid with interest.

Farm Hygiene Inspections

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms were visited by Agricultural Development and Advisory Service officers for the purposes of carrying out hygiene inspections in England in each year since 1990.

Mrs. Browning: The number of farm hygiene inspections carried out by ADAS officers in England in each financial year since 1990 is as follows:

	Number
1990–91	14,457
1991–92	12,112
1992–93	12,896
1993–94	12,602
1994[1]	9,203

[1] April–December

Fishing (Spanish Vessels)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what scientific advice he has received on the impact on fish stocks of 40 Spanish vessels fishing in the Irish box.

Mr. Jack: Throughout the negotiations on the integration of Spain and Portugal into the common fisheries policy I have been advised by the fisheries scientists at the Ministry's directorate of fisheries research at Lowestoft.

Spanish fishing in the Irish box from 1 January 1996 will be constrained not only by the number of vessels they are permitted there but by their quotas for the relevant International Council for the Exploration of the Seas zones, and by any effort control measures which may be adopted in relation to their fleet during 1995.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 210, what was the destination of the 6,662 cattle exported for immediate slaughter; and if all the animals were over six months of age.

Mrs. Browning: The destinations—and number of animals—are: France, 83; the Netherlands, 233; Republic of Ireland, 32; and Northern Ireland, 6,314.

European Community rules prohibit the export from the United Kingdom to other member states of cattle which are over six months of age—unless they were born outside the UK. Animals consigned from Great Britain to Northern Ireland are included in the ANIMO figures because health certification is required for such movements, and are not subject to an upper age limit.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of (a) lorries carrying live animals and (b) animals, by species, exported live through Dover to Zeebrugge on the weekend of 13 to 15 January, stating whether these animals were being exported for (i) immediate slaughter, (ii) further fattening or (iii) breeding only.

Mrs. Browning: Such information could be provided only by the ferry companies concerned.

ENVIRONMENT

Area Cost Adjustments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much more would be distributed to (a) Humberside and (b) east midlands counties if the area cost adjustment was adjusted as proposed by the Association of County Councils; and if he will make a statement on his reasons for rejecting such an adjustment;

(2) what were his reasons for rejecting the Association of County Councils' proposals in July 1994 for reassessing the area cost adjustment on the basis of actual spending; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his estimate of the change in the area cost adjustment if it was based on actual rather than theoretical labour cost differentials as indicated by local authority pay scales and employee budgets; what are his reasons for using theoretical costs; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is his estimate of the reduction in the gain to the south-east in the current year through the area cost adjustment of basing it only on London weighting;

(5) what are his reasons for rejecting the proposals made by the Association of County Councils in 1993 for adjusting the area cost adjustment on the basis of the actual payments to teachers, firemen and police; how much would have been deducted from the adjustment to the south-east if he had done; and if he will make a statement;

(6) when he expects his new review of costs as a new base for the area cost adjustment to be (a) completed and (b) considered; on what grounds it is being carried out on the basis of travel-to-work areas rather than local authority areas; and what are the actual costs and wages for local authority employees or average costs;

(7) what evidence and research he relied on to demonstrate the existence of a general labour market requiring higher wages to attract good-quality staff in the south-east; and what assessment he makes of the margin of difference this makes in actual average wages of (a) teachers, (b) firemen and (c) local authority manuals between London and the south-east and the east midlands.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The area cost adjustment is based mainly on evidence of differences between areas in rates of pay in occupations within which local authorities are likely to have to compete for employees. The evidence of rates of pay is taken from the new earnings survey, and is updated each year.

The Association of County Councils has criticised the scale of the area cost adjustment. In 1993, it suggested that the adjustment should, in the case of teachers, police, and firefighters, take account only of London weighting payments. In 1994, the association suggested that other specific employment-related costs might also be included, although it believed that, even if this were done, the total of the area cost adjustment would be less than it is.

We have misgivings, however, about the association's proposals in 1993 to base the area cost adjustment on London weighting payments alone because this would not reflect all the variations in employment costs faced by local authorities. We also have misgivings about the association's proposals in 1994 to identify and cost all the extra expenses related to operating in London and the south-east. This is partly because we seek to avoid reflecting in standard spending assessments the actual expenditures of authorities; and partly because we would be reluctant to introduce additional judgments into the determination of the SSA formula. We remain to be persuaded that a generally agreed list of extra costs could be identified and costed objectively, without reference to evidence of prevailing rates of pay in the local employment market of the kind which already forms the basis of the area cost adjustment.

The association's observations in 1994 were not developed into a methodology which could be applied in the calculation of the area cost adjustment. It is therefore not possible to say what the area cost adjustment would have been if the association's views had formed the basis of the calculation. Nor does the Department currently have sufficient information to calculate the level of the area cost adjustment if it were based solely on actual wage payments, local authority pay scales or London weighting. Any change in the basis of the area cost adjustment would also affect other aspects of the formula for calculating SSAs. For example, there would need to be a reappraisal of the weighting given to additional education needs.

Nevertheless, my hon. Friend has discussed with the Association of County Councils its views on the area cost adjustment. We are prepared to consider further any proposals they may make for an alternative methodology for calculating the adjustment.

We also propose to commission research this year which may enable the area cost adjustment to take account of variations in rates of pay between travel-to-work areas in all parts of England. Travel-to-work areas are being considered because they may be a better reflection of the pattern of local labour markets than are the administrative areas of local authorities. The progress of the research will depend both on the availability of the necessary data and the success of the researchers in developing a method by which it could be used in the area cost adjustment. We will consider the findings of the research, once they are available.

Departmental Administration

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he made of the advantages and disadvantages of moving Cumbria from the northern standard region into the integrated north-west region;

(2) what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of transferring Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, East Sussex, Hampshire, Isle of Wight, Kent, Oxfordshire, Surrey and West Sussex from the south-east standard region into the south-east integrated region;

(3) what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of transferring Merseyside from the north-west standard region and creating a free standing integrated Merseyside region;

(4) what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of transferring Greater London from the south-east standard region to the Greater London integrated region;

(5) what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of transferring Cambridgeshire, Norfolk and Suffolk from the East Anglian standard region and Bedfordshire, Essex and Herfordshire from the south-east standard region into the new integrated eastern region.

Sir Paul Beresford: The 10 Government offices for the regions brought together the existing regional offices of the Departments of Employment, Trade and Industry, Transport and the Environment. The proposed boundaries of the new offices harmonised the existing departmental regional boundaries and were adopted, after due consultation, when the new offices opened for business in April 1994. The boundaries are depicted in my Department's annual report, available from the House of Commons Library. There is no direct relationship between the boundaries of the Government offices for the regions and the standard regions, which are used primarily for statistical purposes.

Council Tax

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against council tax bandings are currently outstanding (a) nationally and (b) by each valuation office.

Mr. Curry: Some 959,101 proposals to alter the valuation list had been received in England by the end of December 1994, of which 229, 084 were outstanding. I am placing in the Library a table which breaks these totals down by valuation office region and office.

Railway Station, Stratford

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions and on what dates he or Ministers or former Ministers in his Department met persons representative of interests in Stratford, east London, to discuss matters relating to proposals for a new Stratford station.

Sir Paul Beresford: Matters relating to the proposal for an intermediate station on the new channel tunnel rail link at Stratford in east London have been raised with various Ministers in this Department in a variety of meetings over the last two years. For example, in that period, there have been four meetings of the East Thames Forum, in which Ministers responsible for urban regeneration have met the leaders of east London local authorities. The then Minister with responsibility for urban regeneration, my right hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton, (Sir G. Young), visited the Stratford site in August 1993 and he and the Minister of State with special responsibility for the east Thames corridor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon, (Mr. Curry), received a presentation from the Stratford promoters in November 1993.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions and on what dates he or Ministers or former Ministers in his Department have met persons in Stratford, London to discuss matters relating to the regeneration of east London.

Sir Paul Beresford: Stratford is the focal point of a number of major regeneration initiatives in east London. These includes Stratford city challenge, a successful single regeneration budget bid and the European regional development fund funded "East London and the Lea Valley Corridor" programme. Stratford is also an important part of the Government's Thames gateway initiative. Since May 1992, the earliest date for which information is readily available, the Secretary of State and departmental Ministers have visited Stratford in connection with these regeneration initiatives as follows:

Secretary of State

Regeneration of east London conference, Old Town hall, Stratford, 19 October 1993.

Opening of new Stratford bus station, 16 November 1994.

Sir George Young

East London housing association, Victoria street, Stratford, 9 March 1993.

Marking the city challenge boundary, 2 August 1993.

Annual review, Stratford city challenge, 1 February 1994.

Tour of Stratford city challenge, 25 November 1994.

Announcement of successful SRB bids, Old Town hall, Stratford, 6 December 1994.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the last six months civil servants in his Department met persons representative of interests in Stratford to discuss matters relating to proposals for a new Stratford station.

Sir Paul Beresford: In the last six months, officials from my Department have met officers from the London borough of Newham and others with an interest in the proposed intermediate station on the new channel tunnel rail link at Stratford on a number of occasions. Similar meetings have been held with those with an interest in other intermediate stations. For example, as part of the public consultation exercise on the Thames gateway planning framework, published on 7 September 1994 and more generally. Officials from the Department's Thames gateway task force have regularly attended, as observers, meetings of the Stratford Station Promoters Group.

Railway Station, Ebbsfleet

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date Ministers in his Department were briefed by Decision Makers Ltd. either formally or informally on the international station at Ebbsfleet.

Sir Paul Beresford: Ministers naturally meet a wide range of people at social occasions to which they are invited, and it is inevitable that issues of current concern are raised during conversations at such occasions. However, the Secretary of State and Ministers in this Department have had no briefing meetings with Decision Makers Ltd. on the proposed intermediate station on the channel tunnel rail link at Ebbsfleet. They were fully briefed on the station proposals during visits to the local authority areas concerned, when they met councillors, officers and representatives of the landowners, Blue Circle Properties. The Minister of State with special responsibility for Thames gateway met representatives of Dartford borough council in June 1994, to discuss the regeneration of Kent Thamesside. Representatives of Decision Makers Ltd. were present at that meeting as advisers to Dartford council.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Open Government

30. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will establish an investigation into the differential charges made to applicants under the code of practice on official information by non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: No.

40. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action is being taken to give the public more access to Government information.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: We are continuing to implement the policy set down in the White Paper on open government.

Public Appointments

36. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will indicate the percentage of the total number of appointments to public bodies who are (i) women, (ii) of Asian origin, (iii) of Afro-Caribbean origin and (iv) of other ethnic minority origin.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: As I announced to the House on Friday, the proportion of public appointments held by women is 30 per cent.; and 2.6 per cent. of appointments are held by black and Asian people.

County Palatinate

37. Mr. Elletson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will next visit the County Palatinate to discuss science.

Mr. David Hunt: Shortly.

Civil Service Morale

38. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what new proposals he has to improve morale in the civil service.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The best way to improve morale is to allow staff to perform to the best of their abilities in their chosen career. The Government's civil service reforms enable staff to focus their attention on delivering high quality public services efficiently and effectively, with a minimum of central oversight.

Research Council Staffing

41. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of Sir John Cadogan's review of the staffing of the research councils.

Mr. David Hunt: Sir John Cadogan is concluding his discussions with the research councils regarding their plans for 1995. Thereafter, the continuing search for improvements in efficiency and effectiveness is an essential part of the Government's commitment to ensure that the costs and complexities of administering the research councils' systems are minimised.

Citizens Charters

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further citizens charters he is proposing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The Northern Ireland further and higher education charters will be published later this year. This will bring the total number of charters to 42.

In addition, public service organisations continue to develop their existing service standards and a number of revised charters will be published later in the year. These include the contributors charter for national insurance payers, the council tenants charter and the court service charter, which will replace the existing courts charter.

SCOTLAND

M77

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expressions of concern he has received regarding proposed funding for the Ayr road route, M77, from the European Commission.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been no formal exchanges with the European Commission regarding funding for the M77 Ayr road route. However, the issue of funding of roads was discussed in the context of negotiations about the western Scotland single programming document, which was approved by the Commission on 16 December 1994. The SPD provides that support from the European regional development fund will be available for projects which construct or improve access roads to new or existing sites for industrial, business or tourism development where there is demonstrable potential for significant job-creating investments.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with the European Commission about the environmental impact assessment for the Ayr road route, M77.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The United Kingdom authorities have received an informal letter of inquiry from the Commission on that subject and we propose to respond by the end of this month.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he took to ensure that a proper environmental impact assessment was carried out before he gave consent for the Ayr road route, M77.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A full and wide-ranging public local inquiry was undertaken into the proposed road scheme in 1988. The environmental assessment of the scheme was presented by the joint promoters at the inquiry. The report of the inquiry, including a summary of the evidence and arguments, was submitted to my right hon. Friend before his decision on whether to proceed with the road proposals.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken to secure European Commission funding for the Ayr road route, M77.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend does not intend to seek European Community funding for the trunk road sections of the proposed M77 Ayr road route for which he is responsible. It would be for Strathclyde regional council to decide whether to apply for funding for all or any part of the route for which it is responsible.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list which interested groups he consulted during the planning stage of the Ayr road route, M77; and what were the results of this consultation period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: More than 50 organisations were consulted, including the National Trust for Scotland, the Countryside Commission for Scotland, regional, district and community councils, ScotRail and the National Farmers Union. The consultations showed general support for the proposals, but also identified some specific concerns. In those cases where the concerns could not be resolved by discussion, they were considered at the subsequent local public inquiry.

Scottish Renewables Obligation

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he has taken to ensure that genuine competition exists between potential contractors for the Scottish renewables obligation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: There was considerable interest in the first order under the scottish renewables obligation. A bulletin describing the arrangements for the SRO was issued by my officials in October 1993 to about 300 interested organisations and individuals. As a result, some 190 projects were submitted for consideration. Following a technical and economic scrutiny of these projects, about 140 were judged to be acceptable by the Office of Electricity Regulation. These formed the subject of the advice given to my right hon. Friend by the Director General of Electricity Supply. I understand that 30 of these 140 projects have now been offered contracts by the public electricity supply companies under the terms of the first order. There was therefore very keen competition for contracts across the whole range of technologies included.

Bridges

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken as a result of the BD21 directive of 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The bridge assessment and strengthening programme to upgrade all sub-standard bridges on the trunk road network started in 1988 and is expected to be completed by 1998. This is in line with the rest of the United Kingdom. The regional councils were advised to implement a similar programme for regional roads in December 1988 and the Scottish Office Industry Department has taken this into account in the capital allocations to individual regions.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from the Scottish Road Haulage Association in relation to the strengthening of bridges.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office Industry Department has had no representations from the Road Haulage Association Scottish division in relation to the strengthening of bridges.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the attendance figures for 1994 reported by the national museum and galleries in Scotland, broken down to the individual institutions but including their substations, with the percentage change from 1993.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 19 January 1995]: The information is as follows:

	1994	Percentage change since 1993
National museums of Scotland	1,120,240	+4
National galleries of Scotland	883,928	+18

Figures for the national museums of Scotland relate to the Royal museum of Scotland, the museum of antiquities, the Scottish agricultural museum, the Scottish united services museum, the museum of flight, the museum of costume and the gasworks museum. The national galleries of Scotland figures relate to the national gallery of Scotland, the Scottish national portrait gallery and the Scottish national gallery of modern art.

Youth Service

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what calculations he has made of the changes in levels of funding for the youth service in Scotland since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 January 1995]: In Scotland, the youth service is part of local authority provision for community education. It is not possible to identify separately expenditure on the youth service. Total expenditure by local authorities on community education in 1989–90 was £62 million rising to £79.2 million in 1992–93.

In addition, the Scottish Office Education Department administers a scheme of grants to voluntary organisations in the community education field. Grants paid to organisations engaged in the provision of youth services totalled £0.57 million in 1989–90 rising to £0.69 million in 1993–94.

Goats

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) goat producers and (b) goats there are in Scotland; and what financial assistance is available to goat producers in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The number of goats recorded in the census at June 1994 was 11,123 kept on 1,047 agricultural units.

There are some grant assistance schemes which may be of interest to those who keep goats. Goat producers, provided that they meet the eligibility criteria, would qualify for grant under the farm and conservation grant scheme. There are also the marketing and development scheme and, in relation to goat milk and meat products, the EC processing and marketing grant scheme. Some financial assistance in objective 1 and 5b areas may also be available.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all sites in Scotland where low-level radioactive waste is dumped or stored; what steps are taken to ensure that no higher level waste is also included; and what measures are taken to protect the public from any potential dangers.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The following landfill sites in Scotland are approved by Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate for the controlled burial of low level radioactive wastes from hospitals, universities and other small users and are still receiving these wastes:

Site	Site location
Kilgarth	Glasgow
Summerston	Glasgow
Dalmacoulter	Monklands
Braehead	Edinburgh
Melville Wood	North East Fife
Riverside	Dundee
Ness	Aberdeen
Lower Polmaise	Stirling
East Saltoun	East Lothian
Longman	Inverness

At AEA Technology's premises at Dounreay, low-level radioactive waste produced by activities on the site is disposed of by burial on site. Before disposal, detailed monitoring of waste takes place to ensure that only low level waste is disposed of by this route.

All wastes disposed of by these users are classified as low-level waste and the disposals take place in accordance with authorisations issued by Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Means-tested Benefits

8. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of his Department's expenditure on benefit is means-tested; and what was the figure 15 years ago.

Mr. Lilley: The percentage of my Department's expenditure on income-related benefits was 15.7 per cent. in 1979–80 and 34 per cent. in 1993–94.

Social Fund

9. Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund grants, for each of the last three years for which figures are available, were awarded above the new maximum ceiling of £875.

Mr. Roger Evans: In 1992–93, 27,800 social fund funeral payments were made for amounts more than £875. There were 41,300 such payments in 1993–94 and 31,500 have been made so far in the current financial year.

Benefits (Post Office Payments)

13. Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to enable pensioners to choose to have their benefits paid through the Post Office.

Mr. Lilley: We are committed to giving pensioners the choice of payment directly into their bank or building society by automated credit transfer or at the post office. For pensioners and others who do not want to be paid in this way, we are planning significant improvements in the delivery of benefits at post offices. The post office network will be automated, and order books and girocheques replaced with a benefit payment card.

Automation will virtually eliminate instrument of payment fraud, produce administrative savings for the Department, and provide a more responsive service to our customers, as well as providing Post Office Counters Ltd. the opportunity to automate other counter business. We are looking to the private sector to suggest how the system might best achieve these objectives, and to design, build, finance and operate the system under a contract that would provide payment based on transaction volumes. I was able to announce on 9 December Official Report, column 385, the names of five companies, some of which lead consortia, which have been invited to further develop their solutions.

26. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what forms of payment pensioners will be eligible to opt for when having their benefits paid through the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Pensioners will continue to be able to choose to be paid through the post office by using either automated credit transfer into girobank or National Savings bank accounts, or order books.

In future, there will be major changes for those who do not choose ACT. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has announced plans to automate the payment of benefits at post offices. Order books will eventually be replaced by a benefit payment card which will allow access to information held electronically. People paid by ACT will not be affected.

Child Support

17. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend the scope of the child support appeal tribunals.

20. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reform the operation of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend the scope of the child support appeal tribunals.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Members to the statement made earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

22. Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the fifth report by the Social Security Select Committee of Session 1993–94 on the operation of the Child Support Act 1991, HC420; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Government have considered carefully the recent report of the Social Security Select Committee and today made their response. A copy is in the Library.

23. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many reduced benefit directions have been issued by the Child Support Agency to date.

Mr. Burt: From 5 April 1993 to 31 October 1994, the Child Support Agency referred 13,830 cases to the Benefits Agency to consider the implementation of a reduced benefit direction.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish a compliance cost assessment for the Child Support Act 1991.

Mr. Arbuthnot: We have published the compliance cost assessment for the Child Support Act 1991 today. The report highlights areas where the work of the agency affects employers and represents a cost to them. It has been produced in consultation with the DSS employers' panel and the DSS employers' sub-group for child support.

Copies of the compliance cost assessment have been placed in the Library.

Disabled People

19. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of people receiving income support assistance with their mortgage interest payments are people with disabilities.

Mr. Roger Evans: Approximately 14 per cent. of claimants currently receiving income support mortgage interest payments are receiving the disability premium.

21. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a further statement on the work of his Department's Maxwell pensions unit.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Maxwell pensions unit continues to provide substantial administrative support to the Maxwell pensioners trust and to work with all concerned to encourage the resolution of Maxwell pensions disputes. The unit will stay in business while it has useful work to do, although it clearly does not represent an infinite resource.

Occupational Pension Funds

24. Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve the accountability of occupational pension funds.

25. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reform the operation of occupational pension funds.

Mr. Arbuthnot: We published our proposals in the Pensions Bill which was introduced in the House of Lords on 15 December 1994.

Maternity Grant (Blyth Valley)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women claimed maternity grant in Blyth Valley in the last year for which figures are available, and what is the estimated number of women who will receive social fund payments for maternity in the year 1993-94.

Mr. Roger Evans: Around 560,000 maternity grants were made in Great Britain in 1986–87, the last year in which the grants were awarded. The corresponding figures for Blyth Valley are not available.

The available figures on social fund maternity claims and payments for the Benefits Agency district office of Northumberland are set out in the table.

Year	Number of maternity payments claimed in Northumberland district	Number of maternity payments awarded in Northumberland district
1991–92	1,072	907
1992–93	1,160	988
1993–94	1,239	1,058

The total number of social fund maternity payments awarded in Great Britain in 1993–94 was 230,220; the number for 1994–95 is estimated at 312,900. Estimates cannot be made other than on a national basis.

Income Support

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the total number of claimants receiving assistance, (b) the average cost per claimant and (c) the total cost of assistance to (i) home owners, (ii) local authority tenants and (iii) private and housing association tenants, in receipt of income support towards their housing costs in each year since 1989.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the tables.

(i) Home owners
Number of income support cases with mortgage interest included in the assessment	281,000	310,000	411,000	499,000	555,000
Average weekly cost	£24.16	£34.32	£44.41	£44.02	£42.17
Implied annual cost	£353 million	£553 million	£949 million	£1,143 million	£1,217 million
(ii) Local authority tenants
Number of income support cases in local authority housing	1,739,000	1,678,000	1,657,000	1,754,000	1,842,000
Average weekly cost	£19.93	£22.74	£26.08	£29.88	£32.23
Implied annual cost	£1,802 million	£1,984 million	£2,247 million	£2,725 million	£3,087 million
(iii) Private and housing association tenants
Number of income support cases in private housing and housing association	552,000	589,000	673,000	836,000	1,004,000
Average weekly cost	£25.48	£31.35	£37.35	£43.20	£48.58
Implied annual cost	£731 million	£960 million	£1,307 million	£1,878 million	£2,536 million

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of recipients of rent allowance housing benefits at 31 May 1994 in (a) housing association properties and (b) private rented properties; what was the average rent of each of these properties; and what was the average rent allowance being paid for each of them.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table.

	Recipients (thousands)		Average weekly eligible rent			Average Weekly rent allowance
	Housing Association Tenants	Other Private Tenants	All Private Tenants £	Housing Association Tenants £	Other Private Tenants £	All Private Tenants £	Housing Association Tenants £	Other Private Tenants £
May 1993	412	1,068	46.98	39.88	49.86	43.61	35.75	46.80
May 1994	508	1,126	50.78	n/a	n/a	47.21	n/a	n/a

Note:
[1]Information relates to eligible rent for housing benefit as actual rents paid are not available. Detailed average rent and benefit figures are for May 1993 as May 1994 figures are not yet available.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of his estimated savings on invalidity benefit in 1995–96 and 1996–97 will be achieved by (a) an estimated reduction in the number of successful new claimants and (b) existing claimants losing benefit.

Mr. Hague: In 1995–96, 13 per cent. of the estimated savings are accounted for by the exclusion of new claimants as a result of the medical test of incapacity and 41 per cent. by the exclusion of existing claimants. In 1996–97, 17 per cent. of the estimated savings are accounted for by the exclusion of new claimants as a result of the medical test and 48 per cent. by the exclusion of existing claimants.

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about measures being taken to review cases handled at the disability living allowance unit in Blackpool.

Mr. Hague: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Jane Kennedy, dated 20 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about measures being taken to review cases handled at the Disability Living Allowance (DLA) Unit in Blackpool.

The Benefits Agency is committed to improving customer service by working towards the introduction of a One Stop service. Following the introduction of DLA in April 1992 the Agency has looked carefully at the options available in processing DLA claims and reviews.

Currently new claims are the responsibility of Disability Benefits Centres (DBC) before the centralised unit in Blackpool takes over the case. Our research has shown that the three month period following the initial decision is the period of high activity and this also represents the prescribed time limit for applications for a review on any grounds.

A pilot exercise is currently being carried out at Newcastle DBC where the file is retained at the DBC and almost all of the activity, including reviews, that arises in the three month period following the decision on a new claim is dealt with; some work done by specialist sections, such as Motability agreements, is retained at the DLA Unit in Blackpool.

If the pilot at Newcastle successfully demonstrates efficiency and an improved customer service, consideration will be given to extending the practice to other DBCs.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the absenteeism rate for (a) his Department (b) the Benefits Agency, (c) the Child Support Agency, (d) the Contributions Agency, (e) the Information Technology Services Agency, (f) the Resettlement Agency and (g) the War Pensions Agency in each year since 1991.

Mr. Hague: Information on sickness absence rates can be supplied in the form requested only for 1993, the latest year for which figures are available. The average number of working day's absence per staff year due to sickness was as follows:

Department or Agency	Days
Department of Social Security	12.2
Benefits Agency	12.8
Child Support Agency	9.8
Contributions Agency	11.0
Information Technology Services Agency	9.4
Resettlement Agency	14.6

The War Pensions Agency was not in existence in 1993.

In 1992, the average number of working days lost throughout the Department due to sickness was 9.3 and in 1991 the number was 11.2.

State Earnings-related Pensions Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assumptions he has made about (a) the growth in the retail prices index and (b) the growth in earnings when changing the calculations of the earnings factors used to derive SERPS entitlement as proposed in the Pensions Bill;

(2) if the changes in the calculation of the earnings factors used to derive SERPS entitlement contained in the Pensions Bill will (a) reduce the sum paid out to the pensioner from what it is currently forecast to be, (b) contain any element of retrospection and (c) impact in a regressive way;

(3) what is his forecast of the cost or saving in paying out SERPS pensions brought about by the changes in the calculation of the earnings factors used to derive SERPS entitlement contained in the Pensions Bill;

(4) if he will list by earnings decile the impact of the changes in the calculation of the earnings factors used to derive SERPS entitlement contained in the Pensions Bill by comparison with the forecast outcome under the present arrangement for the years (a) 2000–01, (b) 2010–11, (c) 2020–21, (d) 2030–31, (e) 2040–41 and (f) 2050–51;

(5) how the amount paid to SERPS beneficiaries will be affected by the changes in the calculation of the earnings factors used to derive SERPS entitlement from 6 April 2000 onwards contained in the Pensions Bill.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The changes in the calculation of earnings factors used to derive SERPS, as outlined in the Pensions Bill—annualisation of SERPS—is a technical change to the SERPS formula which will restore the original policy intention that SERPS entitlements are based on average earnings between the lower and upper earnings limit.

The change will result in a recalculation of the amount of SERPS payable in respect of past years for those people who become entitled from 6 April 2000. There will be no loss for people who reach state pension age or qualify for widows benefits before that date.

The maximum weekly reduction in individual entitlements, using the woman's current pension age, is estimated to be (a) £2.70, (b) £3.80, (c) £4.90, (d) £4.60 (e) £4.40 and (f) £4.40.

This effect is flat rate and applies to those with a complete work history of earnings above the lower earnings limit since 1978 or age 16, whichever is the later. For those with broken work records, the effects will be smaller.

Savings as a result of the change will amount to £400 million in 2010 rising to £2.3 billion by 2050. Projections assume that future upratings will continue to increase flat-rate benefits in line with prices and therefore have been calculated on 1994–95 prices. An assumed real earnings growth rate of 1.5 per cent. has been used.

Family Credit

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual spending on family credit; and what was the spending on family income supplement in 1979.

Mr. Roger Evans: The published forecast for family credit expenditure for 1994–95 is £1,276 million. This is 18 times more in real terms than the £24 million spent on family income supplement in 1978–79.

Habitual Residence Test

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual cost to the public purse of administration of the habitual residence rules.

Mr. Roger Evans: Since the habitual residence test was introduced in August 1994, we have been involved in evaluating and refining the operational procedures and we are not in a position to give the full annual cost of applying the test. These figures should become available by the end of this year.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the (a) average, (b) shortest and (c) longest time taken to process appeals against the adjudication officer's decision on habitual residence rules since the rules were introduced (i) in the Greater London area and (ii) in the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Accommodation

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to publish his Department's court accommodation plan for the next five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department's accommodation plan, covering the next three years, will be published by the end of March 1995.

Court Rooms

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many county court rooms and Crown court rooms are currently not in (a) full-time use and (b) part-time use in England and Wales, excluding London; and what percentage of the total number of court rooms these figures represent.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are 98 county court rooms and Crown court rooms in England and Wales, excluding London, currently being used part time. This is 17 per cent. of the total number of court rooms in England and Wales, excluding London. There are 16 county court rooms and Crown court rooms in England and Wales, excluding London, currently not in use at all. This is 3 per cent. of the total number of court rooms in England and Wales.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many county court rooms and Crown court rooms in London are currently not in (a) full-time use and (b) part-time use; and what percentage of the total number of court rooms these figures represent.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are five county court rooms and Crown court rooms in London currently being used part time. This is 3 per cent. of the total number of court rooms in London. There are no court rooms in London currently not in use at all.

Court Closures

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many county court centres, court caller offices and Crown court centres he has decided to close in (a) the last five years and (b) the next five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Some 35 courts and offices have been closed in the last five years. One court is scheduled for closure.

Fees (Civil Business)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the increases in the fees for civil business introduced by his Department in the last three years and the percentage rise in the cost of civil business that each increase represents.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the last three years—1992, 1993 and 1994—fees have been increased in the Supreme court and the county court. In the Supreme court, fees were increased once during this period, on 11 January 1994. In the county court, fees were increased twice, on 30 November 1992 and 15 August 1994. Details are given.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what he estimates will be the total shortfall in fee income from civil business for (a) the current financial year and (b) the next financial year; and what the figure was for the previous financial year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The estimated shortfall in fee income from civil business for the current financial year is £71.1 million. We plan to meet our reduced income target in full next financial year. The shortfall in the financial year 1993–94 was £53.4 million.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the increases in the fees for civil business that he plans to introduce in the next 12 months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: We have no definite plans for increases yet, but we do propose to review the fee structure to introduce a daily hearing fee, and will need to revise the fee levels then.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the new fees for civil business that his Department has introduced in the last three years; the levels at which they are currently set; and the percentage rise in the cost of civil business that these new fees represent.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: During the last three years–1992, 1993 and 1994–new fees were introduced in the county court on 1 April 1993 and 15 August 1994. Details are given.

TRANSPORT

Fennell Report

Mr. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress London Transport has made in implementing the recommendations of the Fennell report into the King's Cross underground fire.

Mr. Norris: London Transport has implemented, either as one-off or on-going actions, over 90 per cent. of the report's recommendations. I have therefore agreed that the latest progress report submitted by LT, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, should be the last one. Work on implementing the remaining recommendations is in hand and HM railway inspectorate will continue to monitor regularly the progress being made.

Fire Safety

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review fire safety arrangements in areas with (a) regional airports and (b) major chemical works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation, including the operational safety of airports rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. Airports operate under the terms of the Air Navigation Order 1989. Detailed guidance for aerodrome licence holders are given in CAA document CAP168—"Licensing of Aerodromes".

There are no plans to revise the current regulations but the authority is always willing to consider amendments to its instructions for regional airports in order to ensure the safety of aircraft operations is maintained.

The arrangements for areas with major chemical works is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive.

Salvage Tugs

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps were taken by his Department to ensure that the crew and officers on the vessels Brodispas Moon and Sun chartered by his Department were proficient in the English language.

Mr. Norris: The emergency towing study team from the Coastguard agency visited and assessed tugs from each of the shortlisted companies prior to the award of the contract. During those visits, discussions were conducted with the vessels' officers and crews and their proficiency in the English language was assessed. Both tugs have British liaison masters.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what actions he took to secure British crewing of the salvage tug vessels charted by his Department prior to his decision to award the contract to Croation crews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Tenders for the contract were invited from a wide range of salvage and towing companies against a tight specification. In accordance with Government policy, no limitation was placed on flag or crew nationality as such, subject to vessels meeting international safety requirements. Only two of the 34 vessels offered by tenderers for this contract were both UK crewed and registered. The contract was awarded on the basis of performance against the specification and value for money, to a company with good salvage back-up facilities. The selected tugs are managed in the UK by a UK company and have been employed in the North sea working for major oil companies for the last three years.

Mr. Charles Kenndey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement outlining the circumstances which led to the coastguard tug, Brodospas, being stationed at Stornoway, with specific reference to its (a) sailing under a flag of convenience, (b) being registered in St. Vincent, West Indies and (c) carrying a Croatian crew; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 17 January 1995]: The Brodospas Sun is one of the two tugs currently under contract to the Coastguard agency and which are stationed at Stornoway and Dover for a trial period this winter. This meets Lord Donaldson's recommendation that there should be interim emergency towing arrangements this winter: the inquiry recommended that priority should be given to the Dover strait and north-west Scotland. Tenders were invited from a wide range of salvage and towing companies against a tight specification. In accordance with Government policy, no restriction was placed on flag or crew nationality as such, though the vessels proposed were expected to meet international safety requirements such as the safety of life at sea convention. The contract was awarded on the basis of performance against specification and value for money.

Aircraft Security

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute an inquiry into how British Airways security allowed a representative of ICL Technical Plastics to carry on a British Airways aircraft from Glasgow to London an electro-shock weapon.

Mr. Norris: From the scant details given, we are unable to trace this incident.

Double-decker Buses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 414, what proposals are being considered by the European Commission which would prohibit the manufacture and use in the United Kingdom of double-decker buses; and what response has been made by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Norris: None.

Train Cancellations and Delays

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trains were cancelled; how many of those cancellations were attributable to (a) train breakdowns, (b) signal failures, (c) track/points failures, (d) leaves on the line, (e) staff shortage, (f) adverse weather conditions and (g) other factors; and what percentage of timetabled trains was cancelled in each of the Network SouthEast divisions in each four-week period during (i) 1992, (ii) 1993 and (iii) 1994.

Mr. Watts: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the causes of train delays and cancellations that are (a) recorded and (b) not recorded in British Rail's four-weekly track record on punctuality and reliability under the terms of the citizens charter.

Mr. Watts: All train delays and cancellations are recorded in British Rail's track record figures apart from those caused by circumstances outside British Rail's control. Examples of the types of delays and cancellations included and excluded from the track record figures are as follows:

a) Recorded delays and cancellations

Delays and cancellations resulting from:

—Derailments

—Locomotive or train failures

—Infrastructure failures

—Engineering work

—Accidents and incidents

—Staff Shortages

—Leaf Fall

—Bad Weather

b) Non-recorded delays and cancellations

Delays and cancellations resulting from:

—Acts or threats of vandalism/terrorism

—Suicides/Accidents to trespassers

—Motor vehicles striking bridges or level crossings

—Line closures at the request of police or emergency services

—Gas leaks or fires in lineside buildings not caused by rail industry employees or agents

—Fire or failure due to electrical failure or defect not caused by rail industry employees or agents

MOT Certificates (Fraud)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new measures he plans to introduce to reduce fraud in the issue of MOT certificates for (a) cars and (b) other vehicles.

Mr. Norris: I have no such immediate plans.

Vessel Registration

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) Spanish, (b) Dutch and (c) Danish-owned vessels registered as British there are in each of the major ports and by total.

Mr. Norris: The information available relates to ships of 100 gross registered tonnes and more. The figures are taken from Lloyd's Register of Shipping and are given in the table:

M65-M6 Link

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the daily increase in the number of vehicles leaving the M65 at Colne following the completion of the M65-M6 link.

Mr. Watts: We expect an extra 2,000 vehicles per day eastbound on the M65 to junction 7 when the link to M6 is completed. There are no forecast of how much of this additional traffic would continue along the motorway to leave the M65 at Colne.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of construction of the M65-M6 link.

Mr. Watts: Some £145 million, excluding VAT.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road traffic accidents in each of the past five years leading to the death or serious injury of (a) pedestrians, (b) cyclists, (c) motor cyclists and (d) other motorists involved a heavy goods vehicle; and what proportion this represents of all road traffic accidents affecting each category.

Mr Norris: The information requested is shown in the table.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those passenger and freight train operating companies, or other bodies, which will be responsible for providing or using motive power after full implementation of his plans for rail privatisation, showing which of them will be responsible for (a) recruitment, (b) training, (c) certifying competence, (d) route learning and passing, (e) inspection and (f) disciplining of motive power staff.

Mr. Watts: The arrangements to be made by the successor companies to the British Railways Board cannot be listed before full implementation of the privatisation plans.

The Railway (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994 place a duty on employers to ensure that employees carrying out "safety critical work" are competent and fit to carry out that work. The regulations also enable the Health and Safety Executive to approve specific assessments and standards to be achieved.

Roads Programme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to carry out an assessment of the economic impact of the roads programme.

Mr. Watts: The economic impacts of schemes in the national roads programme are assessed.

The national roads programme has consistently shown good economic rates of return.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has ratified annexe IV of the marine pollution convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We have not yet ratified annexe IV of the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships—MARPOL 73/78—but we are taking action to do so soon.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment the Government have made, following the case of Colonel Owen in Cirencester, of whether devaluation is a sufficient cause for blight to be registered against a home or business when a motorway is to be constructed; and what are the implications for such a course in relation to those constructing the Birmingham northern relief road.

Mr. Watts: The full implications of the decision by the Court of Appeal in the Lt. Col. Owen case are being reviewed. An announcement about future policy on discretionary purchase of property affected by motorway and trunk road schemes will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Highways Agency provided figures for traffic flows under the new 2011 AADT figures in relation to the Birmingham northern relief road; for what reasons they were not available earlier; and if the Government will provide compensation for objectors who may have employed professional help or been involved in expenditure of time and energy because of the delay in provision of the figures.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Laurie Haynes to Mr. Mike O'Brien, dated 24 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, when the Highways Agency provided figures for traffic flows under the new 2011 AADT figures in relation to the Birmingham Northern Relief Road; for what reasons they were not available earlier; and if the Government will provide compensation for objectors who may have employed professional help or been involved in expenditure of time and energy because of the delay in provision of the figures.

The revised traffic flows result from updating assessments which have only recently been completed. They will provide the current inquiry with up to date information, but are unlikely to give rise to significantly changed effects. In consequence, there is likely to be little effect on the substance of objections already placed before the inquiry.

Coventry Airport

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received about noise and nuisance at Coventry airport over the past 12 months.

Mr. Norris: A total of 14.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy in respect of prosecuting all those involved with each flight of calves from Coventry airport during November and December 1994 for not having the required export permit under the Air Navigation Order 1989.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 20 January 1995]: An urgent inquiry is being conducted by my Department into the series of livestock flights by Air Algerie aircraft from Coventry airport in November and December last year. The inquiry will seek to determine whether there was any breach of the Air Navigation Order 1989. The question of further action will be decided once the outcome of the inquiry has been considered.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the costs of operating search and rescue services by helicopters using private contractors, relative to the cost of providing such services through the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force.

Mr. Norris: The three search and rescue helicopters under contract to the Coastguard agency cost approximately £7.5 million per year. Ministry of Defence helicopters which are provided primarily for military purposes are also made available for civil SAR. The Coastguard agency does not pay for civil use of Royal Air Force helicopters; it pays for the use of Royal Navy helicopters only out of working hours. The agency's estimate of using contracted helicopters to replace all the MOD SAR helicopters units is some £22.5 million. Those figures do not include the cost of SAR for incidents on land for which the Coastguard agency has no responsibilities.

Parking Enforcement, London

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which companies have been given the task of yellow line parking enforcement in each London borough following the removal of this task from the Metropolitan police traffic warden service from July 1994 under the Road Traffic Act 1991.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for the borough councils concerned.

Railway Station, Ebbsfleet

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date Eleanor Laing, a special adviser in his Department, was briefed by representatives of Decision Makers Ltd. on Ebbsfleet either formally or informally.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 23 January 1995]: I understand from Eleanor Laing, who was a special adviser at the Department of Transport until 20 July 1994, that she was briefed formally on Ebbsfleet by Decision Makers on 29 July 1993 and 3 May 1994.

Heather Bloom (Loss Inquiry)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what investigations are under way to investigate the loss of the Heather Bloom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 20 January 1995]: An investigation is being carried out by the marine accident investigation branch; the only other known official investigation concerns an inquiry under section 61 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1970 into the cause of death.

Rail Safety

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 485, if he will list the year of introduction and the number of carriages currently in use on British Rail's Kent coastal services in each of the BR classes 415/1-5, 416/2 and 4, 416/3, 411, 413, 415/6-7 and any other mark I carriages; and when the last of each of these classes of carriages will have been replaced by new rolling stock.

Mr. Watts: The list of the carriages in use in December 1994 is as follows:

Class	Units (coaches)	Date built from
411	106 (424)	1959
414	5 (10)	1951
421	21 (84)	1964
207	5 (10)	1962

The replacement of rolling stock, and the appropriate timing of an order, is a decision for BR. However, I understand that the last of the class 414 vehicles in the Kent Coast fleet will be withdrawn by 13 April 1995; the other classes of vehicles listed are considered by BR to have four years' serviceable life left, and in its view are likely to need replacing during 1999.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 485, if he will give an undertaking that all carriages currently in use on British Rail's Kent coastal services in the BR classes 411, 413, 415, and 416 will either be strengthened immediately or replaced by new rolling stock within the time scale recommended by the Hidden report into the Clapham Junction railway accident; and how many of these mark I carriages he expects will still be in service in April 1999 given current rolling stock investment plans.

Mr. Watts: I understand that by 13 April 1995 all the mark I vehicles in classes 413, 415 and 416 will have been withdrawn and replaced by Networker class 465 and 466 trains.

Because class 411 vehicles are considered to have only four years' serviceable life left, it would not be reasonably practicable to carry out structural changes to these vehicles. I understand that they will need to be withdrawn from services during 1999.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide an assurance that in respect of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill neither Ruckholt road nor Dunedin road in Leyton will be used by construction traffic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: There will be a code of construction practice—a draft of which is being discussed with the affected local planning authorities—which will cover the use of the public highway and traffic management matters. In the meantime, I understand that Union Railways is shortly to meet the London borough of Waltham Forest to discuss the issue of road accesses in the Temple Mills area.

Ministerial Visits, Newbury

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), Official Report, columns 874–75, when making his visit to Newbury, what time he arrived and what time he left.

Dr. Mawhinney: I arrived at Newbury at about 11.30 am and left at about 2.45 pm.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why he gave the hon. Member a holding answer on 10 January, but was able to answer on 12 January, Official Report, column 198.

Dr. Mawhinney: Notification of this question was received while I was on an official visit to the Netherlands from 9 to 11 January inclusive.

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what his reasons were for deciding to ask the Highways Agency to reconsider the options concerning the Newbury bypass; when he first made that decision; whom he told before his announcement of the decision; and when he first told anyone else he had made this decision;

(2) when he instructed the Highways Agency to review the alternative options designed to relieve traffic congestion on the A34; and what form this instruction took.

Dr. Mawhinney: I decided to look again at the plans for the Newbury bypass against the background of continuing public concern about the scheme and because I wanted to be sure that the proposed western bypass was the right solution. By instructions to the chief executive of the Highways Agency on the day of my public announcement, I asked him to review the options for relieving congestion in Newbury and to report back. I took the decision and shared the information only within Government shortly before making my announcement.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Newbury of 3 January asking him for a meeting to discuss the Newbury bypass.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have no record of receiving this letter.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which constituents of the hon. Member for Newbury he has met since his announcement in respect of the Newbury bypass to discuss his decision.

Dr. Mawhinney: Among those with whom I have discussed my decision on the A34 Newbury bypass, I believe four of them may be constituents of the hon. Member for Newbury.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which hon. Members have so far made representations to him concerning his announcement in respect of the Newbury bypass; and which he has met concerning those representations.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received representations about my announcement on the Newbury bypass from the right hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) and the hon. Members for Newbury (Mr. Rendel), for Hampshire, North-West (Sir D. Mitchell), for Wantage (Mr. Jackson), for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter), for Swindon (Mr. Coombs), for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin), for Havant (Mr. Willetts), for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), for Reading, East (Sir G. Vaughan), for Southampton, Test (Mr. Hill), for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) and for Winchester (Mr. Malone). I have met none of these concerning his representations.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to which (a) constituents of the hon. Member for Newbury and (b) other hon. Members he provided the information contained in his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 198, before he provided the hon. Member with the answer.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have not kept a record of conversations where I may have discussed details about who accompanied me on my visit to Newbury.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the absenteeism rate for the Natural Resources Institute in each year since 1991.

Mr. Baldry: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Natural Resources Institute under its chief executive, Mr. Anthony Beattie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Anthony Beattie to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 24 January 1995:

Mr. Baldry has asked me to reply to your question about the absenteeism rates for the Natural Resources Institute in the years since 1991.

The figures for sick leave are being collated. I will write again when they are available.

Indian Sub-continent (Aid)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much overseas aid has been given to (a) Pakistan, (b) India and (c) Bangladesh in each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: The gross United Kingdom bilateral aid given to Pakistan, India and Bangladesh since 1979 is given in the tables:

United Kingdom bilateral gross public expenditure to Bangladesh, India and Pakistan 1979—1993–94 (£000s)

	Bangladesh	India	Pakistan
1979	33,632	121,623	21,797
1980	66,190	86,080	22,245
1981	33,383	168,550	24,613
1982	23,537	54,204	18,738
1983	24,728	127,600	16,612
1984	35,656	146,537	18,016
1985	41,173	106,466	16,569
1986	38,321	143,481	20,715
1987	31,634	78,464	22,475

1993–94	56,258	103,144	48,202

Note:
British Aid Statistics was published by financial year from 1992.
Britain also provides aid to these countries through multilateral agencies.

Pakistan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the agreements for the provision of British aid that he signed with the Pakistani Government during his recent visit to Pakistan.

Mr. Baldry: On 9 January, in Islamabad, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary exchanged letters in respect of two new aid projects in Pakistan. These were:

(i) a contribution of £3.6 million over five years to the second phase of the Dir district development project, managed by the United Nations Drug Control Programme. The project is designed to improve basic infrastructure and to provide alternative sources of income for people in the main opium poppy growing area of the North West Frontier Province in parallel with enforcement action by the Pakistan authorities.

(ii) a contribution of £12 million over three years in support of the Government of Pakistan's social action programme, which the World bank and other donors are also supporting. The programme seeks to improve primary education, health and reproductive health through a combination of sectoral policy reform and incremental budgetary support.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether there is any threat by the Rwandan Government to the continued presence of international non-governmental organisations in Rwanda; and what representations he has been making.

Mr. Baldry: In order to avoid duplication of effort, and improve co-ordination, the Government of Rwanda have introduced a policy of NGO registration, but a number of NGOs have failed to meet the registration deadline of 9 January. The registration policy has not led to NGO expulsions. We will continue to monitor the situation.

ENVIRONMENT

Water

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the costs of compliance in meeting water standards in upland and lowland England and Wales (a) in total and (b) by water authority in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: Information is not available in the form requested. However, Ofwat has published information which shows that the compliance programme for drinking water resulted in expenditure in England and Wales of £620.5 million in 1991–92, £733.3 million in 1992–93, and £737.1 million in 1993–94.

Refrigerants

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures have been implemented with regard to the conservation and reclamation of refrigerants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The EC Environment Council adopted in December a new EC regulation on ozone-depleting substances. This requires refrigerants contained in commercial and industrial refrigeration equipment and air conditioning equipment to be recovered if practicable for recycling, reclamation or destruction during service and maintenance of the equipment as well as before equipment dismantling or disposal. It also requires that all precautionary measures practicable are taken to prevent the leakage of ozone-depleting refrigerant from this equipment. This regulation is directly applicable in UK law.

In 1994 the refrigerant users group was set up, with Government support, by a number of refrigerant users and suppliers. The RUG was the first refrigerant bank in Europe. Its main aim is to ensure that the increasingly scarce supply of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants is conserved through recovery and efficient reuse within the UK.

Capping Limits

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list for each local authority for which he is responsible (a) the change in the capping limit in cash terms between 1993–94 and 1994–95, (b) this change in cash terms after the notional cost of pay increases at the current rate of inflation have been taken into account and (c) this change in cash terms after notional increases in pay and price increases at the current rate of inflation have been taken into account;

(2) what is the cash change and percentage change in the capping limit of each local authority for which he is responsible for 1994–95 compared to 1993–94; and if he will also express the change as a figure per head of population.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have arranged for a table showing the following for each local authority in England to be placed in the Library of the House:

(i) the cash change between the 1993–94 cap limit and the 1994–95 cap limit.

(ii) the cash change between the 1993–94 cap limit (in 1994–95 prices) and the 1994–95 cap limit.

(iii) the percentage change between the 1993–94 cap limit and the 1994–95 cap limit.

(iv) the change per head of population between the 1993–94 cap limit and the 1994–95 cap limit.

Information on cap limits after notional costs of pay increases at the current rate of inflation have been taken into account is not available.

Pollution

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of carbon dioxide emissions for each year since 1980; and what efforts his Department has implemented to reduce these levels.

Mr. Atkins: Annual United Kingdom emissions of carbon dioxide since 1980 are as follows:

Estimated annual United Kingdom emissions for carbon dioxide, expressed in terms of weight of carbon (million tonnes of carbon)

Year	Amount
1980	164
1981	157

[1] latest provisional estimate.

In fulfilment of our commitment under the climate change convention, the UK climate change programme, published in January 1994, sets out in full the measures aimed at returning emissions of greenhouse gases, including carbon dioxide, to 1990 levels by the year 2000.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his most recent figures for annual CO_2 emissions for the United Kingdom; and what assessment he has made of their consistency with the target set in "Climate Change: The UK Programme".

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to my oral answer of Wednesday 18 January 1995, Official Report, column 706, to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) and to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) earlier today.

London Boroughs Grants Committee

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money the London Boroughs Grants Committee has (a) received from the London borough of Barnet and (b) given to organisations based in Barnet each year since its inception.

Sir Paul Beresford: The London Boroughs Grants Committee distributes grants to voluntary organisations in Greater London which either have a London-wide remit or cover a significant number of London boroughs. There is no direct relationship between contributions from the amounts awarded to voluntary organisations in particular boroughs. The London boroughs grants unit has supplied the following information:

The London borough of Barnet's contribution to the committee's annual expenditure

Year	Contribution £
1986–87	1,190,700
1987–88	1,179,250

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the London Boroughs Grants Committee has (a) received from each London borough and (b) paid to organisations based in each London borough during the last three years.

Sir Paul Beresford: There is no direct relationship between contributions from, and amounts awarded to, voluntary organisations in particular boroughs. The London boroughs grants unit has supplied the following information:

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation requiring the provision of (a) adequate heating systems and (b) insulation in domestic buildings.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Part L of the Building Regulations 1991 in England and Wales requires reasonable provision, including insulation and heating controls, to be made for the conservation of fuel and power in new buildings and extensions to existing ones. Revised regulations which come into force on 1 July this year strengthen the provisions of part L and in addition require all new and converted dwellings to be provided with an energy rating based on the standard assessment procedure. The Boiler Efficiency Regulations 1993 require that, when they are placed on the market, gas and oil-fired boilers achieve specified levels of efficiency. These regulations came into force on 1 January last year.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current combined heat and power capacity in the United Kingdom; and what is his target for 2000.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Secretary of State for the Environment has set a target of 5,000 MW installed combined heat and power capacity by the year 2000. It is estimated that approximately 3,000 MW CHP is now in operation in the United Kingdom on around 1,100 sites.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made toward reaching his target for increased efficiency of domestic appliances by 2000; and what assessment he has made as to the consistency of such progress with reaching that target.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government have not set specific targets to improve the energy efficiency of domestic appliances but are committed to achieve overall carbon dioxide targets by a variety of approaches including improving appliances. Joint voluntary initiatives with industry, the Energy Saving Trust and my Department's energy efficiency office have resulted in good progress in some sectors and I believe they can be emulated elsewhere. The Government are presently engaged in studies to assess the impact of energy labelling and other policies in each sector.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many grants have been made under the home energy efficiency scheme and of what average value in each year since its formation by local authority area.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is not available in the form requested. The total numbers of grants under the home energy efficiency scheme in Great Britain and their average values, for each financial year since the scheme began, are as follows:

1990–91 (from January 1)	7,582	154
1991–92	167,849	137
1992–93	204,130	150
1993–94	270,148	153
1994–95 (until December 31)	330,751	168

Before 9 December 1993, a contribution from the householder, to a maximum of £16, was required in each case. Since then 100 per cent. grants have been available.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he carried out into the effectiveness of the advertising campaigns he has run in order to encourage greater energy efficiency in the home.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Two advertising campaigns have been run by my Department to promote energy efficiency in the home. The first of these campaigns, "Helping the Earth Begins at Home", now completed, was monitored through a series of interview surveys to track changes in public knowledge, attitudes and energy saving behaviour, over the course of the campaign. The second campaign, "Wasting Energy Costs the Earth", is currently under way and is subject to a similar programme of monitoring research.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in tightening building regulations since the publishing of "Climate Change: The UK Programme"; what assessment he has made as to achieving the energy-saving target set out in the document; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Revised building regulations for the conservation of fuel and power were laid before Parliament last year. They come into force on 1 July. It is estimated that the improved provisions will save about 250,000 tonnes of carbon per year by the turn of the century, with significantly greater savings in the longer term.

Uranium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the source of the uranium recently found in Northamptonshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The scrap metal containing uranium found on land at Poplar farm, Caldecott, Northamptonshire, is of unknown origin. Investigations are continuing to trace the source of the material.

Greenpeace

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has that the misuse of equipment, as referred to in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's reply to Greenpeace's complaint regarding a perceived breach of paragraph 2 of the Drigg authorisation, was the sole cause of the high-surface activity levels recorded by the Greenpeace investigators.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution sought the advice of the National Radiological Protection Board regarding the environmental monitoring carried out by Greenpeace and depicted in its video of the Drigg site. The NRPB advised that an item which fully complies with the requirements of the Drigg disposal authorisation could give rise to the results determined by Greenpeace. This is because the instrument used by Greenpeace was not appropriate for use in the mixed radiation fields associated with the low-level wastes disposed of at Drigg. It is possible that there was no surface contamination present at all on the items monitored, and that the spurious surface contamination really was due to radiation emissions from radioactive material contained within the disposed items.

HMIP thoroughly investigated Greenpeace's complaint and concluded that there had been no breach of the Drigg site authorisation. A reply to this effect was sent by HMIP to Greenpeace on 16 December 1994.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what attempt has been made to locate and monitor the package reported to him by Greenpeace as containing intermediate-level waste in its complaint regarding arrangements for the disposal of low-level waste at Drigg.

Mr. Atkins: Greenpeace entered Drigg illegally, in July 1994, but did not bring its complaint to the attention of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution until October 1994. In the intervening period, the item in question has been completely covered by material disposed of in the trench. Direct monitoring of the item would have been possible if Greenpeace had bothered to notify HMIP immediately of its concerns. An item, which from the Greenpeace video and report could have been mistaken for a glovebox that might have been thought to contain intermediate-level waste, has been identified from photographs provided by British Nuclear Fuels plc of the tipping face at about the same time that Greenpeace entered Drigg. The disposal records and history of the item indicate that the disposal was carried out in full compliance with the requirements of the Drigg authorisation.

Sprinkler Systems

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make the introduction of a sprinkler system a mandatory requirement in single-storey buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The provision of sprinklers in new buildings is a matter for building regulations. Whether such sprinklers should be required in large single storey buildings is under consideration at present and I hope to be able to make a statement within a few months.

Fire Engineers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to require the compulsory registration of qualified fire engineers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have no plans at present to require the compulsory registration of qualified fire engineers but will keep the situation under review.

Civil Airports

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers are available to local authorities to control noise and nuisance at civil airports.

Mr. Atkins: Local authorities' powers to control noise at civil airports are those available under planning legislation, through which conditions may be attached, if appropriate, to planning permission. In addition, at all but the smallest airports, operators are required to consult nearby local authorities about matters concerning management and administration which may have a bearing on noise and nuisance.

Leasehold

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consideration he has given to the funding of the leasehold enfranchisement advisory scheme beyond its initial two years; and if he will make a statement on the expected longer-term demand for the scheme and the necessary resources to ensure that it is able to respond appropriately;

(2) what proposals he has for further publicity to increase leaseholders' awareness of their rights under the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993;

(3) what assessment he has made of the interim report of the leasehold enfranchisement advisory service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have carefully studied the interim report of the leasehold enfranchisement advisory service and taken note of its conclusions about the way the new rights for leasehold enfranchisement and lease extension introduced by the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 have been exercised.

I have been impressed with the start that the service has made and consequently I am able to announce that the Department has decided to make available, from its special grants programme, a grant of £78,711 to LEAS for 1995–96. This is an increase of 8 per cent. on the initial grant given to the service in 1994–95. The primary reason for the increase is to allow the service to increase its programme of publicity designed to make leaseholders and freeholders more aware of the new rights to enfranchisement and lease extension. At the same time, the Department will continue to make its booklets on enfranchisement freely available on demand. So far, over 145,000 copies have been issued.

The intention has been to provide funds from the SGP to the service over a three-year period. This means that, subject to a review of the service's performance, planned for later this year, further funding will be made available to the service in 1996–97.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of funding for the Energy Saving Trust which is raised from gas customers; and what this level is expected to be in each of the next three years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The finances of the Energy Saving Trust are properly a matter for the trust, which is an independent company. However, I understand that in the financial year 1994–95 the gas industry will pay the trust a total of £2.5 million, raised from gas customers by the so-called "E-factor" levy. Figures for future years are not available, as the Director General of Gas Supply has yet to reach a decision on proposals to finance, from the E-factor, trust schemes which were submitted to her by British Gas in July 1994.

Noise Pollution

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to bring forward proposals to address the problems of noise pollution and noise nuisance.

Mr. Atkins: Local authorities have a range of powers to prevent or abate noise nuisance from premises and from vehicles, machinery and equipment in the street. An inter-departmental working party was set up in October last year to review the current controls over neighbour noise and to investigate options for swifter remedies. The working party expects to complete its review shortly and I intend to consult fully on its conclusions and recommendations.

West Yorkshire Fire Service

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had in respect of the West Yorkshire fire service's budget deficit for 1995–96.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have received two written representations from the West Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority about the proposed local government finance settlement 1995–96. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration met a delegation from the authority on 10 January 1995. We will be considering these representations, together with those we have received from other authorities, in finalising the settlement for 1995–96.

Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the consultants, (b) the tasks for which they were employed and (c) the payments made to them from the budget of his Department in (i) 1992–93 and (ii) 1993–94.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is not held centrally by my Department and is obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

Erin Void, Derbyshire

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he can report on the application by Derbyshire county council to his minerals division for funding under the Moynihan agreement in relation to the reclamation of the Erin void at Poolsbrook, Staveley, Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Moynihan agreement relates to deep mines in England started before 1 July 1948 which closed within four years commencing 1 April 1990. Under the agreement, British Coal undertook responsibility for the restoration of those closed colliery sites to a soft end use. An application for funding by my Department would not be appropriate nor has such an application been received.

However, Derbyshire county council has made representations to my Department about a dispute with British Coal as to whether the Erin void falls within the terms of the agreement. My understanding is that the Erin void is a former opencast coal site which is already subject to conditions requiring its infilling and restoration to a condition suitable for agriculture. As such, it would not appear to fall within the agreement.

Green Belts

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will publish revised planning policy guidance on green belts in England.

Mr. Gummer: We have today published a revision of planning policy guidance note 2 on "Green Belts". This reaffirms our commitment to green belt policy, and makes limited changes to strengthen it to meet the challenges of the next century.

Following research which we published in 1993, we issued a draft revision of PPG2 for public consultation last year. We are grateful to the almost 700 organisations and individuals who responded. We have carefully considered their views in finalising the document, and made adjustments to take account of views expressed. The thrust of the revised PPG2 is similar to the consultation draft, which was broadly welcomed.

Compared with the present published PPG2, the revision incorporates six main amendments, within a framework of continuity.

(1) It reaffirms the Government's commitment to green belt policy, stresses the fundamental aim of preventing urban sprawl by keeping land permanently open, and points out that green belts can assist in moving towards more sustainable patterns of urban development.

(2) It sets out positive objectives for the use of land in green belts, so as to secure greater benefits for the environment without compromising the overall restrictive approach.

(3) It further encourages proper consideration of the long-term direction of development, through the development plan system, to ensure long-term protection of green belts.

(4) It removes the former concession for new building in the green belt by institutions, so that they are subject to the same controls as other developers.

(5) It enables local planning authorities to make realistic provision in their development plans for the future of existing major developed sites in the green belt, such as pre-war factories and power stations, in such a way as to secure environmental benefits.

(6) It introduces a new policy on the re-use of buildings, which includes specific safeguards for the green belt.

These modifications will reinforce the position of green belts as a cornerstone of the town and country planning system in England as we enter the 21st century.

A summary of responses to the consultation exercise has been deposited in the Libraries of the House of Commons, the House of Lords and the Department of the Environment. Copies of all the responses have been placed in the DOE library.

Buying Agency

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what performance targets he has set the Buying Agency for 1995.

Sir Paul Beresford: To support the objectives set out in the agency's corporate plan 1995–1997, and business plan 1995, we have set financial, productivity, customer satisfaction, environmental, and internal quality targets.

The financial targets are:

— to increase sales by 10 per cent. or to £157 million whichever is the higher,

— to achieve an overall surplus after interest of 1.5 per cent. on total sale.

The productivity targets are:

— to increase sales/staff ratio from £1.27 million per employee projected for 1994 to £1.42 million in 1995,

— to reduce the cost of £ of sales from 2.9p projected in 1994 to 2.6p in 1995.

The customer satisfaction targets are:

— to ensure 90 per cent. of direct orders are delivered by the due date,

— to resolve 90 per cent. of complaints within one month, the balance within three months.

The environmental target is:

— to ensure that all new or revised catalogue entries contain information relating to the environmental impact of the product and, where appropriate, its production and disposal.

These targets require the agency to build on improvements in sales, efficiency, and customer service, made in 1994.

In addition, the agency is proposing new pay and grading arrangements and management delayering, and other measures in line with the White Paper "The Civil Service—Continuity and Change".

Pennine Bridleway

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his decision on the proposed Pennine bridleway.

Mr. Atkins: Following further consultations with the local authorities through whose areas the route passes, the Secretary of State has today signified that he has decided to approve the Countryside Commission's report in respect of the Pennine bridleway, with the modifications to the route as submitted by the commission.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps are open to areas where television reception is (a) poor and (b) non-existent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The first step is for such communities to notify the engineering department of the BBC or Independent Television Commission so that these bodies are aware of the situation. They jointly build about 25 new television relay transmitters each year. It is also open to communities to install their own television relay system at their own expense under the self-help television system.

Buckingham Palace

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the cost of repairing the damage to the gates of Buckingham palace; what insurance covers the gates; and who will incur the bill for repair.

Mr. Dorrell: Investigations are taking place to assess the extent of the damage to the gates of Buckingham palace. Until these are completed, it is not possible to estimate the cost of the repairs. In line with general Government policy, the gates of Buckingham palace were not insured. It is hoped that the car driver's insurance company will meet the cost of the repairs. If not, the repairs will be funded from the royal household's current grant in aid provision.

National Jazz Centre

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representation his Department has received concerning the creation of a national jazz centre.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department has received no such representations.

Double Funding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to report on the allegations of double-funding of money from the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority S4C, and the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts via Pengwyn Pinc cyf to the Welsh Rock and Folk Music Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I have received a report from the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts on the circumstances of an award to the Welsh Rock and Folk Music Council under the business sponsorship incentive scheme. My consideration of that report will be informed by the findings of an internal inquiry which is currently being undertaken by S4C.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Dining Room

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee when the stools for waiters and waitresses by their stations were first introduced into the Members' Dining Room; how many complaints there have been about their use; what considerations underlay their removal before Christmas; and what proposals there are to return them.

Mr. Colin Shepherd [holding answer 20 January 1995]: This is a matter for the Director of Catering Services. I have asked her to write to the hon. Member.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Card Systems

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider setting up a committee to consider the developing technology of card systems and the potential demand for such systems from Government Departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Cabinet Committee GEN34, which is chaired by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, already exists to consider the developing technology of card systems and the potential demand for such systems from Government Departments.

Recruitment

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what opportunities exist in the civil service for the recruitment of individuals with outside experience.

Mr. David Hunt: Many, varied and at all levels.

Worldwide Web Server

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to present to the House during the current Session of Parliament a report on the progress and future plans for development of the government worldwide web server "open.gov.UK".

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I have asked CCTA, the Government Centre for Information Systems, to prepare a report on the progress and future plans for development of the government worldwide web server "open.gov.UK", in three months' time, and quarterly thereafter. This report will be placed in the Library of the House, and it will, of course, be available over the Internet via the CCTA Government information service.

The CCTA Government information service was launched in November 1994 as a pilot service to make Government information available over the Internet, and to provide a means for Departments to develop expertise in this sector. It has proved a tremendous success. Over 14 Departments and agencies have already made information available, and most others have plans to do so. On average, there are over 35,000 requests for information each week. This month we have added two additional pilot services, "G-NET" and "GMAIL", and further improvements are planned for the coming months.

Disabled People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants are currently (a) registered disabled and (b) disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document "Focus on Ability".

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: On 1 July 1994, the number of registered disabled people in the non-industrial civil service was 8,142, representing 1.67 per cent. of the total. Figures for the number and proportion of all disabled people employed in the civil service are not available, although surveys conducted by some individual Departments suggest that there may be at least as many non-registered disabled people in the civil service as there are registered.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 24 January.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 24 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Hugh Colver

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister during which years Mr. Hugh Colver was employed by Her Majesty's Government in (a) the Ministry of Defence, (b) other Departments and (c) No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Hugh Colver was employed as an information officer in the Ministry of Defence from December 1975 to July 1981 and again from September 1985 to June 1987 as deputy chief of public relations and from then until July 1992 as chief information officer. He was a press officer at: No. 10 from July 1981 to July 1982; at the Department of Education from July 1982 to January 1984; and at the Metropolitan police from January 1984 to September 1985. He is no longer employed by a Government Department.

Card Systems

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will consider setting up a committee to consider the developing technology of card systems, and the potential demand for such systems from Government Departments; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science today.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministers and former Ministers have given evidence to the Scott inquiry.

The Prime Minister: Ministers and former Ministers who the Government are aware have given evidence to Sir Richard Scott's inquiry are:

Ministers who have given written and oral evidence:
In addition to myself,
The Right hon. Kenneth Clarke QC
The Right hon. Michael Heseltine RD
The Right hon. Douglas Hurd CH
The Right hon. Peter Lilley
The Right hon. Sir Nicholas Lyell QC
The Right hon. Sir Patrick Mayhew QC
The Right hon. Malcolm Rifkind QC
The Right hon. the hon. William Waldegrave
Former Ministers who have given written and oral evidence:
The Right hon. Kenneth Baker CH
The Right hon. Sir Adam Butler
The Right hon. Paul Channon
The Right hon. Alan Clark
The Right hon. Tristan Garel-Jones
The Right hon. The Lord Howe QC
The Right hon. Sir Richard Luce
The Right hon. David Mellor QC
The Right hon. Timothy Renton
The Right hon. The Baroness Thatcher OM FRS
The Right hon. Lord Trefgarne
Ministers who have given written evidence only:
The Right hon. Jonathan Aitken
The Right hon. Douglas Hogg QC
Former Ministers who have given written evidence only:
The Lord Glenarthur
The Right hon. the hon. Sir Archie Hamilton
Neil Hamilton
The Right hon. the hon. Sir Timothy Sainsbury

Science Promotion

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken since 1993 to promote science and its applications.

The Prime Minister: In May 1993, we published the White Paper "Realising our Potential"—Cm 2550—which sets out the Government's policy for science, engineering and technology. It announced a number of new initiatives such as technology foresight and the restructuring of the research councils to carry forward the Governments strategy. That strategy is to improve the nation's competitiveness and quality of life by maintaining the excellence of science, engineering and technology in the United Kingdom.

In a speech to the Parliamentary and Scientific Committee in February 1994, I underlined the importance of the White Paper and my commitment to the policy it sets out.

The White Paper recognised the important benefits of international collaboration. In September I visited South Africa and met President Mandela. I exchanged letters of intent with him, committing the United Kingdom and South Africa to continuing discussions with a view to concluding in due course a bilateral science, engineering and technology agreement.

In September I also met members of the Council for Science and Technology which the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster chairs on my behalf. We discussed the vital contribution of science, engineering and technology to the nation's prosperity and quality of life. I emphasised our determination to create a culture of partnership, where excellence in science and the development of new applications go hand in hand.

Women Workers

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Prime Minister what practical measures he has introduced to help (a) employers in the private sector and (b) employers in the public sector to increase the quality and quantity of women's participation in the work force, since the launch of Opportunity 2000 in 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

Opportunity 2000 is an employer-led campaign which the Government have supported since its launch in 1991.

The Employment Department helps private and public sector employers increase the quality and quantity of women's employment by promoting a competitive, efficient and flexible labour market. Details of the ED's initiatives introduced since the launch of Opportunity 2000 are contained in the ED's annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library, and include, the out-of-school child care grant, new horizons for women, and fair play for women.

TREASURY

Corporate Assets (Individual Investments)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an estimate of the proportion of corporate assets which represent investments financed by individual investment through unit trusts life, endowment insurance and pension contributions.

Mr. Nelson: It is not possible to attribute particular corporate assets to particular sources of funds. However, it can be estimated that about 45 per cent. of company securities are financed by personal sector investments in unit and life assurance and pension funds.

This estimate is based on information which can be found in tables 5.2D and 9.1E, G, H, I and J of the January edition of "Financial Statistics".

International Monetary Fund

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current policy towards Russia within the IMF.

Mr Nelson: Discussions are continuing on an IMF standby agreement linked to a strong programme of economic reform. I look forward to a successful outcome.

Government Spending

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the (a) actual and (b) budgeted Cabinet Office and other spending, as classified in the 1995–96 Red Book, in each year from 1979 to 1994, at 1993 prices; what were the reasons for any material increase in real expenditures in this area; and what was the estimated annual actual expenditure on (a) direct funding to the Cabinet Office, (b) direct funding to the House of Commons and (c) direct funding of the House of Lords for each year from 1979 to 1994 at 1993 prices.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

It is not possible to provide budget figures on the same basis as the actuals which are shown in the 1995–96 Red Book. Expenditure by the Cabinet Office and other spending as classified in the 1995–96 Red Book were as follows:

	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Cabinet Office—OPSS
"Red Book"	892	977	1,044	1,108	1,241	1,320
at 1993 prices	1,097	1,113	1,119	1,142	1,241	1,294
Real increases	1	16	6	23	99	53
Cabinet Office—other, etc.
"Red Book"	274	313	363	1,123	1,233	1,200
at 1993 prices	337	357	389	1,157	1,233	1,176
Real increases	1	20	32	768	76	-57
Direct funding at 1993 prices
House of Commons	96	98	105	156	163	175
House of Lords	18	19	20	33	33	41

Notes:

(a) This information is not available prior to 1989–90 in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

(b) "other spending" covers expenditure by the Privy Council Office, the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, the Houses of Parliament and the National Audit Office.

(c) The increases in OPSS spending over the period reflect the priority accorded by the Government to the science programme of basic and strategic research, and includes from 1992–93 to 1994–95 the transfer of funding from the higher education funding councils to the research councils in respect of certain research projects.

(d) Most of the increase in Cabinet Office—other, etc. relates to the setting up in 1994–95 of the security and intelligence services vote, for which comparable historic figures are available only back to 1992–93. Other increases relate principally to capital works and IT projects both in the Cabinet Office and both Houses of Parliament.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total cost of mortgage tax relief in Scotland in each year since 1982–83; what is the estimated cost for 1994–95 and 1995–96; and what would have been the costs in 1994–95 and 1995–96 if relief had been available at 25 per cent. for both years.

Sir George Young [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Estimates for the years in question are given in the table.

Cost of mortgage interest relief in Scotland

	£ million
1982–83	140
1983–84	190
1984–85	260
1985–86	350
1986–87	300
1987–88	310
1988–89	370
1989–90	470

Cost of mortgage interest relief in Scotland

	£ million
1990–91	530
1991–92	420
1992–93	340
1993–94	280
1994–95[1]	[2]300
1995–96[1]	[3]240

[1] Assumes, by convention, no changes from current interest rates.
[2] Relief at 20 per cent.
[3] Relief at 15 per cent.

The estimates for 1994–95 and 1995–96 are approximate and are based on the regional distribution of mortgages shown by the 1993 family expenditure survey applied to the United Kingdom total estimates for these years.

The corresponding costs in 1994–95 and 1995–96 for relief at 25 per cent. are estimated to be £380 million and £410 million respectively.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcom Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the total departmental expenditures and planned expenditure on trade and industry by his Department and its predecessors for each year from 1979 to 1998 in 1993 prices; showing also expenditures on research and development and expenditure data for industrial support.

Mr. Heseltine: Total expenditure figures in cash terms for the DTI and its predecessors from 1979–80 are available as follows:

"The Government's Expenditure Plans", published in January of each year by Her Majesty's Treasury for the period to 1990–91:

Department of Trade and Industry and Department of Energy Departmental Reports, published in February/March of each year, for the period from 1991–92 to 1992–93:

Department of Trade and Industry Departmental Reports published from 1993–94 onwards which reflect the merger in 1992 with the former Department of Energy.

Figures for 1993–94 and forward year plans to 1997–98 will be included in the next edition of the Department of Trade and Industry's departmental report, due to be published in late February or early March this year.

These publications also include details of spending on industrial support. Details of spending on research and development, also in cash terms, are provided in the "Annual Review of Government-funded R and D" published each year from 1983 to 1992 and subsequently replaced by the annual "Forward Look of Government-funded Science, Engineering and Technology". Plans for 1997–98 are not yet available, but will be included in the 1995 edition, due to be published in early summer 1995.

The cash terms figures may be adjusted to reflect 1993–94 prices by means of the GDP deflators which are shown in table 6A.1 on page 131 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96". Copies of documents referred to above which have already been published are available in the Library of the House. The remainder will be placed in the Library upon publication.

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which countries were listed as likely diversionary routes for the avoidance of sanctions against Iraq in the letter from his Department to various British exporting companies dated September 1990; and why those countries were selected for mention.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The letter sent to a large number of British companies in September 1990 concerning UN sanctions against Iraq did not include a list of countries.

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by the Department or agency.

Mr. Heseltine: The information in respect of civil servants in my Department and its agencies for the calendar year 1994 is as follows:

	Description and cost
Title	Oxford Strategic Leadership Programme
Objectives	To help senior managers to develop their strategic leadership skills. Allowing them to apply these skills in the workplace.
Organisation	Templeton college, Oxford
Total cost	£10,575
Number of attendees	2
Responsibilities of attendees	Senior Managers in the Government Office for the South East
Evaluation	Verbal feedback and written course appraisal from trainees on specific forms. Follow-up forms sent to trainees and line managers eight weeks after the course to assess how effective it had been.

No DTI staff have attended any other training or tuition courses in that period where the cost for the individual exceeded £5,000.

Biological and Chemical Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West, (Mr. Flynn) Official Report, 20 December 1994, column 1045, on the import of biological and chemical warfare weapons materials and their precursors, what are the reasons for the unavailability of the information requested.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom classification of commodities for overseas trade is based on the harmonised commodity description and coding system, an internationally agreed system of classification which incorporates the headings of the combined nomenclature of the European Communities. This classification does not specifically identify the materials in question. As a consequence, the official trade statistics of the United Kingdom cannot distinguish between the materials in question and related commodities. An analysis of import licences issued by this Department would not provide the required information because it is unlikely that an individual import licence would be required for many of the commodities concerned.

Nuclear Materials Trafficking

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer of 20 December to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central, (Mr. Cousins) Official Report, columns 1043–44, what additional funds Her Majesty's Government have offered the International Atomic Energy Agency to meet its intensified activities to combat nuclear materials trafficking.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As I stated in my answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 20 December 1994, Official Report, columns 1043–44, the board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency will resume its discussions on the director general's report on illicit trafficking at its meeting in March. Any detailed consideration of funding issues would be premature in advance of this meeting, which will establish the nature of IAEA involvement.

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and, of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Headcount of women in the Department of Trade and Industry by grade level at 1 April 1991–1994

Grade level	1991[1]	1992[1]	1993	1994
G3	4	5	6	7
G7	117	129	162	176
EO	1,061	1,067	1,113	1,054
AO	1,964	1,944	2,020	1,886
AA	1,815	1,756	1,636	1,395
Total number of women employed in Department	5,617	5,592	5,700	5,309

[1] The Department of Energy joined DTI in 1992. The figures for 1991 and 1992 therefore exclude former Department of Energy staff.

Grenade Launcher Exports

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total value of grenade launcher exports in each of the last five years.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The published information is not sufficiently detailed to identify the value of exports of specific weapons. The information available for harmonised system commodity code 9301 0000—"military weapons (other than revolvers, pistols, swords, cutlasses, bayonets, lances, etc.)"—is published in Central Statistical Office business monitors MM20 and MQ20, "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Export Credits Guarantee Advisory Committee

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all of the members of the Export Credits Guarantee Advisory Committee, with their corporate or other affiliation for each year since 1985.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what remuneration the members of the Export Credits Guarantee Advisory Committee receive.

Mr. Needham: Members of the Export Guarantees Advisory Council receive no remuneration for their services.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what selection criteria there are governing appointments to the Exports Credits Guarantee Advisory Committee.

Mr. Needham: Members of the Export Guarantees Advisory Council are appointed by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and are drawn from senior levels of the banking, commercial and industrial sectors. Members are chosen for their expertise in their particular field and their experience of export credit business.

Land Mines

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the occasions when the Export Credits Guarantee Department has advanced credits to cover the export of land mines over the last five years.

Mr. Needham: None.

Gas Market (Competition)

Sir John Hannam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for consultation on the choice of areas for the extension of competition in the gas market which he has proposed would be introduced from 1996 to 1998.

Mr. Eggar: I have today published a consultation document jointly with the Director General of Gas Supply, Clare Spottiswoode, on the choice of the initial areas for the phased extension of competition into the gas market between 1996 and 1998.

Subject to enactment of the proposed Bill by Parliament, we propose a first phase starting in April 1996 which would introduce competitive gas supply to a geographic area of Great Britain containing up to 500,000 premises which consume less than 2,500 therms of gas a year. A second phase starting from a date in 1997 would extend competition to an area or areas containing a total of 2 million such premises. Finally, from a date in 1998, it is intended that the entire gas market in Great Britain, some 18 million premises, should be open to competitive supply.

We intend to announce the prospective areas chosen as soon as possible, so that, subject to parliamentary consideration of the Bill, all may plan accordingly. Once we have considered the responses to the document, my aim is to make an announcement early in March.

The initial phases are important steps in the proposed move to full competition at the national level in 1998. They will provide an opportunity to ensure the satisfactory operation of the new management and computer systems necessary to ensure the accurate measurement, balancing and allocation of gas. Systems will also be needed to ensure the orderly handover of responsibility where a consumer decides to change supplier. The phased introduction of competition will allow those responsible for these systems time to ensure their fully satisfactory operation.

It will be convenient if the area chosen is geographically well delineated and coincides with existing administrative boundaries and clearly demarcated part of the gas pipeline network. We should like the area chosen to contain examples of the full cross section of types of premises and customer and include both urban and rural environments. The area chosen should provide a good test of the arrangements for measuring gas and so on, and handling changes of customer.

Subject to these other factors, we consider it would also be reasonable, in choosing the initial area to benefit from competition, to take into account the pattern of regional transportation charge differentials which were introduced in October 1994. The independent suppliers have said that they expect to offer average savings of some 10 per cent. on current BG prices. Within that pattern, they may—or may not—choose to pass on the differential transportation charges, which amount to around plus/minus 2 per cent. of final prices. I have noted in this context the recommendation of the Trade and Industry Select Committee that "areas likely to be disadvantaged by cost reflective charges should be included amongst those selected".

In the consultation document, we are seeking views on the choice of the initial area in 1996. We are also seeking views as to whether the area for the second phase in 1997 should be:

(i) a single geographic area (enlarging the area for the first phase); or

(ii) split between two or more distinct areas (of which the first phase area would be one or part of one).

There may be some technical arguments in favour of the first alternative. On the other hand, the second alternative would enable more than one area to gain experience of competition.

In order to gain as much information as possible from the initial phases of competition, the Director General of Gas Supply may invite consumers and appropriate representative groups and persons to supply information to help her monitor the development of competition. It will therefore be helpful if representative organisations in the area concerned are prepared to assist in this process. Parliament will have an opportunity to debate the issues related to the initial phases of competition during the passage of the forthcoming Gas Bill.

The consultation document has been sent to all local authorities in England, Scotland and Wales as well as to all Members of Parliament, consumer groups and the gas industry. Copies have also been placed in the Printed Paper Office in the House of Lords. The deadline for responses is 24 February.

Further copies of the document can be obtained from the Library of the Office of Gas Supply, 16 Palace street, London SW1E 5JD, telephone 0171 932 1602/3/4.

British Coal

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the land and property in the Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley constituency which currently remains in the ownership of British Coal Property.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 January 1995]: The land and property owned by British Coal are matters for the corporation and I will draw the hon. Member's interest to the attention of the chairman.

Export Credits

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what value of export credits for capital goods and projects were advanced (i) in total and (ii) in respect of defence exports for each year since 1980 and for (a) Pakistan, (b) India, (c) Nigeria, (d) Indonesia, (e) Jordan, (f) Kenya, (g) Sri Lanka, (h) the Philippines, (i) Saudi Arabia, (j) Malaysia, (k) Turkey, (i) Qatar, (m) Thailand, (n) Kuwait, (o) the United Arab Emirates, (p) Bharain, (q) Oman, (r) Brunei and (s) Egypt.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The values requested are set out in the following tables:

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average political risk premium for Export Credits Guarantee Department cover for exports to Saudi Arabia for each six-month period since January 1991.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 January 1995]: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, the ECGD does not make public premium rates for individual countries.

Railway Station, Stratford

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions in the last six months civil servants in his Department met persons representative of interests in Stratford, London, to discuss matters relating to proposals for a new Stratford station.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 23 January 1995]: There have been no meetings between civil servants in this Department and persons representative of interests in Stratford in the last six months, although officials here have been kept well apprised of Stratford's interests in the proposals for a new station.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions and on what date he, Ministers or former Ministers in his Department met persons in Stratford, London, to discuss matters relating to the implications of a new railway station at Stratford.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 23 January 1995]: On 13 January 1994, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Sir T. Sainsbury) when Minister for Trade, met the Stratford promoters group; and on 28 April 1994 I visited Stratford and was briefed by local representatives on the implications of a new railway station.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if the Sunday Fairs Act 1448 (27 Hen VI c 5) is in force; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the Statute of Northampton 1328 (2 Edward III c 15) is in force; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if the Statute (1331) 5 Edward III (5 Edward III c 5) is in force; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if the Sale of Horses Act 1555 (2 and 3 Phil and Mar c 7) and the Sale of Horses Act 1588 (31 Eliz I c 12) are still in force; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if the Fairs Act 1871 (34 and 35 Vict c 78) and the Fairs Act 1873 (36 and 37 Vict c 37) are still in force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

With the exception of the Fairs Act of 1871 and 1873, all of the statutes mentioned have been repealed. The Fairs Acts of 1871 and 1873 empower my right hon. and learned Friend to make an order either abolishing certain types of fair or changing the day or days on which such fairs are held.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioner Incomes

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the proportion of pensioners receiving income from an occupational pension identified as (a) all pensioners, (b) single male pensioners aged under 75 years, (c) single female pensioners aged under 75 years, (d) single pensioners aged under 75 years, (e) pensioner couples aged under 75 years, (f) single male pensioners aged 75 years and over, (g) single female pensioners aged 75 years and over, (h) single pensioners aged 75 years and over and (i) pensioner couples where at least one partner is aged 75 years and over; and if he will provide figures for the mean and the median amount received for the latest year in which figures are available.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table.

The proportion of pensioners with income from occupational pensions with the mean and median amounts for those in receipt

	Percentage with occupational pension	Mean amount (£ per week)	Median amount (£ per week)
All pensioners	60	71.70	37.80
Single male pensioners under 75	55	67.90	31.20
Single female pensioners under 75	60	52.90	31.60
Single pensioners under 75	59	53.90	31.50
Pensioner couples under 75	73	97.10	54.80
Single male pensioners aged 75 and over	51	56.50	23.50
Single female pensioners aged 75 and over	47	50.10	24.30
Single pensioners aged 75 and over	48	51.70	24.10
Pensioner couples aged 75 and over	68	78.20	41.50

Notes:

1. Percentages are rounded to the nearest 1 per cent., amounts rounded to the nearest 10p.
2. Estimates are drawn from the 1992 family expenditure survey and the GAD 1991 occupational pension schemes survey, at July 1992 prices.
3. Single pensioners are defined as those over state pension age, couples are those where the husband is over state pension age.
4. Couples aged under 75 are defined by the age of the husband.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number and proportion of (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples who have total gross weekly incomes of £0 to £50, £51 to £100, £101 to £150, £151 to £200, £201 to £250, £251 to £300, £301 to £350, £351 to £400, £401 to £450, £451 to £500 and £500 and above.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The available information is in the table. Owing to difficulties with sample sizes, it has been necessary to amalgamate some income bands in order to provide reliable estimates.

Weekly gross income distribution—pensioner units 1992 pensioner couples

	Up to £150	Up to £200	Up to £250	Up to £350	Over £350
Numbers (000s)	900	600	300	400	400
Percentage	36	22	12	16	14

Single pensioners

	Up to £100	Up to £150	Up to £250	Over £250
Numbers (000s)	2,700	900	500	400
Percentage	60	21	11	8

Notes:

1. Numbers are rounded to the nearest hundred thousand. Percentages are rounded to the nearest whole per cent. and may not sum to 100.
2. Estimates are drawn from the 1992 family expenditure survey.
3. Pensioner units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants for benefit under the chronic bronchitis and emphysema regulations were turned down because the X-ray did not show category 1 pneumoconiosis; and of these in how many a post mortem examination revealed evidence of pneumoconiosis.

Mr. Hague: By 30 November 1994, 14,600 out of 44,594 claims for benefit had been disallowed because an X-ray did not show at least category 1 pneumoconiosis. The information requested in respect of post mortem examinations is not available.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants for benefit under the chronic bronchitis and emphysema regulations had to obtain fresh X-rays because of over-exposure of previous X-rays.

Mr. Hague: Any necessary X-rays are obtained by the Benefits Agency. Information on the number of any new X-rays required because of over-exposure of previous X-rays is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants for benefit under the chronic bronchitis and emphysema regulations received new X-rays before examination.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Incomes

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the average net incomes before and after housing costs, after tax and benefits of (a) a lone mother of two children working 20 hours per week paying an average council rent and (b) a married man with two children and a dependent non-working wife working 40 hours per week paying an average council rent; and if he will give details of the calculation of each benefit to which they may be entitled on the basis of hourly pay rates of (i) £3.50, (ii) £4 and (iii) £5.

Mr. Burt: The information requested can be found in the Government Statistical Service publications "Tax Benefit Model Tables, April 1994" published on 21 July 1994, and "Additional Tax Benefit Model Tables, October 1994", published on 20 October 1994. Copies of both publications are in the Library.

Benefits

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide figures for his Department's expenditure on income support, attendance allowance and disability living allowance for claimants with preserved rights between 31 March 1993 and 31 March 1994.

Mr. Roger Evans: Estimated quarterly expenditure on claimants who were receiving either income supply only or income support and attendance allowance/disability living allowance is as follows:

	£ million
May 1993	736
August 1993	696
November 1993	653
February 1994	612

Separate data are not collected on attendance allowance or disability living allowance for people in residential care and nursing homes who are not also in receipt of income support.

Source:

Income support quarterly inquiries.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people had preserved rights to the higher level of income support between 31 March 1993 and 31 March 1994.

Mr. Roger Evans: Information on income support for people in residential care and nursing homes is contained in the quarterly statistical inquiry based on sample data. The number with preserved rights are:

	Number
May 1993	284,000
August 1993	267,000
November 1993	249,000
February 1994	233,000

Source:

Income support quarterly inquiries.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent by his Department on income support and attendance allowance or disability living allowance for new claimants in independent care homes since 31 March 1993.

Mr. Roger Evans: Information is not available in the form requested. Estimated total expenditure on claimants who were receiving either income support only or income support and attendance allowance/disability living allowance for the 12 months from May 1993 is £73 million.

Separate data are not collected on attendance allowance or disability living allowance for people in residential care and nursing homes who are not also in receipt of income support.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claiming residential allowance were placed in (a) residential care homes and (b) nursing homes during each month from April 1993 to March 1994.

Mr. Roger Evans: Information is not available in the form requested. The total numbers in receipt of residential allowance based on sample data are:

	Number
May 1993	2,000
August 1993	17,000
November 1993	30,000
February 1994	44,000

Source:

Information is not available split between residential care and nursing homes.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of residential allowance were in independent residences or nursing homes on 31 March 1993.

Mr. Roger Evans: Residential allowance was introduced on 1 April 1993. Most people who were in residential care and nursing homes on 31 March 1993 have preserved rights to the higher levels of income support and would not be entitled to residential allowance. Information is not available for those who subsequently claimed residential allowance because they do not have preserved rights to the higher levels of income support.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for disability living allowance were (a) received and (b) approved between (i) March to October 1993, (ii) November 1993 to March 1994 and (iii) April 1994 to October 1994; and how many in each case were from people whose principal disability was (1) physical and (2) mental illness.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the format requested. The information available is in the tables.

Table 1: Disability living allowance claims and awards

	March–October 1993	November 1993–March 1994	April–October 1994

Incapacity benefit

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount of benefit is payable to a recipient with no children at school and a wife under 60 years under the new incapacity benefit scheme.

Mr. Hague: The basic rate of incapacity benefit will be payable where there is no entitlement to a child dependency increase, or the person cannot be treated as entitled, and the spouse is under age 60.

For the first 28 weeks of sickness the basic rate is £44.40, from week 29 to week 52 it is £52.50, and from week 53 it is £58.85.

People with a terminal illness, or who are receiving the highest rate of the care component of disability living allowance, will be able to get the long-term rate of £58.85 from week 29.

An age addition may be payable at one or two rates depending on the age of the person when his incapacity for work began. If his incapacity began before age 35, the age addition is £12.40. Where the incapacity began when aged 35 to 44, the age addition is £6.20. No age addition is payable if the person is aged 45 or over when the incapacity began.

Note:
The rates given are subject to parliamentary approval.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to uprate annually all benefits that claimants of the incapacity benefit may be entitled to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Section 150 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 requires the Secretary of State to review annually the rates of incapacity benefit.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the difference in the payments made to claimants under the invalidity benefit and the new incapacity benefits scheme for a person aged 30, 40 or 50 years where there is (a) and adult dependant under 60 years and (b) a dependant over 60 years.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table. Some further assumptions have been made to support the examples, as explained in the notes.

	Age 30 £	Age 40 £	Age 50 £
Invalidity benefit	106.50	101.90	98.00
Long-term incapacity benefit
Spouse under 60	71.25	65.05	58.85
Spouse 60 +	106.50	100.30	94.10

Notes:

1. In the case of invalidity benefit, the spouse's age is not a relevant factor.
2. Assumes spouse does not have earnings/occupational pension in excess of relevant earnings limit and does not receive a benefit in own right.
3. Assumes no earnings-related additional pension payable with invalidity benefit.
4. In the case of incapacity benefit, an increase is payable for a spouse aged 60 and for an adult dependant if the claimant is entitled or treated as entitled to a child dependancy increase, regardless of adult dependant's age.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by the Department or agency.

Mr. Goodlad: The information in respect of both the diplomatic and aid wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is given in a list of six pages that is being deposited in the House Library. My agencies bought no training with a total cost in excess of £5,000.

French Foreign Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the French Government in regard to the proliferation consequences of the sale of nuclear technology by France to the People's Republic of China.

Mr. David Davis: We are not aware of any sales of nuclear technology by France to China which could contribute to the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Council of Europe

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will support the formal adoption of recommendation 1235 (1994) of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe relating to psychiatry and human rights by the Council of Ministers of the Council of Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom and the other member states of the Council of Europe are studying recommendation 1235 of the Parliamentary Assembly. We will decide in due course whether we are able to support its adoption by the Committee of Ministers.

Bushehr Nuclear Power Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the Russian Federation over the potential proliferation consequences of the decision of the Russian Government to rebuild the damaged nuclear power plant at Bushehr in Iran.

Mr. David Davis: We have expressed our concern to the Russians that their decision to rebuild the damaged nuclear power station at Bushehr could have proliferation consequences.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what stipulations were set by the non-nuclear weapon state members of the European Union upon France, as President-in-office of the EU, in representing EU political opinion at the final preparatory committee meeting of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty review and extension conference in New York on 23 to 27 January.

Mr. David Davis: France, as current President of the EU, has been co-ordinating an EU statement on NPT extension for use at the NPT extension conference's fourth preparatory committee on 23 to 27 January. As with other intergovernmental exchanges of this kind, comments on EU draft statements are circulated in confidence. The final text will have to be acceptable to all EU member states.

Harjit Singh

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made to the Indian Government regarding the case of Harjit Singh.

Mr. Baldry: We have raised the case of Harjit Singh with the Indian Government on several occasions. We understand that a case of habeas corpus brought by Harjit Singh's father is still before the courts, although the proceedings are moving very slowly.

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and, of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Goodlad: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

	1991	1992	1993	1994
Total Women	3,048 (98 P/T)	3,061 (115 P/T)	3,081 (154 P/T)	3,029 (152 P/T)
Grade 3 level	Figures not available	5	4	5
Grade 7 level	Figures not available	113 (2 P/T)	127 (7 P/T)	135 (11 P/T)
Executive Officer level	Figures not available	791 (14 P/T)	772 (30 P/T)	794 (37 P/T)
Administrative Assistant level	Figures not available	218	207 (20 P/T)	172 (6 P/T)

Notes:
1. These figures cover all FCO grades including the DS and the ODA.
2. (P/T = Part-Time).

Trident

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding his Department's assessment of the perception of overseas Governments of the recent deployment by Britain of the Trident nuclear system.

Mr. David Davis: Our NATO allies fully accept the United Kingdom's deployment of Trident as part of our and NATO's strategy of war prevention. It is not for us to comment on the perceptions of others.

Pakistan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Pakistan's anti-narcotics legislation, with particular reference to the law providing for the death sentence and forfeiture of property for those involved in drug trafficking.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 20 January, Official Report, column 746.

Peace Talks, Nairobi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has made representations to the Government of Sudan that it should recognise and co-operate with the UN observer of the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development peace talks in Nairobi.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for the IGADD states to decide whether they want the appointment of a UN observer to the peace process. Discussions between them and the Sudanese Government are continuing.

Croatia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Croatia in respect of Krajina and the future deployment of UNPROFOR in the region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I discussed the Croatian Government's position on the extension of UNPROFOR's mandate with Mr. Sanader, the Croatian deputy Foreign Minister, on 11 January. I made clear our deep concern and regret over this development, which puts at risk the prospect of finding a peaceful solution to the problems in the United Nations protected areas in Croatia. Along with our EU partners, we have called upon the Croatian Government to reconsider their decision.

Drug Liaison Officers

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the contribution drug liaison officers on attachment to British diplomatic posts overseas make to his Department's efforts to develop international co-operation against the illicit drug trade.

Mr. Baldry: British drug liaison officers, who are attached to diplomatic posts in a number of countries, play an important role in developing international co-operation in the fight against the global menace of the illicit drug trade. They are fully integrated into the work of the posts concerned, and carry out their duties in close co-operation with local law enforcement agencies.

In their work, these officers fully observe Home Office guidelines. These state that no police officer or public informant should counsel, incite or procure the commission of a crime and make it clear that an informant should be instructed that he must not act as agent provocateur.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Councils in November and December 1994.

Mr. David Davis: I attended the Foreign Affairs Councils in November and December.

The Council of 28 to 29 November covered the following subjects:

On the White Paper on growth, competitiveness and employment, Mr. Delors introduced the main themes for the Essen European Council. He said that there would be two discussions, one focusing on White Paper themes generally, and the second on employment questions.

Ministers agreed to release a first tranche of 15 mecu of the 35 mecu of EU macro-financial assistance to Albania. The release of the second tranche, 20 mecu, will depend on a favourable Commission report on progress in economic and political reform in Albania and a subsequent Council decision.

Foreign Ministers held discussions with Mr. Perez and Mr. Arafat and issued a statement which reaffirmed their determination to continue their support for the middle east peace process, both politically and economically.

Ministers reviewed preparations for the CSCE summit in Budapest—5 to 6 December.

The Commission introduced a support package of some 200 to 300 mecu for Northern Ireland.

The Council agreed to put forward for consideration at Essen the interim report of the Consultative Commission on Racism and Xenophoria.

Ministers discussed preparations for the interim conference on the EU's stability pact initiative to be held in the margins of the CSCE summit in Budapest.

A partnership and co-operation agreement between the EU and Moldova was signed on 28 November.

The Council approved a negotiating mandate for Europe agreements with Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia.

Ministers discussed the presidency's draft pre-accession strategy for the associated countries of central and eastern Europe. The text was agreed, apart from a passage on cumulation of rules of origin.

The Council discussed the Commission's communication on a strategy for strengthening the EU's political and economic links with the Mediterranean countries, in preparation for a further discussion at the Essen European Council.

Ministers reviewed prospects for the Association Council with Turkey on 19 December. The presidency underlined the importance of concluding negotiations on customs union at the Council.

The presidency reported on progress in the negotiations with Israel, Morocco and Tunisia. The agreement with Israel was close to conclusions, but the agreements with Morocco and Tunisia were delayed by unresolved questions on access for agricultural products to EU markets.

The Council approved a draft report, to be issued by the Essen European Council, on measures to tackle illicit trade in nuclear materials.

Ministers discussed a Commission proposal to provide balance of payments assistance to Ukraine.

The Council discussed the EU position for the ministerial conference on the mid-term review of the Lomé convention, to be held in Brussels on 30 November and 1 December. Agreement was reached on a package of measures to be put to the ACP countries on the programming of aid.

The Council discussed progress in implementing the Uruguay round agreements. It reaffirmed the determination of the Community and the member states to ratify the agreements before 1 January 1995.

Discussion of the Commission proposal for the Council to approve the OECD agreement on shipbuilding subsidies was postponed until 19 December.

On Rwanda, the Council called for the UN to give high priority to actions to stabilise the region. Ministers supported a regional refugee conference, and endorsed an immediate rehabilitation programme to the value of 67 mecu, agreed by the development council.

In a brief discussion of trade and the environment, the Commission confirmed it was preparing a Green Paper on the subject, and expected this to issue next year.

On relations with the European Parliament the Council noted progress on comitology and temporary committees of inquiry. There was a brief discussion over lunch about some member states' difficulties with the draft implementing provisions for the right to vote and stand in municipal elections of other member states—Article 8B1.

At the Council of 19 to 20 December 1994, the following subjects were discussed:

The presidency listed items for action during the remainder of its tenure. M. Juppe highlighted five French presidency priorities.

On relations with the European Parliament, the Council agreed texts on comitology, temporary committees of inquiry and consolidation of existing Community legislation. Denmark voted against the decision on TCIs. These texts were then adopted by the Commission and the EP at an inter–institutional conference on 20 December.

The Council unanimously adopted a directive which implements the right of EU citizens to vote and stand in municipal elections in member states of which they are not nationals.

An association Council with Turkey was held in the margins. It was agreed that a further association council should be held early in the French presidency.

The EEA Council on 20 December reaffirmed its wish to strengthen the political dialogue on foreign policy with a view to developing closer relations in spheres of mutual interest. The Norwegians are now preparing proposals for a framework for political dialogue under the EEA which they will present to the French presidency.

There was a discussion on ways in which the peace process in the former Yugoslavia could be taken forward.

The Council agreed to discuss Russia during the French presidency on the basis of an options paper.

The Council agreed a new Community generalised system of preferences, to come into force on 1 January 1995. There were two votes. On the creation of a new scheme for industrial products the United Kingdom abstained, and set out its reasons in six statements for the minutes. The scheme passed by qualified majority. Renewal of the scheme for agricultural products was agreed unanimously; this scheme will be reviewed during 1995.

Agreement in principle was reached on the EU/Israel agreement. The agreement is now expected to be signed at the January FAC. There was no progress on the EU/Morocco and EU/Tunisia negotiations. Morocco has rejected the Commission's offer on access for tomatoes and courgettes. The question of Tunisian olive oil quotas remains unresolved.

The Council agreed to endorse the results of the Uruguay round, comprising the Marrakesh final act, the agreement establishing the World Trade Organisation, the ministerial declarations and decisions attached to it, the understanding on commitments in financial services, plurilateral agreements on bovine meat, dairy products, civil aircraft and Government procurement, and the bilateral EC agreements with Australia on coal and with Uruguay on bovine meat. The Council also agreed an accompanying package of EC implementing legislation. All the above texts were formally adopted by the Council of Ministers on 22 December. All the necessary processes have thus been completed to allow the Community to ratify the agreement establishing the World Trade Organisation: the instruments of ratification of the Community and the member states are expected to be deposited in Geneva on 30 December.

The Council received a progress report from the presidency on the three EU/United States working groups established at the July 1994 EU/United States summit. The groups' work covers central and eastern Europe, drugs and international crime, and the mechanisms for EU/United States political co–operation.

The Council confirmed its negotiating directives, originally adopted in December 1991, for the Commission to negotiate a co–operation agreement between Euratom and the United States. The new agreement is to replace the existing United States/Euratom agreements of 1958 and 1960, the second of which expires on 31 December 1995.

The Council approved the OECD agreement on shipbuilding subsidies and authorised the Commission to sign the agreement. Signature took place in Paris on 21 December. The Council adopted a Commission proposal that the Commission and Council should make a joint declaration at the signing ceremony to the effect that they would monitor the implementation and respect of the agreement by all parties.

The Council agreed the adjustments necessary to the EFTAn accession treaty following the non-accession of Norway.

The chairman of the Consultative Commission on Racism and Xenophobia gave an oral report a progress. This was a follow-up to the interim report of the Consultative Commission, which was presented to the Essen European Council. The consultative commission will submit its final report to the Cannes European Council, in June.

The Council approved concluding decisions allowing the entry into force of the Europe (association) agreements with the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Romania and Bulgaria and the free trade agreements with Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. Ministers approved in parallel implementing regulations governing the operation of the four Europe agreements.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Shipbuilding

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the size of the shipbuilding industry in Northern Ireland in 1979; and what it is now.

Mr. Ancram: In 1979, Harland and Wolff had a recorded turnover of £67.3 million. The company was privatised in 1989 and turnover in 1993 was £103 million.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the total number of persons serving in the RUC in the ranks of (a) constable, (b) sergeant, (c) inspector, (d) chief inspector, (e) superintendent and (f) chief superintendent as at 31 December 1994.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is as follows:

Rank	Number
Constable	6,264
Sergeant	1,410
Inspector	490
Chief Inspector	163
Superintendent	122
Chief Superintendent	35

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of members of each rank of the RUC broken down by (a) perceived religious affiliation and (b) gender.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is as given in the table:

	Community background			Gender
	CB1[1]	CB2[2]	CB3[3]	Male	Female
Constable	5,597	454	213	5,512	752
Sergeant	1,269	115	26	1,336	74
Inspector	429	45	16	468	22
Chief Inspector	139	23	1	158	5
Superintendent	102	18	2	121	1
Chief Superintendent	30	5	0	35	0

Notes:
[1] Perceived Protestant community.
[2] Perceived Roman Catholic community.
[3] Other.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the normal consultative arrangements which exist between the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, the Police Authority for Northern Ireland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The Chief Constable and other senior officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary attend frequent and regular meetings both with the Secretary of State and with the chairman and members of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland. My officials are in frequent contact with both the RUC and the authority, and there is a wide variety of groups comprising the Northern Ireland Office and the Police Authority for Northern Ireland and the Royal Ulster Constabulary, dealing with matters of common concern.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what aspects of the situation relating to promotions to the rank of assistant chief constable in the Royal Ulster Constabulary are currently under consideration; when this process commenced; what are the difficulties; when the issue is likely to be resolved; and if he will list all the stages in the promotion process for the rank of assistant chief constable in the Royal Ulster Constabulary, including selection for the senior command course, when the Chief Constable makes a specific input to that process.

Sir John Wheeler: Appointments to the rank of ACC are made under the provision of section 7(1) of the Police Act (Northern Ireland) 1970. The process is currently the subject of proceedings by way of judicial review; it is not appropriate to comment further pending the outcome of those proceedings.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what comments Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary's 1994 report makes on the need for corporate policy decision making within the senior command of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and what has been the Chief Constable's response to this.

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Gentleman to paragraph 6 of appendix A on page 40 of the report of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary on the Royal Ulster Constabulary 1994, a copy of which is in the Library.

The Chief Constable, who is responsible for the direction and control of the RUC, has carefully considered HMI's concerns but believes, given the size and complexity of the RUC, that the systems in place are fully sufficient for corporate decision making. These systems include twice weekly meetings with those assistant chief constables with operational roles and, pending the appointment of a Deputy Chief Constable (Support Services), fortnightly meetings with the assistant chief constables with support service responsibilities; a monthly meeting attended by all chief officers; and a force policy executive, comprising the Chief Constable and his two deputies, which takes all major policy decisions.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the salary of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; how long the present Chief Constable has been in post; whether his family residence is in Northern Ireland; to what amount of housing allowance he is entitled; on how many nights during 1994 he was present in Northern Ireland; and if he will list those periods of longer than four nights' duration when the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary was out of Northern Ireland during 1994.

Sir John Wheeler: The salary of the Chief Constable is £85,350 per annum and he has been in post since 1 June 1989.

The Chief Constable resides in Northern Ireland with his wife at RUC headquarters and has done so since 1 June 1989. He does not receive housing allowance but to provide some respite from the domestically undesirable nature of his accommodation, above force headquarters, he receives a non-pensionable allowance of £4,355.04 per annum.

The Chief Constable was in Northern Ireland on 242 nights in 1994. The Chief Constable was outside Northern Ireland on eight occasions for periods of more than four nights; four of those occasions were on official business. When outside Northern Ireland, whether on leave or business, he is always contactable and has been so contacted when appropriate.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost to the policing budget of travel, and all associated expenses by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary during 1994.

Sir John Wheeler: The cost of the Chief Constable's travel in the course of his duties in Northern Ireland cannot be disaggregated. Travel outside Northern Ireland on police duties cost £20,505.33 during 1994; associated expenses totalled £1,931.28.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary was informed by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland of its intention to conduct a public survey on the future of policing in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The chairman of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland wrote to consult the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary about the arrangements that the authority intended to make for obtaining the views of people about matters concerning policing, on 18 November 1994. At that stage the date on which the authority was to announce its initiative had not been decided. The secretary of the authority informed RUC headquarters of the proposed date of the announcement on 30 December 1994.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what account he has taken of the article published on 1 January written by the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the establishment of a commission for policing in Northern Ireland; and if it is the Government's intention to implement this suggestion; and to what extent the suggestion was derived from general consultation with his senior command colleagues or the staff associations.

Sir John Wheeler: I have noted with interest the Chief Constable's article on policing published in The Sunday Times on 1 January 1995 in response to an open letter from the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) published on 11 December 1994, which contained a suggestion that a Northern Ireland commission on policing be established. I understand that the Chief Constable had consulted a number of senior colleagues and that such a commission is the method preferred by the Police Federation of Northern Ireland which represents some 97 per cent. of the RUC. My right hon. and learned Friend does not, at this stage, intend to establish a commission and I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) on 15 December, Official Report, columns 739–40.

Agricultural Colleges

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time students attended (a) Greenmount college, (b) Enniskillen agricultural college and (c) Loughry college in each of the past five years; if there were sufficient places for the number of applicants each year; and if he will make a statement on the futures of these three agricultural colleges.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The number of full-time students enrolled at the three colleges run by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland for 1990–91 to 1994–95 was as follows:

	Enniskillen Collegeof Agriculture	Greenmount College of Agriculture and Horticulture		Loughry College of Agriculture and Food Technology
		Agriculture	Horticulture	Agriculture	Food Technology
1990–91	47	218	26	46	165
1991–92	40	217	30	45	206
1992–93	47	221	28	39	228
1993–94	32	242	27	61	223
1994–95	51	276	39	39	240

Each year there were sufficient places available for all qualified applicants for full-time courses.

In line with the Government's objective of improving the level of education and training of the national work force, the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland is committed to meeting the education and training needs of the Province's agri-food industry.

Following a strategic review of the Department's activities, consideration is being given to a rationalisation of its education and training service. Under the proposal, the Department would retain three colleges but courses in agriculture would be delivered through Greenmount and Enniskillen colleges, leaving Loughry college to concentrate its resources and facilities on furthering its aim of being a centre of excellence and a focus for food industry development within Northern Ireland.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection Act 1984

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the number of complaints alleging breaches of the Data Protection Act 1984 received in each of the latest available three years for (a) each county in Wales, (b) for Wales as a whole and (c) for the United Kingdom; how many prosecutions were brought; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Data Protection Registrar is responsible for administering the Data Protection Act 1984. I understand that statistical information about complaints is not kept on a geographical or county basis. The latest available information relating to complaints and prosecutions—including details, in the case of the latter, of the court concerned—can be found in the 10th report of the Data Protection Registrar, laid before Parliament on 5 July 1994.

Probation Service

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he makes for rurality in determining the formula for funding the probation service in England and Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The formula takes into account the differing staff costs of providing probation services in different parts of the country. A recent review of the formula by the Home Office, the Central Probation Council and the Association of Chief Officers of Probation concluded that an additional allowance based directly on rurality would not be justified.

Riot Shields

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether United Kingdom policing authorities or his Department are testing or have tested electro-shock riot shields or weapons in the last 12 months.

Mr. Maclean: No such tests have been conducted by my Department. I have no details of any such tests that may been conducted by police authorities in respect of equipment used to protect officers against ferocious dogs.

Mr. Gerry Hall

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Mr. Gerry Hall has ever applied to his Department for a section 5 permit for the building of militarily sensitive equipment, including electro-shock equipment.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the announcement will be made on the distribution of section 11 funding to local authorities, with special reference to Bradford.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 17 January, Official Report, column 382.

Hypnotists

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been of hypnotists in connection with their trade in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: Information held centrally shows one prosecution from 1989 to 1993. This occurred in 1991 and resulted in a conviction.

The 1994 data will not be available until the autumn.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the activities of hypnotists in each of the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1993, we received three letters about stage hypnotism from hon. Members or members of the public. In 1994, we received 39 such letters, and five parliamentary questions about the subject were asked. In addition, the Adjournment debate on stage hypnotism on 12 December 1994, Official Report, columns 745–52, was initiated by the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Pickthall) and my hon. Friends the Members for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) and for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) participated.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to (a) regulate the activities of hypnotists and (b) require the registration of hypnotists.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In an Adjournment debate on stage hypnotism on 12 December 1994, I announced that there was to be a review of the workings of the Hypnotism Act 1952 which regulates public performances of stage hypnotism. The review is now in hand.

Woodcock Inquiry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the estimates, both in capital and running cost terms, for the implementation of Sir John Woodcock's recommendations.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of implementing in full the proposals contained in the report of Sir John Woodcock's inquiry in respect of England and Wales as forecast for each financial year for which figures are available; and if he will break down the costs by recommendation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Detailed costs of implementing the recommendations contained in Sir John Woodcock's report on Whitemoor are currently being assessed by the Prison Service.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when proposals will be forthcoming following his Department's consultation paper "Wheel Clamping on Private Land".

Mr. Maclean: We are considering what action it might be appropriate to take. We will make an announcement when our proposals are ready.

Private Clegg

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the imprisonment of Private Clegg in Her Majesty's Prison, Wakefield.

Mr. Howard: Private Clegg is at present imprisoned at HMP Wakefield, on temporary transfer from Northern Ireland, following the dismissal by the House of Lords last Thursday of his appeal against conviction for murder.

As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has made clear, decisions on Private Clegg's release are a matter for him.

In giving judgment, the House of Lords expressed concern about certain aspects of the law of murder. I can confirm that, together with colleagues, I am reviewing the law in the light of the concern expressed by the House of Lords.

Card Systems

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider setting up a committee to consider the developing technology of card systems, and the potential demand for such systems from Government Departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science.

Life Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women currently serving a life prison sentence in a prison in England or Wales have been informed they will never be released from prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 16 January 1995, Official Report, column 333. The 15 prisoners mentioned in that answer comprise 14 men and one woman.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of private detectives by Government Departments on public agencies; if he will issue guidelines about their use; what representations he has received on the civil liberty implications of such use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held centrally. We have not received any representations on the civil liberty implications of the use by Government of private detectives nor have we any plans to introduce guidelines in this area. But we are looking again at policies on the whole of the private security industry and we await with interest the outcome of the Home Affairs Select Committee's current inquiry into the industry.

National Lottery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to require the organisers of the national lottery to conduct a survey of public opinion before determining the disbursement of funds to charities.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Disbursement of lottery proceeds for charitable expenditure is the responsibility of the National Lottery Charities Board. It is a principle of the lottery that the operator, Camelot, has no role to play in the disbursement of proceeds. I shall be issuing the board with directions as to the matters which it must take into account in making grants, but within that framework it will be responsible for deciding its own policies, practices and procedures. The current draft directions include the need to make grants to small, local organisations and those without immediate popular appeal as well as to large, national high-profile bodies. It is for the board to determine what factors to take into account before determining its policies. I understand that the board will be undertaking detailed consultation with the charitable and voluntary sectors before reaching decisions on these matters.

Police (Traffic)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in respect of his decision not to include enforcement of road traffic regulations in the list of core functions for police authorities.

Mr. Maclean: There is no list of core functions for police authorities. My right hon. and learned Friend announced last October the key objectives for policing for 1995–96. Following consultation with ministerial colleagues and others he decided that it would not be right to include a traffic objective, but this does not mean that road traffic regulations will not be enforced. In promulgating the key objectives, my right hon. and learned Friend made plain the importance the Government attach to road safety, and the reduction of road traffic accident casualties.

It is open to police authorities to include traffic objectives as they consider fit in the local objectives which they will be expected to set each year.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were dedicated to traffic enforcement for each of the last five years for which figures are available by police authority.

Mr. Maclean: Information for the years 1989 to 1993 is set out in the table. Figures for 1994 are not yet available. The collection of data for the Metropolitan police began only in 1994.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police authority the budget allocated for road traffic enforcement (a) as a total and (b) as a percentage of overall expenditure for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not held centrally

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from senior police officers about the proposed privatisation of the running of the police national computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: One formal representation was made by the then president of the Association of Chief Police Officers to my predecessor, which supported the principle of market testing the hendon data centre but expressed concern about the timing of the exercise. Representatives of the association have been consulted on the same matter more recently, and have expressed similar views. I will shortly be announcing our conclusions with respect to the future management of the Hendon data centre.

Police Stations

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the 1995–96 police grant allocation on the number of police stations, and their hours of opening in the North Wales police force area.

Mr. Maclean: The draft report "The Police Grant Report (England and Wales) 1995–96" sets out the principles on which proposed allocations of resources have been made for 1995–96. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

It is for the police authority and the chief constable to decide what their priorities are and on what they spend their allocation of police grant.

Police (Abnormal Operations)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which constabularies' applications for special payments for a one-off abnormal operation have been successful during the past five years; and what percentage of their annual budget the cost of that operation represented.

Mr. Maclean: One application for a special payment of grant has been successful during the past five years, from Northumbria police authority. The estimated additional expenditure incurred represented 6.4 per cent. of budget.

Police, Shoreham Harbour

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total cost of the police operation at Shoreham harbour; and what percentage of the annual budget for Sussex constabulary this operation will represent.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that the total estimated cost of the police operation at Shoreham harbour at 19 January was £2.2 million. This represents about 1.7 per cent. of the force budget for 1994–95.

Weapons Scanners

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the use of scanners to detect offensive weapons in places of public entertainment.

Mr. MacLean: This operation is not collected centrally.

North Wales Police

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the 1995–96 police grant allocation on recruitment of police, special constables and graduate recruits for North Wales police.

Mr. Maclean: The responsibility for the recruitment of police officers, special constables and graduate recruits to the police lies solely with the chief officer of the police force concerned. No assessment of the impact of the 1995–96 grant allocation on recruitment for North Wales police has been undertaken centrally.

Martin Fenton

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to release on licence Martin Fenton, currently serving a life sentence for murder.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Mr. Fenton's case has been reviewed twice by the parole board—most recently in October 1992—but the board has not yet recommended that Mr. Fenton is safe to release. My right hon. and learned Friend has no power to release a mandatory life sentence prisoner without a positive parole board recommendation.

The next review of Mr Fenton's case by the parole board will begin in July 1995.

Frederick West

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the total cost of the Frederick West operation to the Gloucestershire constabulary to date and (b) the estimated cost of the entire inquiry; and what percentage of the annual budget these sums represent.

Mr. Maclean: As at 19 January, the estimated total cost to date was £1.4 million. This represents 2.6 per cent. of the force budget for 1994–95. The additional cost to the force is some £670,000 or 1.2 per cent. of budget.

The chief constable is not able at present to make a firm estimate of the total costs expected to be incurred.

Prisoners (Release on Licence)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women who were released on licence were recalled to prison during 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Provisional data for 1994 show that there were 291 men and four women recalled from parole licences under section 39 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 and under earlier legislation and 20 men and no women recalled from life licences. The latest available data for those recalled under sections 38, 65 and 40 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 and for 1993 when there were 33 men and no women recalled for breach under sections 38 and 65 and 22 men and no women recalled for reoffending under section 40.

Vehicle Crime

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what were (a) the costs of vehicle crime in England and Wales for 1993 and (b) his Department's expenditure on related research that year; and what is the planned expenditure for 1994 and 1995.

Mr. Maclean: Our estimate of the total cost of vehicle crime during 1993 was £2.7 billion. This figure includes estimated property loss, and insurance costs, damage, security expenditure, inconvenience costs and criminal justice/police costs.

Home Office expenditure on vehicle-related research totalled approximately £70,000 in 1993 and £72,000 in 1994. Planned expenditure for 1995 is approximately £90,000.

Identity Cards

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest policy on identity cards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. and learned Friend announced last October that the Government plan to publish a Green Paper on identity cards in the spring of this year.

The Green Paper will set out options for a national identity card scheme. We will consider the possibility of introducing an identity card scheme in the light of the responses received to this consultation document.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the private companies that have been consulted by his Department over the possible introduction of identity cards.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Home Office has not entered into formal consultations with any private companies about the possible introduction of identity cards. The forthcoming Green Paper on identity cards will provide an opportunity for private companies to make their views known.

Electric Shock Equipment

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which British police forces have electric shock anti-riot equipment; in what quantities; and for what purpose;

(2) who authorised the supply of electric shock riot shields to police forces in England and Wales for test purposes; how many were purchased then; and to which forces they were supplied.

Mr. Maclean: Chief officers of police are responsible for deciding what equipment to obtain for their forces, either for testing or introduction. In the case of the Metropolitan police, the Commissioner requires my right hon. and learned Friend's agreement to defensive equipment. I understand that no force has obtained any form of electric shock equipment for use against people, or for testing for this purpose, although a number of forces have small numbers of electric shock shields and prods for use against ferocious dogs. Details of the numbers or distribution of such equipment are not available centrally.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many section 5 certificates have been granted in the last two years which relate specifically to electric shock weapons and to which companies.

Mr. Maclean: Electric shock weapons are prohibited by section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968 and cannot be possessed without the authority of the Secretary of State. No company has been granted authority specifically to possess electric shock weapons in the last two years.

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by the Department or agency.

Mr. Howard: No part of my Department, including its agencies, has purchased any training, tuition or course, over the past 12 months, costing more than £5,000 for a single member of staff. The immigration and nationality department purchased five courses for 73 middle and senior operational managers at a total cost of £33,000. These were provided by a mix of in-house training staff and external consultants. Evaluation is by discussion between course members and their line managers. My Department has also made considerable investment in information technology training. A total of 19 courses for 127 members of staff on information technology and computer hardware costing more than £5,000 each have been purchased by the immigration and nationality department, the police national computer data centre and the Home Office's research and planning unit. Total costs were, respectively, £26,000, £36,250 and £74,000. The overall costs are a consequence of the number of information technology staff requiring training in implementing and using new systems and software.

WALES

Defective Buildings, Flint

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action (1) he has taken following the copy letter dated 6 April 1994 from Clwyd county council chief fire officer to the National House Building Council regarding properties at Palace close, Flint and Balmoral close, Flint; and what is his opinion of the conformity to building regulations;

(2) what request he has received to use his default powers under the Building Act 1984 with regard to Royal Gardens, Flint; what action he has taken; and if he will request a formal opinion of the nature and extent of the defects reported to him.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has received a request from Mr. C. Gavin of 15 Palace close to use his default powers under section 116 of the Building Act 1984. However, the Secretary of State uses these powers only in cases where there appears to be a manifest failure by a local authority to carry out a specific function under the Act.

My right hon. Friend has no statutory basis on which he can express an opinion on conformity with the building regulations in this case. It was for NHBC Building Control Services Ltd. to consider what action might be necessary following the chief fire officer's letter to it.

Blood

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future chain of command of the blood transfusion services in north Wales; what consultations he has hade with the Secretary of State for Health, the National Blood Authority, in England, and the National Blood Transfusion Service, in Wales, on this issue; and what representations he has received concerning his policies.

Mr. Redwood: Management of the blood transfusion service in north Wales is the responsibility of the National Blood Authority and representations about the future of this service are for the Secretary of State for Health. My officials were kept informed of progress on the review of services in England and these discussions are continuing. I will shortly be consulting on the future management of the Welsh blood service.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority and the management of National Blood Transfusion Services—Wales regarding the screening of donors and recipients for hepatitis C.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Health Common Services Authority and National Blood Transfusion Services — Wales are being kept fully informed about the "look-back" exercise for hepatitis C.

Internet

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the percentage of Welsh businesses connected to the Internet system.

Mr. Redwood: It has been estimated that in the United Kingdom as a whole some 30 per cent. of businesses are connected to the Internet. I am not aware of any reliable estimate of the comparable figure for Wales.

Ambulance Personnel (Early Retirement)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce the same early retirement settlement for ambulance personnel in Wales as is proposed for England.

Mr. Richards: In view of the level of provision made in 1993–94, there are no plans to introduce a further early retirement scheme for ambulance personnel in Wales in the current financial year.

Tourist Rail Links (VAT)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment his Department has made of the effect on tourist facilities in Wales of the imposition of value added tax on tourist rail links; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The application of VAT is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer who announced on 29 November that services relating to entertainment or recreational activities and car parking at airports, which include passenger transport, will become wholly standard-rated. The measure will affect a limited range of businesses in Wales.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the Wales tourist board on the imposition of value added tax on tourist rail links and its likely effects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The chief executive of the board has written to me about this matter.

Strategic Development Scheme Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total strategic development scheme expenditure to be allowed in Wales in 1995–96; what proportion of this will be spent in Gwynedd, and of this figure, how much in the voluntary sector; and if he will make a statement on any difficulties arising with regard to securing sufficient suitable projects for Gwynedd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The strategic development scheme's total budget for 1995–96 is £57 million, of which £5,900,000—10.4 per cent.—has been allocated to local authorities in Gwynedd. Some £464,645 will be spent on voluntary sector projects in Gwynedd. Before submitting bids, authorities are asked to consult widely within their local communities, with development agencies, the voluntary sector and other appropriate interested bodies. The selection and priority of the bids are a matter for those local authorities.

Home Renovation Grants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in (a) Wales and (b) Alyn and Deeside are waiting for home renovation grants; and what steps he is taking to provide funds for the delivery of these grants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The figures requested are not held centrally. Since the grant system was introduced in 1990, more than £1.04 billion has been made available for renovation in Wales, with Alyn and Deeside receiving some £14.9 million. For 1995–96, we have increased the money available for renovation to £198.5 million.

Animal Diseases

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of equine infectious anaemia there have been in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No cases of equine infectious anaemia have occurred in Wales since 1985.

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning the requirement for adapting council houses for those suffering disability.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for local councils to determine the priority they attach to adaptations for individuals with disabilities. A council may carry out adaptations or tenants may apply for disabled facilities grants.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of the number of dwellings provided by housing assoiciations for each district council and for Wales as a whole, for each of the last three years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of dwellings provided by housing associations in each district and in Wales as a whole is published annually in table 5.2 of Welsh housing statistics. Additionally, the numbers of dwellings provided during 1992–93 under the acquisition initiative were published in appendix 3 of Welsh housing statistics No. 13 1993. Copies of the publication are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the starting date applicable to the Tai Cymru policy framework for assisted ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The relevant regulation—statutory instrument No. 2895 of 1994—came into force on 8 December 1994. I expect the first sales of properties to take place during the financial year 1995–96.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of the amount invested in housing provision in Wales from (a) grants from Tai Cymru, (b) transfers from local authorities and (c) private investment from banks and building societies, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information sought will be covered in the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1995–96 to 1997–98: Departmental Report by the Welsh Office and the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales" which is due to be published on 9 March 1995.

Health Authorities (Financial Allocations)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to inform health authorities of their financial allocation for 1995–96.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend will be announcing the financial allocations for 1995–96 to health authorities shortly.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the specific different circumstances in Wales which led him not to publish the consultation paper inviting views on the desirability of introducing a licencing system for homes in multiple occupation in England and Wales on which the Department of the Environment is consulting in England.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department of the Environment document covers England only. My right hon. Friend has written to the hon. Gentleman, other Welsh Members of Parliament, local authorities and interested organisations seeking their views on this issue.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the identifiable costs of administration within his office for grant-maintained schools; and what estimate he has made of costs which cannot be readily separated from general educational expenditure.

Mr. Richards: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Health Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consult the chairmen of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority and the Health Promotion Authority for Wales concerning potential savings from rationalising accommodation and other management running costs expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Such matters are kept under constant review.

National Curriculum Assessment

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the results from the 1994 national curriculum assessment in Wales.

Mr. Richards: A summary of the results submitted is shown in the following table. The results represent 8.2 per cent. of pupils eligible for assessment at the end of key stage 1 and 11.4 per cent. of pupils eligible for assessment at the end of key stage 3. This low level of response means that no statistically valid conclusions can be drawn from the data as regards the whole of Wales.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Homes Board

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the remuneration and emoluments and expenses paid to each member of the Scottish Homes board in each year since it was established.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have asked the chairman of Scottish Homes, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member with the relevant information.

General Practitioners

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish his consultation document on an accountability framework for fundholding general practitioners; and who will be included on the list of those to be consulted on this framework.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proposed consultation document on an accountability framework for GP fundholders is due to be issued for consultation within the NHS in Scotland in the near future. Bodies which will be consulted will include GP fundholders, the Scottish general medical services committee of the British Medical Association, Royal College of General Practitioners, health boards, NHS trusts and local health councils.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner fundholders in Scotland (a) are to participate and (b) have expressed an interest in participating in pilot studies under the primary care purchasing initiative for the purchase of all health care services; where these fundholders are located; and when the pilot studies will begin.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following information relates to the proposed pilot studies to evaluate the cost-effectiveness of GP fundholding practices which purchase all health care services on behalf of their patients in collaboration with their health board.

To date approximately 30 GP fundholding practices in the following health board areas have expressed interest in participating.

Ayrshire and Arran
Forth Valley
Grampian
Greater Glasgow
Highland Lanarkshire
Lothian
Tayside

Some further expressions of interest from fundholding practices are expected.

It is intended to mount up to six pilot studies in a range of areas but no final decisions have been reached about those practices which will participate. The pilot projects are expected to commence during 1995–96.

Asthma Medication Costs

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the expenditure on general practitioner prescribed anti-asthma medication and preparations in each health board in Scotland in terms of (a) net ingredient cost and (b) net ingredient cost per capita for the last two years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information by health board and Scotland for the financial years 1992–93 and 1993–94 is set out in the table. The costs shown are based on the value of the ingredients before the deduction of any discount and relate only to inhaled and oral adrenoceptor stimulants, inhaled steroids, inhaled antimuscarinic bronchodilators and theophylline preparations.

Elderly People

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Highland regional council about attacks on vulnerable elderly people in their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such representations have been received from Highland regional council.

Arts Courses

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many school leavers, in the last year for which figures are available, entered courses run by colleges of (a) music, (b) art, (c) drama, (d) dance and (e) other arts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Low Moss Prison

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to use the area of the resettlement unit at Bishopbriggs to extend facilities at Low Moss prison; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The suitability of this area for prison service facilities is one of a number of possible options currently being examined. No decisions have been taken; and any proposals for the use of this area would require to be the subject of an application for outline planning consent.

Objective 1 Funding

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the eligibility for financial assistance under highlands and islands objective 1 status allow for applications for maintenance of rail services regionally; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the highlands and islands objective 1 programme, assistance from the European regional development fund can be provided towards rail infrastructure projects. EC funds cannot be used to provide a revenue subsidy.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the incidence of, and extent to which, highlands and islands objective 1 European funding has resulted in corresponding reductions in his Department's financial allocations and expenditure within the area; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: European Community spending, including that in the highlands and islands under objective 1, is dealt with in the public expenditure survey as an integral part of the expenditure programmes for which I have responsibility. EC rules on additionality preclude the use of objective 1 funds to substitute for other forms of public expenditure.

Electro-Shock Weapons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date his Department gave ICL Technical Plastics a licence to produce electro-shock weapons in the United Kingdom.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Electric shock weapons are considered to be prohibited under the provisions of the Firearms Acts. Their manufacture, possession and sale, therefore, require the specific authority of my right hon. Friend. No such authority has been granted to ICL Technical Plastics.

Ferry Transport

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) cars, (b) commercial vehicles and (c) passengers and the volume and value of freight originating from or destined to Scotland which was transported to or from mainland Europe by ferry via English ferry ports in the most recent five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

This information is available only at disproportionate cost.

Hip Replacements

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his letter of 31 October to the hon. Member of Linlithgow, what progress his officials have made in monitoring the use of Kyocera titanium fibres in relation to hip replacements.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 January 1995]: As explained by my noble Friend the Minister of State in his letter to the hon. Gentleman of 31 October, although Kyocera included the possible use of titanium fibres in hip replacement implants in its patent application it is not yet developing the material into a marketable product for use in hip replacement applications. The Medical Devices Agency is taking the lead in monitoring developments in this area and will keep the other United Kingdom Health Departments informed.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations took place to ascertain the most suitable specification for the new communications system in the Scottish ambulance service control room in Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 January 1995]: The Scottish ambulance service consulted within the service to establish its communications requirements and agreed the specification in consultation with the Scottish Office directorate of telecommunications which provided appropriate technical advice.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an analysis of the response to the consultation on trust status for the Scottish ambulance service; what consideration he has given to this analysis; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 January 1995]: An analysis of the responses is as follows:

Note:
[1] Number of the Application Documents issued for consultation.

Copies of all comments received in response to the public consultation have been retained by the Common Services Agency and are available for inspection. A copy is available for inspection in the Library of the Scottish Office, St. Andrew's house, Edinburgh.

Following an extensive consultation exercise including 34 public meetings held throughout Scotland, 201 responses were received. Only 91 of these specifically indicated opposition to the application. Consideration was given to all the comments made and to the report and recommendations made by the Common Services Agency. The application was considered against the published criteria of benefits for patients, management competence, involvement of clinicians and other health care professionals in management and financial viability. My right hon. Friend announced on 25 November that he had given his approval to the application after appraisal against the criteria.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the letter of the hon. Member for Edinburgh West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton) to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 2 August 1994, what evidence he has had from the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority about the use of ovarian tissue in research; and what action he proposes to take.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 January 1995]: No such evidence has been received. I understand that the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority has not received any application for the use of ovarian tissue for research purposes in the period since I wrote to the hon. Member on 2 August 1994.

Lorries

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he is making of the impact of 40-tonne lorries on secondary roads and bridges in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 January 1995]: Regional and islands councils, as local roads authorities, are responsible for assessing the impact of 40-tonne lorries on secondary roads and bridges in Scotland. Bridges which form part of the trunk road network are being assessed, and strengthened where appropriate, by the Scottish Office.

Bridges

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of increased help for new unitary local authorities for the strengthening of bridges.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 January 1995]: Bridge assessment and strengthening is one of the Government's special objectives in determining local authority capital allocations for roads and transport in Scotland. Full consideration is given, within the resources available, to the proposals contained in local authorities' transport policies and programmes documents and financial plans for bridge assessment and strengthening. There will continue to be arrangements to ensure that adequate financial resources are available to cover necessary work when the new unitary local authorities assume their responsibilities.

Unitary Authorities

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his policy in respect of the future management and disposition of common good funds by the new unitary authorities in Scotland after April 1996;

(2) if he will require new unitary authorities to restrict decisions on the disposition and management of common good funds to the new councillors representing the area for which the common good fund was established;

(3) if he will ensure that the new unitary authorities are unable to apply common good resources to any subject which can be financed by normal local authority funds.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 January 1995]: Subject to complying with the current statutory requirements, local authorities have complete discretion as to the management and disposition of common good funds. Authorities must have regard to the interests of the inhabitants of their area and, with common good property, must have regard to the interests of the inhabitants of the area to which the common good related prior to 16 May 1975. The existing arrangements will continue to apply after April 1996.

Management and disposition of common good funds may be addressed in the decentralisation schemes which will be drawn up by the new councils. Community councils will be formally consulted on the draft schemes, which will also be subject to public consultation.

Retail Development

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish the new national planning policy guideline on retail development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 January 1995]: I expect to issue a draft national planning policy guideline on retailing for public consultation very shortly.

Churches

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances churches are classed as business users for water rates; and, if he has any plan to reclassify charitable bodies, including churches.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 January 1995]: All occupiers of premises connected to the public water supply may be liable to pay water charges. Churches are liable to pay either the non-domestic water rate, at the reduced levy applicable to such premises, or metered water charges.

We have no plans to change this prior to restructuring of Scotland's water and sewerage services. At that point, it will be for the new water and sewerage authorities to determine future methods of charging for their services.

Aberdeen Royal Hospitals

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list operations cancelled by Aberdeen Royal Hospitals in each month since June 1994.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 January 1995]: This information is not collected centrally. The chairman of the Aberdeen Royal Hospitals NHS trust has been asked to provide the information to the hon. Member.

EDUCATION

City of Westminster Bill

12. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has received relating to the City of Westminster Bill [Lords]; and what was her response.

Mr. Robin Squire: There has been correspondence with Westminster city council about the need for clause 9 of the Bill which would relieve the local education authority of its duty under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 to build a new school at Moxon Street. No other correspondence about this aspect of the Bill has been received.

Annual Capital Guidelines

13. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has received from local education authorities regarding the 1995–96 annual capital guideline figures since their announcement.

Mr. Robin Squire: To date, some 14 LEAs have written to officials, identified concerns on the telephone, or made a request to bring a delegation to see me.

Schools (Capital Spending)

16. Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much central Government support for capital spending in schools has changed in real terms between 1986–87 and 1993–94.

Mr. Robin Squire: Between 1986–87 and 1993–94, there was a 57 per cent. real terms increase in central Government capital support for schools. That covers spending on local authority and voluntary schools and, since 1989, grant-maintained schools.

Standard Spending Assessment

17. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the education standard spending assessment of Hereford and Worcester county council.

Mr. Robin Squire: The increase in Hereford and Worcester's education standard spending assessment for 1995–96 is higher than the national average. Allowing for the reform of inter-authority recoupment, the authority's provisional education SSA will be 2.3 per cent. higher than in 1994–95.

Office for Standards in Education

18. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made with regard to the progress of Ofsted.

Mr. Forth: Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, the head of Ofsted, is responsible for the new school inspection arrangements. The Secretary of State shares with him the objective of ensuring that all publicly funded schools are independently inspected on a four-year cycle. The new arrangements have got off to a good start. By the end of this academic year, roughly half of all secondary schools, and a significant minority of primary schools, will have been independently inspected and a copy of the report sent to every parent.

Nursery Schools

19. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the progress of the working party established to consider the provision of nursery and pre-school education.

24. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress she is making in achieving a nursery place for all children over three years of age.

Mr. Forth: The task force, established by my right hon. Friend, is consulting widely and is considering a range of options to achieve the Prime Minister's commitment to provide a pre-school place for all four-year-olds whose parents wish them to take it up. As the expansion is achieved, we want to ensure that it will add to the choice parents have among a range of provision—public, private and voluntary. My right hon. Friend will be making an announcement about progress in due course.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much Government funding was given during 1994 for the provision of nursery school education within the Greater London area.

Mr. Forth: For the purpose of determining standard spending assessments, the education component of standard spending, net of specific grants, is divided into five sub-blocks—under-fives, primary, secondary, 16-plus, and other education. There is no SSA for nursery school education as the under-fives sub-block notionally includes spending on rising fives in primary schools as well as pupils in nursery schools and classes. The total of the under-fives SSA sub-block for London local education authorities in 1994–95 is £189.87 million.

Schools, Shropshire

20. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the adequacy of current class sizes and academic achievement in local education authority schools in Shropshire.

Mr. Forth: Average class sizes in Shropshire are lower than average class sizes nationally. In 1994, 46.2 per cent. of 15-year-olds in Shropshire maintained schools obtained five or more GCSE grades A*-C, compared with 38.2 per cent. for LEA-maintained schools nationally.

Research Links

21. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement about the development of research links between universities and industry.

Mr. Boswell: There are many examples of universities and industry working together for their mutual benefit. We have asked the Higher Education Funding Council for England to take into account in its funding for research the policies set out in the White Paper "Realising our Potential: A Strategy for Science, Engineering and Technology". This includes developing the method for rewarding universities and colleges which collaborate in generic research with industry.

Three-tier Schools System

22. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many education authorities have a three-tier system in their schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: In January 1994, 32 local education authorities were operating a three-year system in all or in part of their area.

Higher Education

23. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she last had a meeting with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals regarding the impact of Government policy on higher education.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend last met the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on 2 December 1994, and discussed a range of matters, including matters relevant to the impact of Government policy on higher education.

Disabled Students

25. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many disabled pupils in Britain who were in mainstream primary schools have been denied mainstream secondary places in 1994.

Mr. Forth: This information is not available centrally. The special educational needs code stresses the need for careful planning for transfer between phases: if parents remain dissatisfied with a local education authority's decision about their child's special educational needs they can appeal as appropriate to the SEN tribunal or an independent appeal committee established by the relevant admissions authority.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools in Britain in 1994 have had adaptations to allow full access for disabled students.

Mr. Forth: This information is not held centrally. From May this year, we will be conducting a survey of the accessibility of all schools. This survey will be completed biennially and comparing these results with those produced in future years' surveys will provide an indication of the amount of adaptation undertaken during that period.

School Budgets, Derbyshire

26. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on school budgets in Derbyshire for 1995–96.

Mr. Robin Squire: It will be up to Derbyshire county council to decide what to spend on the various services for which it is responsible, including schools. Derbyshire's education standard spending assessment will increase by 0.7 per cent. in 1995–96.

Ministerial Visits

27. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will visit the Makerfield constituency to discuss the funding of local education authority schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Student Poverty

28. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to address the issue of student poverty.

Mr. Boswell: There is no evidence of widespread student poverty. For those eligible for mandatory awards and student loans, the total support available has risen slightly in real terms since 1990 when loans were first introduced. It will increase by 2.5 per cent for the 1995–96 academic year. Other students can apply to local education authorities for discretionary awards. The access funds can provide additional assistance to full-time students in particular need.

Assisted Places Scheme

29. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of pupils on the assisted places scheme receive a free place.

Mr. Forth: Over 40 per cent. of assisted place holders received a free place in the academic year 1993–94.

Class Sizes

30. Ms Church: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research her Department has undertaken into the relationship between class size and educational standards.

Mr. Forth: The Department has not undertaken such research itself, but monitors work generally in this field.

Special Needs

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what additional funding and resources she proposes for children with special needs in the next financial year.

Mr. Forth: Education standard spending assessments will rise on average by 1.2 per cent. in 1995–96 and the special educational needs code of practice will encourage schools to make most effective use of their budgets for special educational needs pupils. In addition, grants for education support and training from the Department for Education to local education authorities in support of special educational needs will increase by some 15 per cent.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to make provision, in the entire education service from nursery to higher education, for children identified as being affected by attention deficit hyperactivity disorder.

Mr. Forth: The responsibility for making provision for school children with special educational needs, including, those with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, rests with schools and local education authorities. The code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs, issued by the Secretary of State under the Education Act 1993, gives guidance to schools and LEAs on their responsibilities towards all pupils with special educational needs of all kinds. District health authorities and NHS trusts must inform the parents and the appropriate LEA when they form the opinion that a child under the age of five may have special educational needs.

The Further Education Funding Council and LEAs are statutorily required to take account of the needs of students in further education with all kinds of learning difficulties. In higher education, the Secretary of State's initial letter of guidance to the Higher Education Funding Council for England asked it to consider how it could best meet the needs of students with learning difficulties. Universities are able to make the provision they consider appropriate for students with learning difficulties.

Teachers' Morale

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she had made of the proposed system of league tables on the morale of the teaching profession.

Mr. Forth: School and college performance tables are now well established, not least because they help ensure that the achievements of individual schools and colleges are fully recognised. The views of the representatives of the teaching profession are sought each year on the format and content of the tables.

Religious Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the future of religious education and the daily act of worship in schools.

Mr. Forth: The Government have no plans to change the law requiring religious education and daily collective worship to be provided for all registered pupils at maintained schools. These activities make an important contribution to pupils' moral and spiritual development.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will investigate the circumstances surrounding the extension of the employment contract of the chief executive of the Student Loans Company; who took the decision, if she approved the extension; and what considerations led to the contract being extended.

Mr. Boswell: The decision to offer Mr. Harrison an extension of his contract as chief executive was taken in November 1993 by the board of the Student Loans Company, with the agreement of my right hon. Friend's predecessor and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many employees for which her Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and, of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Boswell: The number of women employed by the Department at the specified grades over the past four years is as follows:

Grade 7	31	44	39	45
EO	208	218	269	280
AO	403	410	446	416
AA	265	287	224	208
Overall	1,096	1,150	1,186	1,233

Private Finance Initiative

Sir Nicholas Scott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans her Department has for encouraging the use of the private finance initiative in education.

Mr. Boswell: In December last, we issued the booklet "Education Means Business" which sets out opportunities for private investment in education. This was sent to all higher and further education institutions, grant-maintained schools and all other secondary schools, maintained special schools, local education authorities, diocesan bodies and teachers' organisations together with banks, solicitors and accountancy firms and other businesses that have expressed an interest in PFI and education. Copies were placed in the Library of the House.

The Higher Education Funding Council for England, the Further Education Funding Council and the Funding Agency for Schools maintained registers of businesses and education providers who are interested in pursuing privately financed projects and put interested parties in touch with each other.

The Department—working together with the higher education funding councils and the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals—is organising a conference for universities and the private sector to encouraged further private investment in higher education. It is to be held on 23 March at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre. We are considering whether it would be beneficial to organise similar conferences for the further education and schools sectors.

The Department's PFI unit is arranging a number of visits to schools and LEAs with the objective of promoting PFI.

As announced at the time of the last Budget, we are making changes from 1 April 1995 to the allocation of capital and recurrent grants to both higher and further education funding councils. This will enable them to give higher and further education institutions more flexibility to decide how to finance capital projects and, in particular, more scope to use private sector finance. In addition, further education institutions will have the same ability as the higher education institutions to use Exchequer-funded assets as security for loans.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will set out for each of the next steps agencies in her Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have acquired which were not required when their operations were within her Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have spoecifially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Forth: The Department has only one next steps agency, the Teachers Pensions Agency. The operational and managerial matters of the Teachers Pensions Agency are the responsibility of its chief executive, Mrs. Denyse Metcalfe. I have asked her to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Denyse Metcalf to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 23 January 1995:

As Chief Executive of the Teachers' Pensions Agency, I have been asked to let you have information about the Agency as requested in your Question to the Secretary of State for Education about the operation of the Department's Next Steps Agencies.

The TPA was launched as an Agency in April 1992 and has continued to occupy premises in Darlington on a site shared with the Department. It has no separate headquarters building. As well as sharing a site with the Department the Agency also obtains most of its support services from the Department under a Service Level Agreement, although it has its own Personnel and Training Section of 5 staff of whom 2 were additional posts in support of delegated freedoms stemming from the Agency's Framework Document.

The TPA produces an information sheet which it sends to the employers (approximately 3,500) of the Teachers' Superannuation Scheme members each term. The cost of this publication is £6,000 annually.

The Agency has one 'pool' car which is owned by the Agency and used by the Chief Executive and other staff for seminars and visits to employers. The annual cost of the car in 93/94 was £1,900.

The Agency has a logo which was produced as a result of an 'in house' competition for which a token amount of £150 was paid to the member of staff who produced it. The Agency has not corporate clothing and the use of a logo on stationery does not result in any increased costs.

National Curriculum

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list for (a) English, (b) mathematics and (c) history the publications, guidance and teaching material which has been sent to schools concerning the national curriculum since 1988; and if she will give the cost for each subject.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the information requested in the case of the statutory documents setting out study requirements for the current national curriculum in English, mathematics and history.

For the revised national curriculum which comes into effect in August 1995, however, the statutory documents for the 11 subjects and the two supporting compilations were produced as a single project. It is not possible therefore to disaggregate the production and distribution costs of the individual subjects, but the production cost and the estimated distribution cost of the entire revised national curriculum are shown, along with the names of the relevant documents. Distribution is currently under way.

The table also lists publications since 1988 relating to non-statutory curriculum guidance and the assessment of pupils in English, mathematics and history, although in some cases the documents cover all three core subjects—English, mathematics and science. I will write to the hon. Member with cost details as soon as possible.

University Students

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action she is taking to help university students living below the poverty line and not in receipt of social security benefit.

Mr. Boswell: The student income and expenditure survey for 1992–93 conducted on behalf of the Department revealed no evidence of widespread student poverty, for those students prepared to take the concessionary student loans on offer. The total support available through the main rates of grant and loan will increase by 2.5 per cent. for the 1995–96 academic year. Income support and housing benefit continue to be available to students in certain vulnerable groups. The access funds, which will be increased by about £1 million to around £28 million for 1995–96, can provide additional assistance to full-time students in particular need.

Public Bodies (Grants)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the grants given to non-governmental organisations by her Department in each year since 1990.

Mr. Boswell: The grants given to the non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Department are listed in the table. Those made to the research councils and to the Sports Council, formerly sponsored by the then Department of Education and Science and now by the Office of Public service and Science and the Department of National Heritage respectively, are published in the appropriation accounts, copies of which are in the Library.

HEALTH

Cancer

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to assist cancer sufferers to live at home with the appropriate and necessary level of support.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities are required to contract for specialist palliative care services to meet the assessed health needs of their populations. We have increased the amount of funding made available to health authorities for specialist palliative care from £8 million in 1990–91 to nearly £48 million this financial year. This financial commitment has helped to ensure that palliative care is increasingly available in all settings, including in the patient's own home. The development of the right services to enable people to live in their own homes wherever this is possible and sensible is a key objective of the new community care arrangements. The expert advisory group on cancer also recommended that treatment should be provided as close to the patient's home as is compatible with high-quality, safe and effective treatment.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health trusts have set energy saving targets comparable to those set by health authorities given in "Climate Change: The UK Programme".

Mr. Sackville: Some 387 national health service trusts have established energy targets for the period to March 1996 and beyond.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by each health authority in the United Kingdom towards the energy saving target given in "Climate Change: The UK Programme".

Mr. Sackville: The national health service energy savings programme commenced in April 1991 with a target set to reduce national energy consumption by 15 per cent. over the five years to 1995–96. The broad total savings achieved in England to date amount to 7.9 per cent.

It is not possible to give totals for each health authority or national health service trust.

Additional energy savings have been projected from April 1994 to March 1996 amounting to 8.3 per cent.

Special Transitional Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each local authority in England the special transitional grant for 1994–95; and if she will indicate for each local authority the funding that would have been received by that authority if the distribution formula had been the same as that used for 1993–94, and indicate the difference between the two.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 9 March 1994, Official Report, column 308.

Long-term Care

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what national criteria she has stipulated against which she will judge whether the definitions of access to long-term health care which the district health authorities will be negotiating with their local authorities next year are reasonable and equitable;

(2) what financial recompense she will require to be made to local authorities required to provide a substantial part of long-term care which is elsewhere available under the NHS.

Mr. Bowis: We shall shortly be issuing guidance to health authorities on their responsibilities for continuing health care. Under this guidance, all health authorities will be required to review their current arrangements and to ensure they are securing an adequate level of continuing health care to meet the needs of their population.

NHS Uniformity

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring mechanism she has requested the National Health Service Executive put in place to ensure that there is consistency of definitions between authorities.

Mr. Sackville: The National Health Service Executive in consultation with the NHS, has commissioned national standards for the data items, including definitions, which all NHS authorities have agreed to collect regularly, both for local NHS management and returns to the centre. The regulation of these standards is governed by the joint Department of Health–National Health Service Committee for Regulating Information Requirements.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanism is in place to ensure equity between different areas of the country as regards the availability of different forms of treatment on the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Our policy objective is to secure, through resource allocation, over time, equal opportunity of access to health care for people at equal risk. A weighted capitation formula is used as the basis for allocating hospital and community health services revenue to regional health authorities. The formula weights their population for age, need, and for geographical variation in the cost of providing services. It is for health authorities to determine, taking full account of national priorities, set out in the annual priorities and planning guidance, how best to use the resources available to them to meet local needs.

Stress-related Diseases

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of deaths among (a) men and (b) women in each of the last five years were a consequence of stress-related diseases.

Mr. Bowis: Information on death certificates about causes of death is given in terms of diagnosis. Stress may be a contributory factor in deaths from a number of diseases, but is not a separate diagnostic category. It is therefore not possible to say what proportion of deaths from any disease are stress related.

Children's Homes

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the study being prepared by the social services inspectorate into unregistrable children's homes will be (a) completed and (b) published.

Mr. Bowis: I expect the report to be submitted within the next few months. A decision on publication will be made thereafter.

Children (Placement)

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children are currently placed with non-relatives under the arrangements for the Placement of Children (General) Regulations 1991; and in what percentage of these placements a taxable fee is being paid directly to the non-relative or to an agency.

Mr. Bowis: Information collected centrally relates only to children looked after by local authorities. At 31 March 1993 approximately 43,000 children looked after by local authorities were placed in foster care with non-relatives or in residential accommodation, and would have been subject to these regulations. Of these, 27,000 were in foster care. The total includes about 2,000 children with agreements for a series of short-term placements, who will not all have been so placed on that date.

Where placements are with a foster family, the percentage of foster carers that receive a taxable fee—reward payments—is very small.

In all cases where placements are with an agency, the fee, less expenses accepted by the Inland Revenue, would be regarded as taxable income.

Conception

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what surveys she has conducted to establish which scientists argue that conception in human reproduction occurs days later than fertilisation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The accepted scientific view is that pregnancy does not occur until the fertilised ovum implants in the womb, which is usually around six days after fertilisation.

Laparoscopic Operations

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the recently issued guidelines, by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, on the subject of laparoscopic operations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No representations have been received about these guidelines, which were contained in a report of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists working party on training in gynaecological endoscopic surgery, the publication of which we welcome.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists to introduce an accreditation procedure for surgeons wishing to perform laparoscopic operations.

Mr. Sackville: We welcome the recent decision by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists to introduce compulsory training in endoscopic surgery, including issuing certificates of competence to those who have had satisfactory reports.

Ambulance Response Times, Bolton

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the target ambulance response times for Bolton;

(2) on how many occasions, numerically and as a percentage over the last two years, target ambulance response times for Bolton have not been met.

Mr. Bowis: Health authorities are responsible for setting and monitoring performance standards for the emergency and urgent ambulance services in the district(s) they cover, which must as a minimum accord with national standards. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Wigan and Bolton district health authority, for details of the services in Bolton.

Mrs Elizabeth Bailey

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to receive the report of the inquiry into the part played in the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Bailey of Bolton by (a) hospital bed availability and (b) ambulance response time.

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is aware of the sad circumstances of Mrs. Bailey's death. My right hon. Friend does not expect to receive further reports. It is for the local health authorities to consider any lessons to be learned for the operation of the health services in Bolton.

Specialty Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give for each financial year since 1989–90 the numbers of (a) hospital spells and (b) finished consultant episodes in NHS hospitals in England recorded in the NHS Executive's fast-track monitoring returns for (i) acute specialties, (ii) geriatrics, (iii) mental illness, (iv) mental handicap, (v) maternity, (vi) well babies and (vii) all specialties.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The numbers of finished consultant episodes for ordinary and day case admissions in national health service hospitals in England are published in "Ordinary and day case admissions for England: Financial Year 1993–94, copies of which are available in the Library. These are the definitive figures which supersede the provisional forecasts from the National Health Service Executive's fast-track monitoring returns. Information on hospital spells is not collected within the fast-track system.

Family Health Services

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give for each year since 1974–75 total spending on family health services for each NHS region and for the special health authorities (a) in cash terms, (b) adjusted using the GDP deflator and (c) adjusted using the NHS pay and prices index.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 January 1995]: A regional breakdown of all family health services expenditure from 1992–93 will be placed in the Library. Regional figures for earlier years are not readily available on a comparable basis but national totals of FHS expenditure from 1974–75 will also be placed in the Library. Figures have been adjusted to 1993–94 prices using the GDP deflator. The only available FHS inflation index is based on costs in the non-cash-limited part of the FHS and is not applicable to these figures which incorporate both cash-limited and non-cash-limited FHS expenditure. Special health authorities do not incur expenditure on family health services.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give for each financial year since 1989–90 the numbers of day case admissions to NHS hospitals in England recorded in (a) the hospital episode system and (b) the NHS Executive's fast-track monitoring returns for (i) acute specialties, (ii) geriatrics, (iii) mental illness, (iv) mental handicap, (v) maternity, (vi) well babies and (vii) all specialties.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The number of day case admissions for each speciality group from the hospital episode statistics system for each financial year 1988–89 to 1992–93 is given in the annual publication "Hospital Episode Statistics, England", copies of which are available in the Library.

The National Health Service Executive's fast-track monitoring returns are used to produce provisional forecasts which are not routinely published. The final definitive figures of day case admission in NHS hospitals are published in "Ordinary and Day Case Admissions for England: Financial Year 1993–94", and copies are available in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Factory Inspectors

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual cost of employing a factory inspector.

Mr. Oppenheim: The average annual cost at 1994–95 prices to the Health and Safety Executive of employing a factory inspector 1B, the main grade deployed on inspection work, is £45,387.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in how many cases relatives of (a) existing factory inspectors and (b) administrative staff have been recruited in (i) area offices, (ii) HQ Bootle or (iii) London in the administrative executive and clerical grades; if he will issue instructions to prevent this practice; and if he will take appropriate disciplinary action.

Mr. Oppenheim: No statistics are kept of relatives employed in Health and Safety Executive offices.

The recruitment of all staff in the HSE meets the civil service Order in Council rules dealing with fair and open recruitment. The existing rules about recruitment of relatives are sufficiently clear and stringent and no disciplinary action is needed.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors are due to be recruited in 1995; and when the recruitment will take place.

Mr. Oppenheim: A current recruitment competition aims to recruit approximately 60 factory inspectors.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many premises were inspected by the factory inspectorate (a) in 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information about the number of premises inspected is not readily available since some premises received more than one visit. The number of planned inspection visits carried out by the field operations division's factory, agriculture and quarries inspectors is shown in the following table:

Year	Number of inspections
1992–93	157,426
1993–94	152,014

Visits were also paid for a range of other purposes, such as to follow up complaints and to investigate accidents.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names and full costs of all consultants currently used by the Health and Safety Executive and those used in 1993–94.

Mr. Oppenheim: Available information for 1993–94 is given in the following table. A similar list for the current year is not yet available.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Executive will open the files held in area offices on individual firms' inspection history to members of the public on demand without payment of any fees.

Mr. Oppenheim: Under the code of practice on access to government information and the Environmental Information Regulations 1992, the Health and Safety Executive will make available, on request information about inspections it has carried out at particular premises, subject to the exempted categories of information in the code and the regulations.

Where the HSE uses significant resources to make information available, it will make reasonable charges for such information as it is entitled to do under both the code and the regulations.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many premises liable to inspection by the Health and Safety Executive have not had a full basic inspection by the Health and Safety Executive in the last (a) five, (b) seven, (c) nine, (d) 11 and (e) more years; and what will be the inspection backlog for 1994–95.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information about the elapsed years since full basic inspections were carried out by the Health and Safety Executive to premises for which the HSE has inspection responsibilities, can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Although elapsed years is one consideration in determining inspection priorities, more account is taken of the degree of hazard and risk posed to employees and the public. Inspection programmes are selected each year to match the resources available, and there is no inspection backlog.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the target number of basic field inspections for 1995–96 in the field operations division of the Health and Safety Executive; and how many premises in total the Health and Safety Executive is now responsible for inspecting.

Mr. Oppenheim: The 1995-96 plan of work for the field operations division of the Health and Safety Executive is still in preparation and the target number of inspections is not yet known. HSE inspectors are responsible for enforcing health and safety legislation in over 650,000 establishments.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the Health and Safety Executive is alleviating the problem of work-related stress among its staff.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive's safety policy is clear in establishing divisional management responsibilities for dealing with issues such as stress at work. Guidance to divisional line managers is currently provided in the Employment Department group personnel handbook. This guidance augments the high level of awareness within the HSE's divisions of the risks associated with work-induced stress. While recognising the difficulties posed by non-work stresses, it sets out a practical approach to identifying and combating workplace stress. The HSE's 1995 staff attitudes survey will provide monitoring of its effectiveness in managing this issue.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes in the complement of principal inspectors of factories is being planned for the Health and Safety Executive area offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: The complement of principal inspectors—factory, agriculture and quarries—in area offices is being reduced for 1995–96 by approximately 34, as part of the process of restructuring some parts of the Health ad Safety Executive in order to allow the executive to recruit more inspectors for front-line activities. The HSE has agreed to the recruitment of some 60 of the latter during 1995–96.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the ratio of managers to managed grades in the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive has many staff whose work involves a mixture of supervisory and personal work. The ratio of those staff whose work is entirely or mainly managerial to other staff at 1 January 1995 was 1:18.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what personnel policies the Health and Safety Executive has to deal with husbands and wives working in the same office of the Health and Safety Executive; and what consideration he has given to making a formal statement banning such arrangements.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Employment Department group policy on partners working with each other is set out in the ED group personnel handbook. This broadly ensures that partners should not have line management responsibilities, should not have a disciplinary role and should not act directly over the other in financial matters.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff were made redundant following market testing in the Health and Safety Executive in 1993–94.

Mr. Oppenheim: None.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to reduce the Health and Safety Executive front-line services; and what is the consequence for 1995–96 and 1996–97 of the recent public expenditure round for the Health and Safety Executive front-line services in area offices.

Mr. Oppenheim: Following the reduction in its financial provision, I have asked the Health and Safety Commission to safeguard the front-line work of the executive, including inspection, guidance, advice and enforcement, by building on the executive's record of continuing efficiency improvements.

The commission will be announcing details of its planned deployment of resources in its plan of work for 1995–96, due to be published in the early summer.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the employees of the Health and Safety Executive have had their child care costs met by the executive; what is the grade of staff involved; and on what basis this assistance is made available.

Mr. Oppenheim: No Health and Safety Executive staff have their child care costs full met by the executive. Currently, a total of 25 people have a place at one of HSE's two workplace nurseries on Merseyside at a subsidy of £45 per week—pro rata for part-time use—which is around 50 per cent. of the full weekly cost.

The grades involved are two grade 7s, two senior information officers, one inspector, two higher executive officers, one scientific officer, five executive officers, 11 administrative officers and one administrative assistant. Additionally, there are currently 14 holiday play schemes at various locations throughout the country which assist parents with child care during school holidays. The numbers of staff assisted, their grades and the degree to which they are financially assisted varies from scheme to scheme but, in the main, the HSE's contribution is in the form of some basis set-up and running costs depending on the scheme.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Health and Safety Executive has been seeking volunteers for early retirement from factory inspectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive has been seeking volunteers for early retirement from a wide range of senior staff within the HSE, including at principal inspector level and above. This exercise, which is resulting in the early retirement of 85 staff in March 1995, was caused by the need to restructure some parts of the HSE in order to allow the HSE to recruit more inspectors for front-line inspection.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what resources were available to the field consultant group of the Health and Safety Executive, (a) in 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: The following staffing resources were available to the field consultant groups of the Health and Safety Executive in 1993–94 and 1994–95.

	As at 31 March 1994	As at 1 November 1994
Specialist inspector grades	99.50	96.75
Scientific grades	28.50	29.50
Total	128.00	126.25

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors in the area offices of the Health and Safety Executive are suffering from work-related stress; and whether the Health and Safety Executive has a contingency budget for legal claims against the executive for any of its staff suffering work-related stress.

Mr. Oppenheim: It is not possible to say how many factory inspectors are under stress currently, or whether that is causing them suffering. It is also very difficult to separate work-related stress from non-work-related stress or to measure it accurately because stress-related illness can manifest itself in a variety of ways. There is no Health and Safety Executive budget for claims of this kind.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the cost of the regional tier of field management in the field operations division of the Health and Safety Executive in 1995-96.

Mr. Oppenheim: The regional tier of field management in the field operations division of the Health and Safety Executive in 1995-96 is expected to be unchanged from that in the current year. The 1995–96 payroll cost of the regional directors, their support managers and secretarial services is £496,000.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many relatives of existing employed staff have been recruited at Health and Safety Executive headquarters, Bootle; and whether such recruitments are within civil service personnel rules.

Mr. Oppenheim: No statistics are kept on the recruitment of relatives within Health and Safety Executive headquarters, Bootle. All recruitment meet civil service Order in Council regulations about fair and open recruitment.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current hourly rate of security and messengerial staff at the Health and Safety Executive headquarters at Bootle, Merseyside.

Mr. Oppenheim: The security staff at the Health and Safety Executive headquarters at Bootle are employed by a private contractor, and I am unaware of their wage rates.

The current hourly rate for messengerial staff employed at HSE HQ at Bootle is £4.71 per hour.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further contracted-out operations the Health and Safety Executive plans in 1994–95.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive has no further contracted out operations planned for the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what legal provisions allow the Health and Safety Executive to exclude premises from its future inspection programmes; what classes of premises are being excluded; and what procedures are in place to allow challenges to this practice.

Mr. Oppenheim: There are no legal provisions concerning the exclusion by the Health and Safety Executive of premises from its future inspection programmes.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps his Department intends to take to inform speakers of Bengali, Gujerati, Hindi, Punjabi and Urdu of the availability of the Health and Safety Executive leaflet "Your Health and Safety-a guide for workers";

(2) what steps his Department intends to take to publicise the availability of the Health and Safety Executive leaflet "Your Health and Safety—a guide for workers".

Mr. Oppenheim: This leaflet was published in English and five Asian languages in November 1994. The Health and Safety Executive initially distributed a package including an advertising poster and copies of the leaflet in each language to around 3,000 organisations including community centres, citizens advice bureaux, legal advice centres and ethnic minority libraries. Copies of the leaflet were sent, with a press release, to the ethnic minority press and all local radio stations broadcasting in ethnic minority languages. The leaflets are available free of charge from HSE books. Demand so far has been high: over 180,000 copies of the leaflet have now been distributed.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what commercial involvement Ernst and Young has with the information technology division of the Health and Safety Executive; and what steps have been taken by him or by the commission to avoid conflicts of interest in the case of commissioners who have other dealings with Ernst and Young.

Mr. Oppenheim: Ernst and Young is nearing the end of an assignment to assist the in-house bid for the market test of the Health and Safety Executive's information technology services. Their appointment followed a competitive tendering exercise in which four consultancy firms submitted tenders and were interviewed by a panel. To avoid any conflicts of interest, tenderers were required to provide CVs of staff who would be involved in the work. The decision to use Ernst and Young was taken by the executive in accordance with civil service rules. The commission was not involved in the decision.

Construction Regulations

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Construction (Designed Management) Regulations and approved code of practice will be approved; when they were submitted to him; and what factors were responsible for the length of the interval.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Construction (Design and Management) Regulations 1994 were signed on 19 December 1994 and consent given to the code of practice, which was approved by the Health and Safety Commission on 3 January 1995. Both were submitted to the then Minister of State on 18 March 1994 and passed to me following the Cabinet changes on 20 July 1994.

Making new regulations is an important ministerial responsibility. It was necessary to be absolutely certain that this complex package of regulations was as fair and reasonable as possible and this inevitably took time.

Job Advertisements (European Commission)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about advertisements for United Kingdom-based European Commission jobs, with particular reference to any restrictions on the nationality of applicants.

Mr. Oppenheim: The wording of advertisements for jobs with the European Commission is a matter for the Commission.

Offshore Safety Division

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which trade union representatives the contracted-out administrative support at the offshore safety division office at Norwich; and what is the average hourly wage rate (a) at the offshore safety division office at Norwich and (b) other area Health and Safety Executive offices.

Mr. Oppenheim: The administrative support staff at the offshore safety division office in Norwich are employed by Manpower plc, and I am unaware of either their wage rates or trade union representation.

The average hourly rate for administrative staff employed at Health and Safety Executive offices is £4.47 per hour—excluding additional allowances paid to staff working in the London area.

Health and Safety Commission

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the meetings of the Health and Safety Commission and its industrial advisory committees will be open to the press and public under the open government initiative.

Mr. Oppenheim: Under the code of practice on access to government information and the Environmental Information Regulations 1992 the Health and Safety Commission and its advisory committees will normally release information about the decisions it has taken and the facts and analyses behind those decisions, subject to the exempted categories of information in the code and regulations. The commission believes that to open its meetings to the press and public would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion, as is recognised in the code and the regulations.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many copies of "Fraud, Theft and Impropriety" have been issued; and if all members of the Health and Safety Commission have received a copy.

Mr. Oppenheim: The leaflet "Fraud, Theft and Impropriety" was issued on a ratio of one copy for each member of the Health and Safety Executive's staff. The members of the Health and Safety Commission were not issued with this leaflet.

Social Charter

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in chronological order, all regulations and directives arising from article 118A of the amended treaty of Rome, stating in each case the title and objective, the number as published in the Official Journal of the European Community and the relevant United Kingdom Act and regulation, where applicable; and if each instrument is part of the work programme envisaged by the social charter, adopted by some member states in 1989.

Miss Widdecombe: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Fishermen (Redundancies)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fishermen have been made redundant as a result of the existing decommissioning scheme offered by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is not available.

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is given in the following table:

Women in the Employment Department group

Grade level	April 1991	April 1992	April 1993	April 1994
Grade 3	2	2	1	2
Grade 7	128	160	182	197
EO	9,756	11,711	11,792	10,322
AO	20,401	23,718	23,925	23,424
AA	2,241	2,422	2,366	1,902
Total women in ED group	36,879	42,344	42,340	38,786

Labour Statistics

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were (a) the hours worked per week, (b) the number of full-time workers and (c) the number of part-time workers in each year since 1979.

Mr. Oppenheim: The available information from the labour force survey is given in the following table. There are no comparable figures before 1983.

Total actual weekly hours of work, and full and part-time classification of all employees and self-employed Great Britain

Quarter	Total actual hours worked per week (millions)	Number in full time employment (thousands)	Number in part time employment (thousands)
Not seasonally adjusted

Social Fund

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many schemes have been approved and at what total value in pound sterling for each of the member states of the European Union and for Wales and Scotland under objective 4 of the European social fund since its inception; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The current objective 4 of the European social fund was created by the structural fund regulations passed in July 1993. Plans for implementing it in eight member states were provisionally approved by the Commission in November 1994. It is not possible to say how many schemes other member states have approved.

As far as the United Kingdom is concerned, no schemes have been approved under objective 4. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by the then Minister of State on 25 January 1994, Official Report, column 223.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Diary Farmers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the approximate average net profits for dairy farmers were in each year since 1985.

Mr. Jack: Information on incomes of full-time dairy farms and other farm types is collected in the farm business survey and published each year in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom". The latest edition, "Farm Incomes in United Kingdom 1992–93", shows estimates of several different measures of income for dairy farms in 1991–92 and 1992–93. Definitions of these income measures are contained in appendix 2.

To illustrate longer-term trends in incomes, index series are also given for net farm income, occupier's net income and cash income back to 1986–87—table 1.1 and appendix 1, tables 1 and 2—the earliest year for which data are available on a consistent basis.

"Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1993–94" will be published in spring.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what are the requirements for IACS applications in England and Wales in 1995.

Mr. Jack: I have consulted closely with the industry on the detail and the timing of the IACS arrangements for 1995 to ensure that they are kept as straightforward as possible.

I am pleased to be able to announce that, as a result of pressing strongly for a UK deadline later than 31 March 1995 to meet farmers' needs, we will be applying the latest possible date of 15 May.

The IACS explanatory booklet and forms will be issued in March. The documentation is designed to be as helpful and as easy to follow as possible given the complex nature of the rules.

I recognise that farmers will want to do as much as they can in advance to prepare for IACS. The mapping and field data requirements set out in the 1994 guidance note on mapping and field data requirements will continue to apply in 1995.

No maps will be required where applications relate only to forage area. Nor will they be required for arable area, provided the land was registered as eligible for future arable payments in 1993 or 1994 and has not changed significantly since then. Applicants will need to supply a single national grid reference number for each field and the Ordnance Survey map sheet reference in order to comply with the basic requirements of the IACS rules. Fields which have been permanently amalgamated, divided or which are on more than one map sheet must have a single field number for 1995.

Fields which are on more than one map sheet must, from 1995, be allocated a new number based on the centre point of the whole field. If farmers obtained new numbers on a different basis in 1994, they do not need to provide another number this year. Estimates of area will continue to be accepted, but if areas are found to be over-declared, we have no option but to apply the strict penalties set out in the rules.

I strongly urge farmers to obtain any necessary maps, field numbers and area measurements from the Ordnance Survey or other professional advisers as soon as possible and not leave this to the last minute, otherwise they risk missing the application deadline.

Melatonin

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures are in place to monitor and control the use of melatonin in the breeding of lambs.

Mrs. Browning: One marketing authorisation has been issued for the use of melatonin in the breeding of lambs. This product is available on prescription only and must be used under the direction of a veterinary surgeon. Any suspected adverse reactions to the use of medicinal products should be reported to the Veterinary Medicines Directorate. The state veterinary service is responsible for the enforcement of legislation which protects the welfare of the lambs and their mothers.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what survey his Department has conducted into external research; and what research his Department has conducted into (a) the administering of melatonin to ewes, (b) the breeding cycles of ewes artificially induced and (c) the risks to humans of consumption of sheep meat from flocks in which melatonin is used to control artificially the breeding cycles of ewes.

Mrs. Browning: No research is currently being funded by MAFF into the use of melatonin in the breeding of lambs. However, a three-year project investigating the use of melatonin and light treatment as a new method of producing autumn lambs, was funded in 1986. Before any veterinary medicinal product is authorised to be placed on the market in the United Kingdom, it is carefully assessed by the licensing authority, which consults independent scientists, against the statutory criteria of safety—including to the animal, the operator and the consumer of meat and meat products—quality and efficacy. This applies to medicinal products containing melatonin.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions have been pursued against sheep breeders for the conditions under which they have reared winter lambs born as a result of the administering of melatonin to their mothers in each of the past three years.

Mrs. Browning: The information requested is not available.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistics his Department compiles on the use of melatonin in the breeding of lambs.

Mrs. Browning: The use of a medicinal product, once authorised, is a matter for the marketplace to determine and not for the licensing authority. My Department therefore compiles no statistics on the use of melatonin in the breeding of lambs.

Lambs

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what procedures are in place to monitor and control the conditions under which winter lambs are reared.

Mrs. Browning: The Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 makes it an offence to cause unnecessary pain or unnecessary distress to any livestock on agricultural land. Subordinate legislation and the associated welfare code lay down more detailed requirements for the welfare of sheep. The state veterinary service is responsible for the enforcement of these provisions.

Agricultural Council

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 23 January.

Mr. Waldegrave: As I had signalled beforehand, I took the opportunity of this Council to explain the public concern about the transport of farm animals and the conditions in which calves are reared for veal in some member states. I stressed my determination to see that the law requiring freedom of trade is upheld. But I also emphasised the urgent need for the Community as a whole to recognise these concerns, which are being expressed widely, not just in the United Kingdom, and to take effective measures as soon as possible to improve the standards for the welfare of farm animals.

I am glad to say that a considerable number of Council members agreed with British concerns. Five Ministers pointed out that, like the UK, they had already banned the use of veal crates. There was wide support for, and no dissent from, my proposal that the review of the directive, planned for 1997, that allows the use of this method should be brought forward, the Agriculture Commissioner, Mr. Fischler, undertook to produce a report as soon as possible. All also agreed to make a determined effort to adopt rules on transport: this will be on the Council's agenda at its next meeting.

The only other substantive debate was on the Commission's proposals for adjusting the support system for sugar. I regretted that the Commission had not seized the opportunity to propose more radical changes. I urged that, in so far as sugar quotas might have to be cut to keep within the general agreement on tariffs and trade limits on subsidised exports, these cuts should be targeted on the surplus-producing member states. I also underlined the need to guarantee adequate supplies of raw sugar for the refining industry. The Council will return to these proposals at its next meeting.

I welcomed the appearance of the Commission's proposal creating a link between set-aside and arable land taken out of production for environmental and forestry purposes, and urged its speedy adoption.

DEFENCE

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by the Department or agency.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not held in the form requested and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Discipline (Armed Forces)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the circumstances in which a service man may find himself liable to disciplinary action when refusing drugs or vaccine in a theatre of war.

Mr. Soames: In operational circumstances where it is regarded as reasonable to issue an order for service personnel to receive drugs or vaccines to protect them against the threat of biological or chemical warfare agents, refusal of such a lawful order might render members of the armed forces liable to disciplinary action. The lawfulness of the order could be raised as an issue in the disciplinary proceedings, and the individual's rights would be taken into account. Any such case would turn on its own merits, including the fact that such vaccines and drugs could be life saving in operational circumstances.

Operation Granby

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to monitoring for health effects after administration of the drugs and vaccines administered to service men, either during or after Operation Granby, with particular reference to compounds that were unlicensed at the time of administration.

Mr. Soames: All aspects of the health of service personnel are monitored, in peace and war, as a matter of routine. During the Gulf war, routine monitoring did not detect any adverse effects to health which would warrant special additional monitoring either during, or after, Operation Granby.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to administering toxicology and virology tests to all those suffering from illness related to Operation Granby; and what was the reason for not doing so.

Mr. Soames: Individuals who believe that they are suffering from unexplained illnesses as a result of service in Operation Granby are offered a medical examination through my Department's Gulf assessment programme. The special tests employed on this programme are tailored to the particular requirements of each patient after considering the medical and occupational history, the reported symptoms and clinical signs found on examination. If indicated, these special tests can include toxicological and virology tests.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), of 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1179, if he will set out the reasons why the specific counter-measures adopted against potential biological warfare by British forces in Operation Granby in the Gulf war are classified.

Mr. Soames: Information relating to the specific counter-measures adopted against potential biological warfare by British forces in the Gulf war could be useful to terrorists and potentially hostile intelligence services. Its continued classification is to protect British troops who may face a biological warfare threat in the future.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to compiling a list of all recipients of the drugs or vaccines administered during Operation Granby, with particular reference to prescription-only medicines, with a view to recording them on the recipient's medical records; and what were the reasons for not doing so.

Mr. Soames: Standard peacetime procedures involve records of vaccines and prescribed medication being kept on every individual's service medical documents. Under operational conditions, individual service medical records are not held locally for logistic reasons, and a field medical documentation system is invoked. During Operation Granby, vaccinations or prescribed medications are entered on a nominal roll for later transfer to individual records. Given the repaid repatriation and demobilisation of personnel at the end of the conflict, it is likely that some individual medical records were not fully annotated. As a result, no reliable comprehensive list of recipients could be now compiled.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from whom and by what means plague vaccine, batch No. 10H03A, was obtained.

Mr. Soames: Details of specific medical counter-measures employed by British forces against potential biological warfare threat during Operation Granby remain classified.

Nerve Agent Immobilised Enzyme Alarm Detector

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of whether NAIAD can be triggered by the toxic compound given off from jet engines.

Mr. Soames: Nerve agent immobilised enzyme alarm and detector is designed to be used in conditions where it would not normally be in close proximity to jet engines. Nevertheless, NAIAD was extensively evaluated against a wide range of aircraft engine effluent during acceptance tests for military use. Out of the 18 aircraft type evaluated, in only one case was alarm condition attained. It follows that, although NAIAD is not commonly triggered by compounds emitted from jet engines, circumstances might arise in which this could happen.

Electro-shock Batons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the inclusion of electro shock-batons which formed part of the Al-Yamamah defence deal was known to Ministers or civil servants.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 17 January 1995, Official Report, column 452.

Defence Housing Executive

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the salary and length of contract of the new chief executive of the defence housing executive; and what is the estimated cost of establishing the defence housing executive.

Mr. Soames: Arrangements for the appointment of the chief executive have yet to be finalised. It is not possible to apportion costs between the establishment of the defence housing executive and the work undertaken previously to establish a housing trust.

Married Quarters Estate

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the individuals and companies who have been employed as paid consultants by his Department to advise on the management of the married quarters estate during the last three years.

Mr. Soames: Since January 1992, the following consultants have provided my Department with advice on the future arrangements for the services' married quarters estate:

Firm	Subject
Ashurst Morris Crisp Trowers and Hamlins (and Counsel) Allen and Overy Government Property Lawyers	Legal
Macklay Murray and Spens Henderson Boyd and Jackson Shepherd and Wedderburn Robson Mclean	Legal (Scotland)
Coopers and Lybrand Price Waterhouse NatWest Markets UBS	Business and Finance

Recruitment and Assessment Service	Recruitment
Government Actuary's Department	Pensions
Major General J.F.J. Johnston CB CBE (Retd)	Chairman designate of Housing Trust

Crown Housing Trust

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 451, if the chief executive of the Crown housing trust has or will be, receiving the £20,000 bonus which is linked to performance.

Mr. Soames: The bonus is payable in April this year on the anniversary of the chief executive designate's appointment. The final amount will, however, depend on performance over the year.

Royal Navy Armaments Depot, Trecwn

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to announce the successful tenderer for RNAD Trecwn.

Mr. Soames: It is too early to say when a successful tenderer will be announced.

Tremoram

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to release documents on work on the chemical tremoram; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [holding answer Tuesday 17 January 1995]: These records will be reviewed in accordance with the terms of the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967. If release does not prejudice the Government's undertaking not to aid the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, they will be released in due course.

Documents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will release the reference numbers and title of all documents relating to works at Nancekuke that are more than 30 years old but have not been released for public inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [holding answer Tuesday 17 January 1995]: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out his reasons for not releasing the document reference 195/155956, which refers to work undertaken more than 30 years ago.

Mr. Soames [holding answer Tuesday 17 January 1995]: There is no document with this reference. W0195/15956, however, is closed for reasons of continuing sensitivity. The release of the report would enable others to acquire details of weapons technology that would be contrary to our commitment of non-proliferation.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of vacant dwellings currently owned by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [holding answer Tuesday 17 January 1995]: As at 31 December, my Department owned 12,408 vacant dwellings in the following categories:

	Number
Service married quarters	9,992
Former married quarters in the process of sale	2,160
MOD civilian houses	218
Former civilian houses in the process of sale	38

Discussions are currently taking place with the Housing Corporation on an enhanced programme of short-term leasing to housing associations for married quarters which are temporarily surplus to our requirements. However, the majority of the vacant service married quarters are not surplus but are undergoing or awaiting major maintenance, held for future deployments, or form part of the management margin needed to ensure that accommodation is available for entitled service families.

Of the vacant civilian houses, 71 are leased properties awaiting return to Dumbarton district council, 97 are houses recently taken over from the United States air force awaiting occupation by Ministry of Defence police and the remainder are mainly properties in secure areas which cannot be sold for security or safeguarding reasons.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the absenteeism rate for (a) his Department, (b) the Historic Royal Palaces agency and (c) the Royal Parks agency in each year since 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The absenteeism—sick absence—rate for the Department of National Heritage since it was created in April 1992, is shown below. The information for the two executive agencies, Historic Royal Palaces and Royal Parks, is not held centrally and is unavailable in the format requested. When the information is provided we will write to the hon. Member and arrange for copies of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

	Number of days absent	Total number of staff
1993	516	301
1994	459	362

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows. The Department of National Heritage was created on 13 April 1992 and the Royal Parks agency on 1 April 1993. While Historic Royal Palaces has been an executive agency since 2 October 1989, a breakdown of staffing figures in the format requested is not available for 1991.

Sports Council

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how provision for disabled people will be included in the three new policy areas chosen for emphasis by the Sports Council GB.

Mr. Dorrell: Under the proposals announced by the Minister with responsibility for sport on 8 July 1994, Official Report, columns 584–92, I shall expect the Sports Council, and its successors, to give full weight to the needs of sport for able-bodied people and people with disabilities in spending its grant in aid from the Government. We have also asked the Sports Council to consider particularly the needs of those with physical or other disabilities in its distribution of national lottery funds.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Research and Development

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was Government expenditure on research and development, civil and defence, for each of the last 10 years as a percentage of gross domestic product; and what were the equivalent figures for France, Germany, America and Japan.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The information requested is shown in the table.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. David Hunt: Officials receive representations about a wide variety of matters, but the information requested is not collected.

Mr. Campbell Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. David Hunt: Ministers receive numerous representations about a wide variety of matters, but the information is not collected.

TRANSPORT

Coventry Airport

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of safety at Coventry airport.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority's aerodrome standards department is responsible for ensuring that United Kingdom civil aerodromes meet prescribed safety standards. I have therefore asked the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to write to the hon. Member.

Rail Safety

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many rail passengers were killed or injured (i) by the opening or closing of carriage doors, falling through open doors or entering or alighting from trains and (ii) during train movement for each of the last five years (a) over the whole rail network, (b) in the Network SouthEast region, (c) in mark I electrical multiple unit slam door rolling stock in the Network SouthEast region and (d) in Networker 465 rolling stock in the Network SouthEast region.

Mr. Watts: The table gives the details requested of passenger injuries for all railways in Great Britain since 1989.

The following table gives details for Network SouthEast and covers the period from its creation in 1992 to its reorganisation in March 1994, following the restructuring of the railway industry.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to press British Rail to implement the recommendation of the Cannon street rail accident inquiry that class 415 EMUs should be replaced by new Networker units as quickly as possible; when he estimates that this process will be completed; and what plans he has to press British Rail to replace other mark I EMUs and against what time scale.

Mr. Watts: I understand that the last class 415 EMU will be withdrawn from the Kent suburban fleet on 13 April 1995, along with classes 413 and 416.

The replacement and deployment of rolling stock, and the appropriate timing of an order, is a decision for BR. However, I understand BR's view is that all remaining "mark I" rolling stock on south eastern is likely to need replacement during 1999.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much it costs to strengthen a single mark I slam door railway carriage to the standard required by HM railways inspectorate in relation to recommendation 55 of the Hidden investigation into the Clapham Junction railway accident.

Mr. Watts: British Rail's estimate of the cost of strengthening mark I rolling stock is around £300,000 per coach.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many successful prosecutions for contravention of the (a) showman's vehicle and (b) agricultural vehicle excise duty concessions have taken place in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: These figures are not collected separately by the Department.

Transport and Pollution

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he has made to the recommendations of the Royal Commission report on transport and pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Government have welcomed the royal commission's report as a valuable contribution to the debate about transport and the environment. We are now studying the report's conclusions and recommendations and considering how we should respond.

Integrated Regional Offices

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities which are administered by the integrated regional offices and, for each integrated regional office, the estimated annual expenditure on each of these responsibilities;

(2) if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities on which integrated regional offices are responsible for preparing, advising on or implementing regional policy;

(3) if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities on which the integrated regional offices are required to advise him on the allocation of resources and, for each integrated regional office, the annual expenditure on each programme.

Mr. Norris: The Government offices for the regions play an important role in advising Ministers on the regional implementation of national transport policies, covering all modes of transport. They advise on local authority transport programmes and policies and on the allocation of resources for local transport capital expenditure, including transport supplementary grant, public transport facilities grant—under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968—Industrial Development Act grant and associated credit approvals.

The Government offices liaise with the Highways Agency on the trunk road programme and contribute to advice to Ministers on the programme's content and progress. They also provide advice to Ministers on the transport aspects of programmes administered by other Departments.

Local transport capital expenditure in 1993–94, the last complete financial year, is shown in the table.

The total running cost to the Department of the Government Offices for the current financial year is forecast to be as follows:

	£ million
Eastern	0.247
East Midlands	0.218
London	2.462
Merseyside	0.079
North East[1]	0.443
North West	0.180
South East	0.430
South West	0.260
West Midlands	0.227
Yorkshire and Humberside	0.230
Total	4.784

[1] The figure for the Government office for the north east includes running costs incurred in carrying out the Secretary of State's role in confirming orders promoted by local authorities under the Highways Act 1980 and for highways under the Acquisition of Land Act 1981, a national activity carried out for all regions.

Bids for support are considered competitively on merit. There are no set allocations for regions, and funding will fluctuate from year to year according to need and progress on major schemes

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Fishing Industry (Accidents)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were disabled as a result of accidents at work in the sea fishing industry in the years 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Norris: This information is not available.

Motorways (Coaches)

Mrs. Gillian: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a decision on the proposal to ban coaches from the outside lanes of motorways with three or more lanes.

Mr. Norris: I have today laid regulations implementing such a ban with effect from 1 January 1996. The ban will be for a trial period and will be reviewed when two years' accident data are available.

EDUCATION

Liverpool Education Authority

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if Liverpool education authority spent all its standard spending assessment for education in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Robin Squire: The latest data on provisional outturn expenditure indicate that Liverpool city council's education expenditure was some 3.6 per cent. less than its education standard spending assessment for 1993–94. But education SSAs are not prescriptive and each council is free to determine its spending priorities between and within services.

Schools, Wolverhampton

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of a secondary school place in a grant-maintained school in Wolverhampton in 1993–94; and what is the estimated cost in 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information relating to the cost of secondary school places in grant-maintained schools in Wolverhampton for the years in question is held by the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the agency to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was (a) the total cost of the assisted-places scheme at Wolverhampton grammar school and (b) the average cost per pupil in 1993–94; and what is the estimated cost in 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total cost of the scheme at Wolverhampton grammar school for the academic year 1993–94 was £792,715 and the average cost per pupil was £3,109. The estimated cost of the scheme for the academic year 1994–95 is £863,125 and the average cost per pupil is expected to be in the region of £3,230.

Computers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures she is taking to ensure that all pupils gain skills in using computer keyboards, word processing and spreadsheet software and information networks such as the Internet.

Mr. Forth: The Government are supporting the development of pupils' information technology skills through the inclusion of IT capability in the national curriculum; through a £187 million programme of grants for education support and training; and through the work of the National Council for Educational Technology. My right hon. Friend announced on 11 January an initiative on information super-highways for education, which will begin with a major consultation exercise in the spring.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will publish for (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom, for the last three available years, the number of full-time students in (i) further education, (ii) higher education and (iii) further and higher education in total, indicating the percentage of women in each case.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is shown:

Education Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has had from the North West Regional Association for Education Authorities in regard to the standing spending assessments and capping limits for its constituent authorities; what reply she has sent; what action she is taking; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from the North West Regional Association of Education Authorities. I have arranged for copies of the correspondence and my reply to be placed in the Library.

National Youth Agency

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the amount of grant given to the National Youth Agency for each year since 1991 and the estimated grant for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98.

Mr. Boswell: The grant paid or allocated to the National Youth Agency in the period 1991–92 to 1995–96 is as follows:

	£ million
1991–92	1.840
1992–93	1.495
1993–94	1.687
1994–95	1.716
1995–96	1.655

Funding for 1996–97 and future years will be reviewed as part of the annual public expenditure survey and in the light of the outcome of the policy review of the agency.

Proposed School Closures

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals she is considering from Nottinghamshire county council for the closure or merger of schools; what schools are involved; and when she received these proposals.

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows the proposals, published by Nottinghamshire county council, under section 12 of the Education Act 1980, to cease to maintain schools. These are currently under consideration by the Department.

Proposals	Date received by the Department
Padstow comprehensive	1 July 1994
Releigh Infant's School	10 November 1994
Windley Junior School	10 November 1994
Thomas Magnus VC Upper School	5 December 1994
Magdalene CE VC High School	5 December 1994
Lilley and Stone VC Upper School	5 December 1994
Sconce Hill High School	5 December 1994

The Department is also considering associated proposals from Nottinghamshire county council to establish a new primary school on the site of Windley junior school.

The governing bodies of Thomas Magnus school and Lilley and Stone school have published proposals, under section 13 of the Education Act 1980, to establish new 11 to 18 schools on the sites of Thomas Magnus school and Lilley and Stone school. These proposals relate to the county council's closure proposals. Padstow comprehensive school has submitted an application for grant-maintained status which will be determined with the closure proposal.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which she has knowledge any civil servants in her Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months she or any of her Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many parents voted (a) in favour and (b) against in all ballots for grant-maintained status in those schools currently operating as grant maintained.

Mr. Robin Squire: In ballots at schools in England which are currently grant maintained, 450,819 parents voted in favour and 145,005 voted against.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made across Government Departments towards meeting the energy saving targets given in "Climate Change: the UK Programme".

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer the hon. Member to tables one to three following chapter five of "This Common Inheritance: The Third Year Report," column 2549. Further data will be published shortly.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what attempt will be made by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to recover the costs of cleaning up the uranium dumped at the Chelveston farm in Northamptonshire from those responsible for the radioactive pollution of the area;

(2) if he will ask Her Majesty's chief inspector of pollution to establish an investigation into the fly tipping of uranium at a farm in Chelveston, Northamptonshire; and if he will make it his policy to publish the report of such an investigation.

Mr. Atkins: The scrap metal containing uranium found on land at Poplar farm, Caldecott, Northamptonshire is of unknown origin. Investigations are continuing to try and trace the source of the material and those involved in its movement. As the results of this investigation may form the basis of a prosecution under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993, detailed information will not be published until any such enforcement action is completed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The possibility of recovering costs of waste removal and clean up of the site will also be fully investigated.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the process and timetable for the investigation of the Drigg low-level radioactive waste disposal site by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer given Thursday 19 January 1995]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has already thoroughly investigated allegations made by Greenpeace about Drigg, following its illegal entry to the site and has confirmed that there has been no breach of the site's certificate of authorisation. The certificate of authorisation contains conditions and limits which impose specific requirements on the company, relating to the type of waste disposed of, the method of disposal and the radioactive content of disposals made. HMIP is satisfied that operations at the site properly protect the public.

With regard to the more general question of the disposal of radioactive waste at landfill sites, the Government's consultation document "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Preliminary Conclusions", published on 5 August, proposed that there may be advantage in encouraging waste producers to make greater use of such controlled burial. This form of disposal is already used by major hospitals and universities and some sections of the nuclear industry for their low-level waste, and the proposals do not involve any deregulation. Encouraging greater use of controlled burial would help to relieve pressure on capacity at Drigg.

However, this remains only a proposal, and there are no plans in relation to specific sites. The consultation document invited views on the subject, and these are currently receiving careful consideration. A statement of future policy will be made in due course.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the effect of low-level radioactive waste dumping in landfill sites on house prices in the vicinity of authorised sites.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities submitting unsuccessful bids for single regeneration budget moneys alleging that they were encouraged to believe that their bids would succeed in discussions with the relevant regional office.

Mr. Curry: There have been five such representations from local authorities.

Waste Management Licensing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to conclude his consideration of the consultation on exemptions from waste management licensing for the recovery of scrap metal and the dismantling of waste motor vehicles; when he proposes to publish the new guidance and the new regulations; how many responses he received to the consultation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We have received 115 direct responses to the consultation paper published on 8 November 1994 proposing exemptions from waste management licensing for the recovery of scrap metal and the dismantling of waste motor vehicles. Some respondents also requested Members of Parliament to make representations on their behalf. Our aim is to conclude our consideration of all these responses and to lay the regulations providing any exemptions from licensing within the next three weeks. Our guidance is dependent on the terms of any exemptions provided and will be published as soon as possible after the regulations have been laid.

Right-to-buy Scheme

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants have bought their homes under the right-to-buy scheme; and how many subsequently sold their homes (a) in total and (b) in Stockport.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Between October 1980 and September 1994 over 1.2 million tenants of local authorities and new towns in England purchased their homes under the right-to-buy legislation. Of these, some 3,500 sales were to local authority tenants in Stockport metropolitan borough council.

Information on housing association sales at local authority level is not available; sales for the country as a whole are estimated to be almost 27,000.

Data on subsequent sales by former tenants are not collected by the Department.

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and, of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Sir Paul Beresford: The following information covers non-industrial staff in my Department, excluding PSA Services:

Grade	1991	1992	1993	1994
Grade 3	4	5	5	4
Grade 7	104	118	128	138

Home Renovation Grants

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his oral answer of 18 January, Official Report columns 696–97 to the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien), if he will list the number of home renovation grants not including disabled facilities or minor works grants approved in 1993.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Some 40,221 renovation grants were approved in 1993.

Local Authority Mortgages

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide additional resources to local authorities that wish to offer mortgages to tenants who wish to buy homes which have been designated as defective.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: There are no plans to make additional resources available to local authorities for this purpose. Local housing authorities receive a housing investment programme allocation each year. It is for each authority to decide how best to use this allocation to meet local housing needs.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has relating to the number of applications made by boarding houses and hotels for change of use to houses of multiple occupation or hostels since the relevant changes in the planning law.

Sir Paul Beresford: As planning applications are made to local planning authorities detailed information of this kind is not held centrally.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has considered for funding the Energy Saving Trust after the gas market has been deregulated.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The finances of the Energy Saving Trust are properly a matter for the trust, which is an independent company. However, the Government are currently considering a range of options for funding the trust and the schemes it promotes, including the involvement of private sector finance and input from the energy consumer.

National Parks (Quarries)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) working and (b) disused quarries there are in each of the national parks.

Sir Paul Beresford: Separate figures are not available for working and disused quarries. The table shows numbers of sites for surface mineral workings—"quarries"—in each of the national parks in England and Wales as of 1988, taken from surveys carried out for the Department of the Environment and for the Welsh Office. Similar statistics for national parks in England for 1994 will be available later this year in the results of an updated survey.

National park	Number of surface mineral workings
Brecon Beacons	27
Dartmoor	9
Exmoor	Nil
Lake District	20
North York Moors	21
Northumberland	5
Peak District	121

Air Quality Report

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria underlay the decision to exclude the contribution of radioactive particulate material and radioactive gases, including krypton, from the report "Air Quality: Meeting the Challenge".

Mr. Atkins: "Air Quality: Meeting the Challenge" details the Government's strategic policies for improving air quality. It sets out a new framework for setting and achieving air quality targets and standards for the nine toxic pollutants of most concern. Radiotoxides are adequately addressed elsewhere.

Urban Waste Water Directive

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on what date he supplied the European Commission with a list of less-sensitive areas and copies of studies of them carried out in respect of such areas under article six of the urban waste directive;

(2) what plans he has to request an extension of time from the European Commission in respect of listing and forwarding copies of studies of less-sensitive areas under article six of the urban waste water directive;

(3) when he submitted to the European Commission proposals under article 8(5) of the urban waste water directive listing the areas subject to the proposals and the basis of those proposals;

(4) what information he has provided to the European Commission on its implementation programme as required by article 17(2) of the urban waste water directive indicating the outline and nature of the information provided; and what extension of time for providing the information was requested.

Mr. Atkins: A list of the less-sensitive areas—known as high natural dispersion areas in the United Kingdom—identified under the directive was sent to the European Commission on 24 May 1994. Under the terms of the directive, comprehensive studies must be carried out following identification of the areas, before a discharge consent can be given for a minimum of primary treatment. The studies will be carried out in time for relevant discharge consents to be given for the discharges concerned before the end of the years 2000 or 2005, whichever of the directive's implementation dates applies to each affected discharge. The question of applying for an extension of time does not arise.

Where relevant, proposals for applying article 8(5) of the directive will be made to the Commission after comprehensive studies have been completed and before the relevant implementation deadline. Such proposals will be made only where it can be demonstrated that no environmental benefit will accrue from the provision of a higher level of treatment than the requirements of article 6(2).

Information required by article 17(2) of the directive was provided to the Commission on 25 November 1994 without application for an extension of time for its provision. The information given was that required by the Commission decision of 28 July 1993—93/481/EEC; OJ No L 226, 28.7.1993, p.23. A copy of the "Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive—UK Article 17 Report" has been placed in the Library of the House.

Housing Stock Transfers

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of those local authorities which have completed voluntary transfer of their housing stock, and the date on which the transfer was completed.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Since 1988, 35 local authorities have transferred a total of 156,739 homes through large scale voluntary transfer. These authorities are listed, together with the dates on which they completed transfer.

Integrated Regional Offices

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities on which the integrated regional offices are required to advise him on the allocation of resources and, for each integrated regional office, the annual expenditure on each programme.

Sir Paul Beresford: In 1993–94 the Department of the Environment's regional offices advised Ministers on the programmes shown in the table. The Department of the Environment's regional offices became part of the Government offices for the regions in April 1994.

[2] Transferred to English Partnerships from April 1994.

[3] ERDF payments, made on behalf of the European Community, include payments on projects which are the responsibility of other Government Departments.

[4] Figures for the urban programme, urban partnership fund (UPF) and Coalfield areas fund are not held centrally on a region by region basis. The Urban programme will be subsumed within the SRB from April 1995.

[5] Estate Action figures exclude resources for design improvement controlled experiment (DICE).

[6] City challenge figures include city challenge Housing Corporation expenditure in 1993–94 and exclude payments made in 1993–94 for expenditure actually incurred in 1992–93.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities which are administered by the integrated regional offices and, for each integrated regional office, the estimated annual expenditure on each of these responsibilities.

Sir Paul Beresford: On my right hon. Friend's behalf, the Government offices for the regions administer the single regeneration budget, housing and regeneration programmes, undertake certain planning and environment functions and provide the main local points of contact between the Department and local authorities. In 1994–95, the Government offices expect to spend the following sums in pursuit of these functions:

	£000s
Government Office for the North East	3,174
Government Office for the North West	4,682
Government Office for Yorkshire and Humberside	3,532
Government Office for Merseyside	2,086
Government Office for the West Midlands	3,547
Government Office for the East Midlands	2,579
Government Office for the Eastern Region	2,063
Government Office for the South West	2,143
Government Office for the South East	3,177
Government Office for London	4,785

The Department does not allocate running cost resources at the level of individual programmes or functions.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of staff working in each integrated regional office; and in each integrated regional office, what is the total annual cost of their employment.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is shown in the table.

Government office	Total number of staff (as at December 1994)	Total annual cost of staff employed £ million
North East	289	6.2
North West	383	8.4
Merseyside	157	3.5
Yorkshire and Humberside	340	6.9
West Midlands	360	7.5
East Midlands	264	5.5
Eastern	191	4.5
South West	234	5.2
South East	241	6.0
London	340	8.8

The total annual cost of staff employed is based on the forecast pay costs of each office in 1994–95.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities on which integrated regional offices are responsible for preparing, advising on or implementing regional policy.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government offices in the regions assist my Department in work on preparing and disseminating regional planning guidance, and on European regional development fund matters. They also advise bidders under the single regeneration budget on those bids of regional scale.

Green Ministers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times the Green Ministers met as a group during 1994.

Mr. Gummer: Green Ministers met twice as a group in 1994, in addition to fulfilling their continuing responsibilities to integrate environmental considerations into their own Department's strategies and policies.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of Duchy of Lancaster earlier today.

Dioxins

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if his Department has responded to the public review draft of the United States Environmental Protection Agency's report on dioxins.

Sir Paul Beresford: Yes. The Government have completed their initial study of the EPA's draft report on dioxins. My Department has summarised the results of the study in a factual and technical commentary that it has sent to the EPA.

The commentary concentrates on the problems of assessing exposure to dioxins. It deals particularly with those aspects of exposure assessment that have been the subject of considerable recent research and analysis in this country and the rest of Europe. We hope this additional perspective may contribute further depth to what is already a very substantial and important draft.

An expert review of recent scientific work on the health effects of dioxins—including work reported in the EPA draft—is being carried out for the Department of Health by the committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment. This review will not be completed for some months: it would, therefore, have been premature to comment in depth on those volumes of the EPA's draft that deal with the health effects of dioxins. Meanwhile, established research findings indicate that the dioxin levels to which the UK population is exposed do not, on the basis of the COT's current advice, present a threat to health.

A copy of the material my Department has sent to the EPA has today been placed in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dourine

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of dourine were reported in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Browning: No cases of dourine have ever been reported in this country.

Grubbing Out Grants

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial assistance is available from Her Majesty's Government or the European Commission for the grubbing out of (a) orchards and (b) vineyards.

Mr. Jack: Financial assistance is available for applicants who grub at least one hectare of culinary or dessert orchards. To qualify apple trees must be less than 20 years old, healthy, capable of bearing a full crop of fruit and planted at a density of more than 400 to the hectare. Grant rates are 5000 ecu—approximately £4,600—per hectare for total grubbing and 3500 ecu—approximately £3,200—per hectare for partial grubbing. The scheme closes on 31 January 1995.

There is no scheme of financial assistance for the grubbing out of United Kingdoms vineyards.

Fishing (Spanish Vessels)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the numbers of Spanish-owned vessels on the fishing register of each of the other EEC fishing nations.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry does not keep information on the composition of fishing vessel registers maintained by other member states.

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Jack: The information for MAFF, including its executive agencies, is as follows:

Grade	1991 Women	1991 Total staff	1991 Per cent. of total	1992 Women	1992 Total staff	1992 Per cent. of total	1993 Women	1993 Total staff	1993 Per cent. of total	1994 Women	1994 Total staff	1994 Per cent. of total

Notes:
1. All figures are based on 1 April and are for permanent non–industrials and exclude staff on loan or secondment to other Government Departments.
2. Figures for part–time staff in 1991 are counted as ½ units. Part–time staff from 1992 are counted by head count.

Equine Infectious Anaemia

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of equine infectious anaemia there have been in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Browning: There have been no recorded cases of equine infectious anaemia in this country since 1976.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of sheep scab there were in each year since 1990 and in each month for 1994.

Mrs. Browning: The total number of confirmed cases of sheep scab in England for the years 1990 to 1992 was as follows:

	Number
1990	82
1991	96
1992 (to 30 June)	63

The collation of official records on the number of outbreaks of sheep scab was discontinued after deregulation of compulsory controls in 1992.

Industry reports have indicated that sheep scab has been discovered in every county in Britain. A surveillance exercise during spring 1994 identified 177 batches of sheep suspected of having sheep scab from 869 visits to sheep sales and markets. These and other reports confirm that the disease is probably present in all parts of the country.

The Government announced on 17 May 1994 that they would conduct a publicity campaign and increase the official veterinary presence at sheep markets. To date, in Great Britain suspected sheep scab has been detected at only 14 of 1,982 market visits conducted since 1 September 1994. In total 189 animals have been withdrawn from sale and treated under the Welfare of Animals at Markets Order 1990, and a further 103 animals with suspected sheep scab were sent direct to slaughter.

A further surveillance exercise will be carried out this spring.

Generic Milk Production

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons generic milk production is excluded from the Milk Development Council.

Mr. Jack: With a levy-funded budget limited to £6.5 million a year, the Milk Development Council would not have sufficient resources to run expensive generic promotion campaigns while at the same time undertaking its principal function of sponsoring R and D on dairying. Generic promotion was not therefore among the tasks listed in the polling papers sent to all producers in Great Britain last year and on the basis of which they voted in favour of the establishment of a Milk Development Council.

Fishing (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to establish the origins of the 1,000 tonnes of fish reported as an extension of the Northern Irish fish entitlement as a result of the debate in the House of 18 January, Official Report, columns 771–822; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: As part of the swaps traditionally negotiated each year with other member states following the December Fisheries Council, the United Kingdom this year acquired 750 tonnes of Irish sea cod and 250 tonnes of Irish sea whiting from the Republic of Ireland.

Live Animal Imports

Sir Jerry Wiggin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his response to the recommendations in the recent Agriculture Select Committee report on health controls on live animal imports.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government have today laid before Parliament a Command Paper which details its response to the various recommendations in the Agriculture Select Committee report on health controls on live animal imports. This welcomes the Agriculture Select Committee's thorough examination of the health controls which operate for agricultural animals, birds and fish and details our intentions for implementing them. We are also pleased to note the Committee's general endorsement of our current health controls on imported livestock and their recognition that these controls enabled the lifting of routine internal border controls to take place on 1 January 1993 without appreciable increase in the risk of livestock disease entering the United Kingdom.

The Government also welcome the important contribution which the Committee's report has made to the discussion about future policy on rabies. We believe the changes which the Select Committee recommended would be premature before the eradication programme for rabies in the European Union is complete, and while the new import arrangements for traded cats and dogs in the UK, as well as the rules operating in Norway and Sweden which the Select Committee has taken as a model, are novel and unproven. The Government will, however, continue to monitor closely the performance of these new arrangements and the progress being made within the European Union towards the eradication of rabies.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what time his Ministry's vets reported the first animals loaded on the livestock trucks in respect of the first sailing carrying live farm animals from Shoreham to Dieppe; and at what time the last animals were unloaded and placed in a lairage in France.

Mrs. Browning: This first consignment on the Shoreham-Dieppe route was accompanied by Ministry staff from Shoreham port to the lairage at Dieppe. They reported that the convoy of livestock vehicles was at the dockside at 00.10 hours on 5 January. Loading was completed by 02.10 hours and the vessel left Shoreham at 02.30 hours, arriving at Dieppe at 12.50 hours. Unloading of animals at the lairage was completed at 13.25 hours—all timings are given in British time.

Fishing (Decommissioning)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many British fishing vessels he estimates will take up the additional £28 million decommissioning programme.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 January 1995]: The decommissioning scheme operates through a tendering system in order to obtain best value for money for the available funds. It is not therefore possible to say in advance how many bids will be approved. Details of the uptake of decommissioning in 1993 and 1994 were given in the reply to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) on 20 January 1995, Official Report, columns 736–37.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he has been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster today.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster today.

Combat 18

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what reports he has received from the Metropolitan police for proceedings to be considered under the Public Order Act 1986 against two men associated with Combat 18; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consult his counterpart in the United States of America to discuss whether invitations to readers of publications produced by Combat 18 in the United Kingdom to send information to Combat 18 via a PO box number for the Dixie Press in America about individuals to be harassed, intimidated or attacked, contravenes American law.

The Attorney-General: Neither I nor the Crown Prosecution Service has yet received a report from the Metropolitan police, whose investigation into Combat 18 continues. It is not possible to assess in advance of receipt of the police report what action or further inquiries may be appropriate.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Shipbuilding

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the size of the shipbuilding industry in Tyne and Wear in 1979; and what its size is now.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Comparable data for the years in question are not available. Employment in shipbuilding and ship repairing in Tyne and Wear in September 1981 was 18,257 and in September 1989 was 5,229. Since then employment has declined further with the contraction of the industry in Tyne and Wear.

Security Equipment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's policy on the export, or arrangement of sale, by British companies of electronic riot shields and electronic batons.

Mr. Needham: The export of certain security and paramilitary police goods is controlled. This includes portable anti-riot devices for administering an electric shock or an incapacitating substance. In considering applications for licences for the export of such equipment the DTI, together with advisers in other Government Departments, takes special care and considers very carefully the political and military implications of allowing consignments to go overseas. Particular attention is paid to proposed exports to countries with poor human rights records, where the equipment might be used for internal repression.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with BAe's Royal Ordnance division about the supply of electric shock batons to Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: None. The company has denied both publicly and to my officials that any such supply has taken place.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the occasions and the dates on which his Department (a) received information in respect of and (b) supported the export of electro-shock weapons to (i) China and (ii) Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 18 January 1995]: A number of allegations have been made: they have been followed-up by my officials. The companies involved have made public denials. I am not aware of any support given for the export of electro-shock weapons to these destinations.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what electro-shock equipment has been exported by (a) the Royal Ordnance, (b) British Aerospace or (c) any other British companies in the last 10 years.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 18 January 1995]: Controls exist on the export of portable anti-riot devices for administering an electric shock. Other equipment of this sort is not licensable under the Export of Goods (Control) Order. This question could be answered in respect of controlled equipment only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department is taking to pursue the Government's policy of preventing the export of equipment and weapons which can be used for torture.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 18 January 1995]: My Department gives careful consideration to applications for the export of weapons. In considering such proposals, special care is taken over the political and military implications of allowing consignments to go overseas. Particular attention is paid to countries with poor human rights records, where equipment might be used for internal repression. However, the list of seemingly innocuous equipment that can be used for the purposes of torture is endless and there is a real problem in controlling trade in legitimate goods which could be misused. The Government are willing to look at any tangible evidence of British companies knowingly involved in supplying materials and expertise for the purposes of repression.

Uranium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of reprocessed uranium have been exported under licence to the Russian Federation since 1991 for re-enrichment before return to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since 1991 there have been no exports of reprocessed uranium from the United Kingdom to the Russian Federation.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what applications have been made by British Nuclear Fuels or Nuclear Electric for import licences for enriched uranium purchased from companies in the Russian Federation or other members of the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Mr. Needham: As a general matter, applications for import licences are treated as commercially confidential.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what memoranda of understanding exist between the United Kingdom and the former Soviet Union which have been inherited by the Russian Federation providing for a framework agreement for the import of uranium hexafluoride from Russia for commercial use.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Before the former Soviet Union came to an end in December 1991, imports of uranium hexafluoride were made on a purely commercial basis. None of the Government's obligations in the field of nuclear non-proliferation required an inter-governmental memorandum of understanding.

Nuclear Industry (Accident Liability)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria were used in setting the level of nuclear industry's liability in the event of a nuclear accident at £140 million; and when he next intends to review this level of liability.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The figure of £140 million is in line with the recommendation of the steering committee for nuclear energy of the OECD for countries which are parties to the Paris convention. It also takes account of the level of commercial insurance cover available. The figure is kept under review.

Nuclear Reactors (Cracking)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will instruct Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate to investigate the safety of the similar AGR plant of Hartlepool in respect of cracking problems as discovered at the Heysham and Dungeness AGR reactors.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that a programme of periodic inspections is already undertaken at Hartlepool, where the superheater headers are similar to those at Heysham 1, where cracks have been found. The headers are included in the routine inspection programme. At the last such inspection at Hartlepool in June 1994, no cracks were identified in the equivalent header welds. As a precautionary measure, the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate has agreed with the operator, Nuclear Electric, a programme of additional inspections.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports have been brought to his attention by the nuclear installations inspectorate over the past two years in regard to the discovery of cracks found in the steam generator of the boilers at the Heysham A and Dungeness B nuclear plants; and what decisions he has taken in response to the nuclear installations inspectorate reports.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate does not report to this Department on its day-to-day inspection activities at nuclear power plants. The answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 19 January, Official Report, column 589, referred to the action being taken by Nuclear Electric on cracks discovered at Dungeness B and Heysham 1 and explained that both plants would be brought back into operation only once the NII is satisfied that it is safe for them to do so.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department received from German nuclear companies on their intentions regarding cancellation of reprocessing contracts into British Nuclear Fuels prior to the thermal oxide reprocessing plant being licensed; and what assessment he has made of them.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No such representations were received.

Aerosols

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that the risks of injury resulting from accidental ignition of aerosols and aerosol contents are minimised;

(2) how many injuries are sustained annually from the accidental ignition of aerosols and aerosol contents;

(3) what plans he has to encourage aerosol manufacturers to improve the safety of their products.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Department's home accident surveillance system estimate, from a sample of accident and emergency hospital accident data, is that the number of injuries due to the accidental ignition of aerosols in United Kingdom is no more than 200 injuries in any year. There were 750 million aerosols sold in the UK in 1993. Aerosols are subject to the Aerosol Dispensers (EEC Requirements) Regulations 1977, as amended, the General Product Safety Regulations 1994 and the Consumer Protection Act 1987. Subject to the need to implement the recent Commission directive 94/1/EEC adapting to technical progress directive 75/324/EEC on aerosol dispensers and the thirteenth amendment to directive 76/769/EEC on the marketing and use of dangerous substances and preparations, I have no plans for any additional legislation.

World Trade

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was (a) the total volume of world trade in dollars and (b) the percentage increase year-on-year in each year from 1990–91 to 1993–94.

Mr. Needham: The information, where available, is given in the following table:

World Trade[1] in Goods

	1991 US Dollars (billions)	Per cent. change on previous year
1990	821.6	n/a
1991	856.3	4.2
1992	901.0	5.2
1993	927.3	2.9

Note:
[1] Trade is calculated as the arithmetic mean of exports and imports.

OECD Main Economic Indicators, December 1994.

Trade Balance (Vehicles)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 11 January to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell), Official Report, column 156, if he will make a statement as to his Department's analysis of the reasons for the worsening of the trade balance in cars and commercial vehicles.

Mr. Needham: Despite an upturn in the United Kingdom car market during the last two years, continued recession in continental Europe has drastically affected car exports from the UK to those markets. Similarly, the strong growth in the UK commercial vehicle market last year led European manufacturers aggressively to target the UK at a time when their domestic markets have remained in recession. UK car and commercial vehicle manufacturers are well placed to reverse this position as the economy of mainland Europe recovers.

Merchant Banks

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when merchant banks became exempt from legislation requiring disclosure of share purchases; and if he will review the procedure.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Merchants banks as such are not exempt from the law on disclosure of interests in shares. Certain categories of interests in shares have been exempt from disclosure since a law on disclosure of interests in shares was first introduced in 1967. These categories have been updated subsequently and now include interests in shares held by banks and others by way of security; interests in shares held by market makers for the purposes of their market making business; and interests held by custodians in their capacity as such.

The law on disclosure of interests in shares is now being examined as part of the Department's company law reform programme.

Business Start-up

Mr. Allason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by what percentage the single regeneration budget will be reduced in 1995–96; and what will be the impact in cash terms on the Devon and Cornwall training and enterprise council's funding for business start-up.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

Total national expenditure on the single regeneration budget in 1995–96 is expected, on current plans, to be 8 per cent. lower in cash terms than that in 1994–95. Expenditure on business start-up schemes by Devon and Cornwall training and enterprise council in 1995–96 cannot yet be estimated. Existing commitments will continue to be honoured, but contracts for 1995—96 have not yet been signed. In addition, Devon and Cornwall

TEC is a partner in three successful SRB bids which include business start-up and business training and advice project. The partnerships are currently preparing their delivery plans for these schemes.

Coal Imports

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many million tonnes of coal were imported into the United Kingdom in 1994; and what was the impact of coal imports on the United Kingdom balance of payments.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Figures for the whole of 1994 are not yet available. Coal imports for the first three quarters of the year amounted to 11.9 million tonnes and were 13 per cent. below the level in the same period of 1993. The negative impact of these imports on the balance of payments figures will be about £400 million.

Manufacturing Supplies

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what capacity his Department has to supply comprehensive lists of manufacturing supplies in specific sectors to prospective purchasers of United Kingdom goods;

(2) what progress his Department has made in producing an acceptable comprehensive system for priority information on United Kingdom suppliers in each section of the manufacturing process.

Mr. Eggar: The network of regional supply offices currently being set up in England by my Department will provide major purchasers with information on competitive suppliers in their region and more widely. Each of the 10 offices will focus on particular business sectors taking into account local strengths and weaknesses. The network will complement similar initiatives run by the Welsh and Scottish development agencies.

In addition, the overseas trade services, jointly provided by my Department and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, supply information on United Kingdom suppliers to potential overseas purchasers through commercial staff overseas, either from the extensive information sources held overseas or by referral back to the United Kingdom to the source of supply service run on our behalf by Prelink Ltd.

Retail Price Maintenance

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the policy justification for the continuation of retail price maintenance for (a) pharmaceuticals, (b) newspapers and (c) periodicals; and what other products or services for which retail price maintenance is still in force there are.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Resale price maintenance is unlawful under the Resale Prices Act 1976, subject to the possibility of exemption by the restrictive practices court on public interest grounds. Two exemptions are in force, for books and for certain pharmaceuticals, which were exempted on the grounds that price competition between retailers would be likely to lead to a reduction in the number of outlets offering prescription services. No exemption exists in relation to newspapers or periodicals.

Leeds Training and Enterprise Council

Dr. Hampson: To ask the President of the President of the Board of Trade how much funding his Department will be providing to Leeds TEC in 1995–96 for small and medium businesses; and how much was provided in 1994–95.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The DTI grant offer to Leeds TEC for small and medium businesses in 1994–95 was £410,000. The budget for 1995–96 has yet to be settled.

Integrated Regional Offices

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities on which the integrated regional offices are required to advise him on the allocation of resources and, for each integrated regional office, the annual expenditure on each programme.

Mr. Heseltine: Regional directors advise on a range of programmes but do not hold programme budgets and are not therefore responsible for allocating resources to programmes. The 1993–94 expenditure proposed on each programme was detailed in the DTI's published MINIS 1994, available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities which are administered by the integrated regional offices and, for each integrated regional office, the estimated annual expenditure on each of these responsibilities.

Mr. Heseltine: The range of activities undertaken by DTI in the regions has not changed with the introduction of the Government offices. The activities and the running costs associated with them for 1993–94 were published in MINIS 1994, available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities on which integrated regional offices are responsible for preparing, advising on or implementing regional policy.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government offices in the regions assist my Department in work on a range of regional policy issues including regional selective assistance applications, the preparation of single programming documents for the structural funds and administering the regional innovation grants.

Inward Investing Companies

Mr. Deva: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what the total value of the output of inward investing companies in the United Kingdom was in 1993;

(2) what was the total value of the exports of inward investing companies in the United Kingdom in 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not available at present. However, in view of the importance of the contribution of these companies to the economic performance of the United Kingdom, the Department approached the Central Statistical Office last month to ask it to produce the information.

Green Minister

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the responsibilities of the Green Minister in his Department regarding oil and gas exploration and extraction.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has designated me as the Green Minister for the Department. I take decisions on oil and gas exploration and extraction on the basis of a number of criteria, including the possible effect such activities may have on the environment. In reaching these decisions, I take account of advice from a wide range of environmental organisations, including the Joint Nature Conservation Committee.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what additional funds have been made available to the national engineering laboratory; and for what reason.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The National Engineering Laboratory is subject to net expenditure control. Therefore it is required to recover its full economic costs from work carried out for my Department and third parties. Any additional cash provisions are dealt with as part of the annual public expenditure settlement and presented to Parliament in my Department's main estimates.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which organisations have expressed an interest in purchasing the national engineering laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: A number of organisations have expressed such an interest. Their identities are commercially confidential.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what parts of the national engineering laboratory, including building and land, have been included in the prospectus for the sale of the national engineering laboratory.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department has offered for sale the business and assets of the national engineering laboratory. The buildings and lands are not owned by the Department.

Glass Oven Doors

Mr. David Young: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cases have been reported of exploding glass oven doors; what safety monitoring of ovens with such doors has taken place; and what action is being taken by his Department.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: The number of incidents involving exploding glass oven doors which have been reported to my Department's consumer safety unit is:

Year	Number
1984	12
1985	25
1986	32
1987	28
1988	34
1989	9
1990	10
1991	8
1992	2
1993	2

Although very few injuries occurred, the increase in the number of reported incidents between 1984 and 1988 prompted my Department to discuss the problem with industry. This led to a significant improvement to British standard 3193—specification for thermally toughened glass panels for use in domestic appliances. Improvements were also made in the way in which glass doors are attached to cookers, and both aspects are reflected in the reduced number of incidents since that time.

Although there has been a significant reduction in the number of incidents reported since 1989, my Department continue to monitor the situation and to contribute to the relevant European standards—CEN and CENELEC—safety committees on cookers and glass which now fully reflect the British standard.

Internet

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will encourage the establishment of a British-based equivalent of the Internet system in order for Britain to promote its interests worldwide.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 23 January 1995]: The Internet is now so international and amorphous that its operation would be very difficult to influence in order to provide a national benefit. However, the DTI is monitoring its development and the prospect of other networks closely.

The United Kingdom's interests are best served by the fullest development of new telecommunication networks and services, led by the private sector and reflecting the economic interests of businesses, public institutions and households. The UK is in a very strong position to use these capabilities because of the state of development of our communications infrastructure. The Government's policy of telecommunications liberalisation has encouraged substantial investment in modern communications networks with the capacity to support the multimedia applications that the new communications networks require. There are many companies in Britain working on such applications.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration Appeals Authority

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, how many special adjudicators are employed by the Immigration Appeals Authority; and what plans he has to increase that number.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has designated 62 immigration adjudicators to be special adjudicators for the purposes of section 8(5) of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993, 18 of whom are full-time adjudicators. Ten new part-time special adjudicators were designated in December 1994 and further increases in the numbers are likely during the course of the year, the precise numbers depending on the work load of the immigration appellate authorities.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the total establishment of the Immigration Appeals Authority; and if he will provide a breakdown of that establishment by function and location.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is set out in the tables:

1. Adjudicators

Centre	Staff in post	Adjudicators		Courtrooms
		Full-time	Part-time
London	52	7	17	8
West London	43	7	26	15
Birmingham	8	2	13	4
Leeds	8	1	14	3
Manchester	7	—	15	4
Glasgow	7	1	8	2
	125	18	93	36

2. Immigration Appeal Tribunal

		No.
Staff in post		12
Chairmen	Full-time	3
	Part-time	7
Lay members		26
Courtrooms		2

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidance is given to special adjudicators of the Immigration Appeals Authority on the level of recognisance to be required when granting bail to persons detained under Immigration Act powers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No such guidance is given by the Lord Chancellor's Department. The level of recognisance in these cases is a matter for the special adjudicator's discretion.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applications for bail were made to the Immigration Appeals Authority by persons detained under Immigration Act powers in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994 to date; and how many of these applications were successful.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There were 531 such applications in 1993; 898 in 1994; and to date there have been 56 in 1995. The outcome of a bail application is recorded on the individual file but results are not collated centrally. The information requested could therefore be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total cost in the financial year 1993–94 to his Department of hearing applications for bail by persons detained under Immigration Act powers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 15 December 1994, Official Report, column 729.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total budget of the Immigration Appeals Authority in the financial year 1993–94.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total budget of the immigration appellate authorities in the financial year 1993–94 was £6,397,850.

Magistrates Courts (Appointment System)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate there is of savings likely to the legal aid fund by the adoption of an appointment system in magistrates courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No estimate has been made of potential savings to the legal aid fund.

Solicitors Complaints Bureau

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to ensure that practice rule 15 does not prevent the Solicitors Complaints Bureau from investigating a serious complaint.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Law Society's statutory powers to deal with complaints about solicitors have been delegated to the Solicitors Complaints Bureau. The legal services ombudsman has paid particular attention to the application of practice rule 15 by the SCB and in his third annual report he warned that many complaints could only be dealt with effectively if investigated by the SCB. The SCB has a statutory duty to have regard to the recommendations of the ombudsman.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) on how many occasions in the last four months he or his ministerial colleagues have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

PRIME MINISTER

World Summit for Social Development

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will be attending the world summit for social development.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Ms Corston) on 23 January, Official Report, column 23.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster today.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parliamentary Questions

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parliamentary questions he has referred to chief executives of next steps agencies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since 1992, 16 parliamentary questions have been referred to the chief executives of the United Kingdom Passport Agency, of the Forensic Science Service and of the Fire Service College. The Prison Service Agency does not maintain a central record of parliamentary questions answered by the director general and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by prison (a) the target prison population, (b) the actual prison population, (c) the staff establishment in full-time equivalents and (d) staff in post in full-time equivalents for each year since 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Services, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 25 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about a list by prison of (a) the target prison population, (b) the actual prison population, (c) the staff establishment in full-time equivalents and (d) staff in post in full-time equivalents for each year since 1971.

Individual Prison Service establishments do not have target populations. Information on the accommodation (at 31 March) and average population of prison establishments is published in the Prison Service annual reports, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

The annual report for 1993–94 has yet to be published but the information on total accommodations and average number of prisoners is as in the attached table (annex 1).

Information on the average population of establishments for April to November 1994 is set out in the attached table at annex 2, together with the average certified normal accommodation (CNA).

Copies of both annexes have been placed in the House of Commons libraries.

I will write to you separately with the figures on staffing levels at establishments.

Director General of the Prison Service

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures were undertaken when the Director General of the Prison Service was selected; how many candidates were considered for this post; and what criteria were used in assessing the candidates.

Mr. Howard: The Civil Service Commissioners are required to approve all agency chief executive appointments and the appointment of the Director General of the Prison Service was approved by them in the normal way. The appointment was advertised and an executive search conducted. The First Civil Service Commissioner chaired the selection procedure. The board considered nearly 40 candidates and interviewed five. Three were assessed as of an acceptable standard and, in view of the importance of the appointment, the procedure adopted was that the board adjourned in order to allow the then Home Secretary to meet those candidates. The board then reconvened. The appointment was a matter for my predecessor but the candidate he appointed was approved by the board under the First Civil Service Commissioner's chairmanship. The main criteria for selection were set out in the advertisement for the post: experience, most probably at chief executive level, of leading a substantial organisation in the public or private sector; a track record of successful management of large-scale change, delivering improved quality and efficiency; first-class communication skills and good judgment.

Prison Damage

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of refurbishing prisons following damage by prisoners acting unlawfully for each year since 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 25 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the cost of refurbishing prisons as a result of damage caused by prisoners acting unlawfully for each year since 1990.

The total costs for refurbishing establishments damaged by prisoners in each financial year since 1990/1, for which figures are available, are as follows:

1990–91: £27.9 million

1991–92: £512,000

1992–93: £464,000

1993–94: £5,072,000

1994–95: £135,000*

*Costs for the current financial year to date.

High Security Prisons (Costs)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the annual cost at current prices of keeping a man in a high security prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. David Nicholson, dated 25 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the annual cost of keeping a prisoner in a high security prison.

The annual average net operating cost per prisoner place in dispersal prisons in 1993–4 was £26,671.

Blakenhurst Prison

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish Her Majesty's chief inspector's report into Her Majesty's prison, Blakenhurst; and what are the reasons for the delay in its publication.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 25 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the publication of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector's report into Blakenhurst.

It is expected that the report will be published on 1 February. Publication has not been unduly delayed. The report was received from the Inspector on 10 October 1994. Careful consideration is given to all such reports before publication and this has been so for the Blakenhurst report.

Pucklechurch Remand Centre

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers have been on detached duty to Pucklechurch remand centre to cover 24-hour surveillance duty since 2 January; and from which prisons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 25 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question abut the number of prison officers on detached duty at Pucklechurch Remand Centre to cover 24 hour surveillance duty since 2 January and from which prisons they have been sent.

A total of seventeen offices have been used on detached duty from Swansea, Leyhill, Winchester, Stoke Heath, Portland, Usk, Guy's Marsh, Wandsworth and Bristol prisons.

Electro-shock Equipment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the commissioning of medical studies regarding the safety and effectiveness of vehicle mounted or fence or perimeter mounted electro-shock devices.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office has no plans to commission such studies.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what arrangements are made between his Department and private companies or individuals to lease or rent electro-shock equipment;

(2) if he will make a statement on the holding of stocks of electro-shock devices by his Department;

(3) how many United Kingdom police forces hold supplies of electro-shock shields of electro-shock batons;

(4) what information he has of fatalities attributable to the use of electro-shock devices;

(5) how many United Kingdom, military, security or police personnel have attended training or instruction courses in the use of electro-shock devices with overseas manufacturers or suppliers.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office does not hold stocks of this equipment nor is it party to any leasing or rental agreements with third parties. Information concerning the number of police forces holding supplies of electro-shock shields or batons is not held centrally. As I made clear in my written answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 383, some forces have obtained electro-shock equipment only to protect officers against ferocious dogs in pre-planned operations. The Home Office has no details of fatalities from the use of electro-shock devices. I have no knowledge of any staff in Home Office areas of responsibility attending manufacturers' or suppliers' training courses in the use of such equipment.

Noise Pollution

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions have now been issued to officers of the Metropolitan police to reduce unnecessary noise pollution by the use of police car sirens following the review mentioned in his answer of 23 June 1994, Official Report, column 258.

Mr. Maclean: A copy of the Metropolitan police notice announcing an amendment to the Metropolitan police instruction manual has now been approved and a copy of the notice will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Motorists (Retesting)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many motorists have been obliged to undergo compulsory retesting in the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: The information available to me suggests that some 1,000 disqualifications were imposed in 1992 in England and Wales which also included a driving test requirement. The figure for 1993 was 2,700.

Electoral Fraud

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new proposals he intends to make to eliminate electoral fraud caused by the depositing of fraudulent votes in ballot boxes.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: None. The Representation of the People Act 1983 contains provisions for the prevention and detection of fraudulent votes. The Act also provides for sanction in respect of illegal practices, corrupt practices and other offences. We have no proposals for any change.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster today.

Visa Refusals

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the rate of refusals of visas for entry into the United Kingdom from (a) Thailand, (b) New Zealand, (c) Australia, (d) Canada and (e) India for each year since 1990.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information is given in the table.

Table 1: Refusal Rates [1] for entry clearance applications made in Thailand, New Zealand, Australia, Canada and India, 1990–1993

Percentages

	1990	1991	1992	1993

Football Pools

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to change the Government's policy in relation to broadcast advertising of the football pools.

Mr. Howard: The Government have been reviewing the restrictions on the ban on broadcast advertising by the football pools as part of the deregulation initiative and have decided that it is not necessary in the public interest for the ban to be maintained.

The Government have today invited the Independent Television Commission and the Radio Authority to consider amending their advertising codes. The ITC and the Radio Authority are required to consult with all interested parties.

Immigration Detainees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were detained under Immigration Act powers in each month in 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker [holding answer 18 January 1995]: The information requested is given in the table.

Persons[1] detained under Immigration Act powers

Month[2]	1993	1994[3]
January	852	1,090
February	927	1,000
March	878	1,050
April	871	850
May	881	830
June	721	820
July	927	950
August	772	1,080
September	799	1,100
October	756	1,100
November	771	*360
December	966	*250
Year	10,121	*10,470

Notes:

[1] Passengers at ports detained overnight or longer, and persons detained as illegal entrants or under deportation powers (excluding persons detained pending deportation following completion of a custodial sentence).

[2] For persons detained as illegal entrants or under deportation powers, the month relates to when the illegal entrant was detected or when the notice of intention to deport was served, not when the person was detained.

[3] Data for 1994 are provisional and have been rounded to the nearest 10.

[4] Excluding passengers at ports detained in November and December 1994, the data on whom are not yet available.

Drownings

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons died as a result of drowning on bathing beaches, in each year since 1980 and (a) in England and (b) in each English coastal resort; and how many of these were under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Statistics that would identify drownings off beaches in Britain are not collected centrally, but since 1983 the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents has produced and published annual statistics on drownings in the United Kingdom based on collation of press reports. I understand that they may hold information which could assist in answering the hon. Member's question.

Scanners

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the use of scanners to detect offensive weapons in places of public entertainment.

Mr. Maclean: A number of products are available commercially which are capable of detecting concealed metal objects, including offensive weapons. These are evaluated regularly by the Home Office police scientific development branch. Its evaluations are made available to the police and persons wishing to acquire such equipment may obtain appropriate advice from their local crime prevention officer.

It is open to he owners of private premises used for public entertainment to make it a condition of entry that persons wishing to enter their premises submit themselves to a search. Such searches may be conducted by means of hand-held scanners.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the approximate average net profits for dairy farmers in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: The net profits of dairy farmers is not determined each year as net profits is not one of the measures used to assess farm profitability in the United Kingdom. Information on incomes of full-time dairy farms and other farm types is collected in the farm business survey and published each year in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom". The latest edition, "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1992/93", shows estimates of several different measures of income for dairy farms in 1991–92 and 1992–93.

To illustrate longer-term trends in incomes, index series are also given for net farm income, occupier's net income and cash income back to 1986–87—table 1.1 and appendix 1, tables 1 and 2—the earliest year for which data are available on a consistent basis.

"Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1993–94" will be published in March 1995.

Dourine

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of Dourine were reported in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: Dourine has never been recorded in Northern Ireland.

Repossessions

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the figures for house repossessions have been in each of the last three years.

Mr. Moss: Repossessions statistics are not provided by the mortgage-lending institutions on a regional basis and therefore are not available for Northern Ireland.

However, I understand that the enforcement of judgments office issued 683 orders for repossessions in 1992, 492 in 1993 and 468 in 1994.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster earlier today.

TREASURY

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 January 1995, Official Report, column 289, if he will outline the common procedure mentioned in paragraph 1 of the communiqué and the steps therein.

Mr. Nelson: Article 3 of the resolution of the European Council of Brussels of 5 December 1978 provides that "adjustments of central rates will be subject to mutual agreement by a common procedure which will comprise all countries participating in the exchange rate mechanism and the Commission. There will be reciprocal consultation in the Community framework about important decisions concerning exchange rate policy between countries participating and any country not participating in the system"

Any member state intending to change, establish or re-establish the parity, central rate or intervention points of its currency within the ERM is required to initiate a prior consultation procedure by informing the relevant authorities of member states.

ECOFIN

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the most recent meeting of the Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the United Kingdom at the Economic and Finance Council of the European Union in Brussels on 16 January.

The French presidency outlined its work programme for the coming Economic and Finance Councils, based on the three priorities: sustainable growth and the creation of employment; the enhancement of the credibility of European policies; and the completion of the single market.

In reply, I welcomed the presidency's work programme, particularly its stress on improvements in the fight against fraud. I stressed that economic conditions in member states were now the best for several years and that it was vital to use this opportunity to tackle long-term unemployment and other structural problems through more flexible labour markets. I underlined the need to respect the convergence criteria on low inflation and reduced public deficits set out in the Maastricht treaty and stressed the need for a systematic review of the Community's balance of payments support outside the EU.

The Council agreed to the presidency's procedural proposals for dealing with the follow-up to the Essen European Council on: the financing of trans-European networks; the parameters within which member states wishing to do so could introduce a CO_2-energy tax; fraud and financial management; and the employment situation.

No formal votes were taken at the Council meeting.

Insider-Dealing

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will be meeting the chairman of the stock exchange to discuss the rules on insider dealing and disclosure of marketing stakes.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the stock exchange from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Nelson: The information sought falls within the operational responsibilities of the chief executives of the Royal Mint, Central Statistical Office, Paymaster and Valuation Office executive agencies and I have asked each of them to arrange for a reply to be given. The four agencies did not form part of the Treasury prior to becoming agencies.

Letter from Mr. R. Holmes to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to provide, in relation to the Royal Mint, the information sought in your Question concerning Agency expenditure on a number of specific matters.

I will respond to each of these as they appear in your Question:

1. The Royal Mint is a Government Department which has been a Trading Fund since 1975 and an Agency since 1990. The change to Agency status did not result in any additional expenditure on buildings or staff.
2. The Royal Mint issues a monthly staff newsletter at an annual cost of £4,000.
3. The Royal Mint has no personally allocated executive cars.
4. Coincidental with our new Agency status in 1990, the Royal Mint commissioned a new Corporate identity—for commercial reasons and totally unrelated to our new status. The total cost of this was £32,000.
5. The Royal Mint provides clothing where there is an occupational or safety requirement eg protective clothing in the factory. The annual cost is approximately £95,000.
6. The Royal Mint has incurred no costs in specially designed and printed corporate stationery since our logo was changed in 1990.

I hope this information is helpful.

Letter from W. McLennan to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply to your Question of 20 January about Next Steps agencies.

2. The Central Statistical Office (CSO) became an Executive Agency on 19 November 1991. The following are the answers to the specific points raised in your Question:

The CSO has not acquired its own headquarters buildings.

No additional support staff were required when the CSO became an agency, because it was a separate department then and has remained one since.

CSO has continued to publish statistics on a regular basis and the full costs of the agency are set out in its Annual Report and Accounts (copy attached).

The CSO has no executive cars.

The CSO introduced a new logo in 1993, which was designed in–house.

No extra cost was incurred in printing corporate stationery for the agency compared with previous stationery costs.

Letter from Keith Sullens to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

I am writing as Chief Executive of PAYMASTER in response to your written question to the Chancellor of the Exchequer about costs of the Next Steps Agencies in his Department.

PAYMASTER continues to occupy the premises it was in prior to becoming an Executive Agency. Sutherland House, Crawley is a Crown building for which Property Holdings is paid a current rent of £1,327,000 pa. Due to restructuring of the Agency the space occupied will be reduced considerably by 31 March 1996, the rental will be £862,000—a saving of 36%.

Historically the Office of the Paymaster General had been an autonomous unit within HM Treasury and therefore no significant additional numbers of support staff were required.

PAYMASTER does not issue periodic journals, other than the Annual Report and Statement of Accounts as required by statute.

There are no personally allocated executive cars in PAYMASTER. Two cars are hired for official business on a first come first served basis and they are available for all staff. The annual cost of hire is £5,856 pa, excluding petrol and oil.

PAYMASTER commissioned a design for a new corporate identity with new logo for the Agency launch, the cost of which was £12,500 excluding VAT.

A very small sum, (less than £200) has been spent on corporate clothing for messengerial staff.

A limited amount of new corporate stationery was produced at a cost of £15,000, excluding VAT. Design costs were included in the overall figure quoted.

I hope that this answers your queries satisfactorily but if you need any further information, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Letter from A. J. Langford to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply to your Question about the cost of certain operational functions since becoming an Executive Agency under the Next Steps programme.

Headquarters buildings

The Valuation Office's head office continues to be based in the same building as before. No additional accommodation has been taken for headquarters buildings.

Support staff

No additional support staff have been taken on by the Valuation Office in consequence of its move to Executive Agency status.

Periodical journals

The Valuation Office continues to produce a Property Market Report on a twice yearly basis. This is on sale to the public and is priced on a cost recovery basis.

Executive cars

The Valuation Office does not have any executive cars.

Agency logo

The Valuation Office's logo was designed in-house at no additional cost.

Corporate clothing

The Valuation Office provides uniforms incorporating the Agency logo for its messengerial and security staff in its head office. Uniforms were provided to this group of staff pre Agency status and the additional cost of incorporating the Agency logo was minimal. The annual running cost of uniforms is in the order of £1,950. There is no other form of corporate clothing.

Corporate stationery

As the move to Agency status developed, opportunities were taken to run down existing stocks of stationery and reprinting with the Agency title gradually introduced and no additional costs arose.

Please let me know if I can assist further.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees for which his departments are responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The combined totals for the Chancellor's departments are:

	1991	1992	1993	1994
All women	62,561	62,379	61,736	59,205
Grade 3	4	4	5	4
Grade 7	354	420	548	563
EO	12,236	13,147	12,995	12,703
AO	19,792	23,006	22,799	22,860
AA	18,879	20,207	18,714	17,311

The figures mostly relate to 1 April for each year in question, however three of the Chancellor's departments do not have the data requested for 1991, and one has shown its total female staff at the end of each year requested. Part-time staff are included by head count—not by full-time equivalent.

National Audit Office

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future role of the National Audit Office in vetting United Kingdom contributions to the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 January 1995]: United Kingdom contributions to the European Community budget are paid from the Consolidated Fund. As with all payments from the Consolidated Fund, the National Audit Office already approves all these contributions before they are paid. In addition, the NAO conducts a full annual audit of the Consolidated Fund.

Yorkshire Electricity Group plc

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set up an inquiry into the Swiss Bank Corporation's acquisition of Yorkshire Electricity Group plc shares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Inquiries into transactions involving securities are matters for the appropriate regulatory authorities.

Economic Prospects

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the prospects for the economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The latest forecasts available, published in last November's "Financial Statement and Budget Report", show continuing steady growth and low inflation. The economy is projected to grow by 3¼ per cent. in 1995.

Inward Investing Companies

Mr. Deva: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much inward investing companies paid in tax in 1993.

Sir George Young: Corporation tax paid by United Kingdom companies with foreign parents accounted for about one tenth of the total yield of £15 billion in 1993–94.

Green Minister

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will outline the main activities of the Green Minister in the Treasury, in his role as Green Minister, during 1994.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: During 1994, my predecessor and I have continued to ensure that environmental considerations are taken into account in the strategies and policies of the Department.

Income Tax

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 10 January to the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East, (Mr. Thurnham), Official Report, column 7, if he will reproduce the answer together with columns showing the share of income coming to the top 1, 5 and 10 per cent.

Sir George Young [holding answer 24 January 1995]: The latest estimates for 1978–79 and 1983–84 to 1995–96 are given in the tables. Information for other years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Estimates of income are based on information reported to tax offices and collected through annual surveys of personal incomes. For years before 1985–86, estimates exclude employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and some investment income on which tax is deducted at source. For years up to and including 1989–90, married couples are counted as one taxpayer and their incomes are combined. Following the introduction of independent taxation, for 1990–91 onwards, husbands and wives are counted separately. Estimates are based on the surveys of personal incomes for years up to 1992–93 and projections of the 1992–93 survey for subsequent years; the latter are therefore provisional.

Denatured Alcohol

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the products included in the list of denatured alcohol.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 January 1995]: Alcohol is exempt from excise duty when denatured to the standards set out in Commission regulation (EC) No. 3199/93 and the Methylated Spirits Regulations 1987. This allows United Kingdom business access to duty relieved alcohol for the manufacture of a wide range of industrial and scientific products.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Baldry: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Wilton Park under its chief executive, Richard Langhorne, and to the Natural Resources Institute under its chief executive, Anthony Beattie. I have asked them to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Professor R. T. B. Langhorne to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

I have been asked to respond to your question of 18 January, 1995, concerning Next Steps Agencies.

In the case of Wilton Park the answers are as follows:

(i) We have been in the same leased headquarters here at Wiston house since 1951:

(ii) We have engaged three support staff since we became an Agency. Two of these followed upon a 60% increase in our programme of work and were not the consequence of being turned into an Agency. One, an additional book keeper, was needed in order to fulfil the accounting needs of Agency status:

(iii) We do not publish a periodical journal;

(iv) We do not have any executive cars;

(v) We do not have corporate clothing, though we are under pressure at present from the Trade Union Side to introduce it;

(vi) We have always had Wilton Park stationery, and no extra cost was incurred by reason of being turned into an Agency.

Letter from Anthony Beattie, to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

1. Mr. Baldry has asked me to reply to your question about Next Steps Agencies as this relates to the Natural Resources Institute, which is an agency of the Overseas Development Administration.

2. The answers to the questions you have posed are as follows:

(a) The Institute moved to a single site at Chatham between 1988 and 1990 from nine sites previously occupied by the separate scientific units which it replaced. The majority of the staff were on three sites in central London. The consolidation was planned in advance of the decision to move to agency status. The rental cost of the Chatham site (net of the cost of that part of it now occupied by the University of Greenwich) is £3,387,000 in 1994–95.

(b) Prior to NRI becoming an agency it already operated as a specialised unit outside ODA HQ. Following its change to an agency NRI increased its support staff by 12 posts, mostly in finance and accounting, to meet new financial requirements and to help achieve increases in business from non-ODA customers. Subsequent staff reductions have brought the number of NRI support staff down to 132 as against 131 prior to the change of status.

(c) The annual production and distribution cost of NRI's newsletter (which was in existence prior to agency status and which is sent to selected recipients in the developing world and the donor community) is £11,000.

(d) NRI has no executive cars.

(e) The cost of design and art work for the Institute's stationery and signage was £23,500.

(f) NRI does not provide corporate clothing.

(g) Annual stationery costs are of the order of £11,000 (the original design cost is given at (e) above).

MI6 Headquarters

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current annual cost per member of staff accommodated at the MI6 headquarters building at Vauxhall Bridge road-Albert embankment, London.

Mr. Hurd: It is long-standing Government policy not to provide detailed information about the expenditure of the security and intelligence agencies.

Sri Lanka (Anti-paedophile Policy)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in co-ordinating an anti-paedophile policy with the Sri Lankan Government.

Mr. Baldry: We have kept in close touch with the Sri Lankan authorities about child prostitution. I discussed the matter with them most recently during my visit in November. At our invitation, their deputy inspector general of police responsible for crimes, in whose department there is a special section for dealing with paedophilia, visited last summer to study United Kingdom police techniques.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster today.

Mrs. Andleeb H. Khan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is expected to be taken on the application—REF/C/7426—made to the United Kingdom post in Islamabad by Mrs. Andleeb H. Khan to join her husband in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the letter of 19 January 1995 to him from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

I have asked the high commission at Islamabad for details of any further progress in her application and shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from MVCU as soon as possible.

Iraq

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the Government's response to the interim report, prepared by Mr. Max van der Stoel, special rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights, on the situation in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome Mr. van der Stoel's report and share his condemnation of the Iraqi regime for the continuing deterioration in human rights in that country. We will continue to insist that Iraq complies in full with the terms of United Nations Security Council resolution 688, which calls for an end to the repression of the Iraqi people, and to demand that Iraq give access to UN human rights monitors.

Kobe Earthquake

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the British Government have provided to victims of the Kobe earthquake.

Mr. Goodlad: Immediately after the earthquake, we told the Japanese Government that we stood ready to send any assistance they required and gave examples of what we could offer.

They made a specific request on 21 January, and the Overseas Development Administration at once chartered an aircraft to deliver a first consignment of relief supplies. The cargo consisted of over 18,000 blankets, 35 rolls of black plastic sheeting, 500 collapsible 20 litre water containers and 500 plastic bowls, totally filling the aircraft by volume. The aircraft arrived on Monday 23 January at Kansai international airport near Kobe.

The Japanese authorities have requested some other items including bandages, dressings and sanitary napkins. The Overseas Development Administration sent a consignment of three tonnes on 24 January, British Airways donating the freight space.

In addition, the International Rescue Corps, a British charity which supplies fully trained, self-sufficient rescue teams, has sent a 15-member group to assist in the rescue operations.

HEALTH

Midwives (Northumberland)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives there were in (a) Northumberland health authority and (b) Cheviot and Wansbeck hospital in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The information available centrally is shown in the tables.

Midwives in Northumberland District Health Authority 1990–92 at 30 September each year

	Whole-time equivalents
	1990	1991	1992
Midwives	110	110	110

Midwives in Cheviot and Wansbeck hospital 1991–92 at 30 September each year

	Whole-time equivalents
	1991	1992
Midwives	80	80

Source:
Non-medical work force census.
Notes:
1. All figures are rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.
2. All nursing and midwifery figures exclude agency staff.

Medical Students

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many medical students worked for the Northumberland health authority in each year since 1990;

(2) how many medical students are working in maternity units in (a) the Northumberland health authority and (b) the Wansbeck and Cheviot hospital trust.

Mr. Malone: These are matters for the Cheviot and Wansbeck national health service trust and Northumberland health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the trust and the vice-chairman of the authority, Mr. Roger Baker and Mr. David Wright, for details.

Research and Development Forum

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how she will ensure the widest possible input from the health profession into the work of the new NHS research and development forum;

(2) what plans she has to invite representatives of user groups and NHS professional organisations to become members of the new NHS research and development forum;

(3) if she will consult health organisations about the advice she receives from the new NHS research and development forum.

Mr. Malone: The national forum will bring together the major health-related research funders to provide advice to the national health service and the Government at a strategic level on health-related research and development issues. It will provide an important means of establishing closer working links between research interests in the national health service and in the research councils, the research charities, universities and industry.

An important role for the national forum will be to help set the strategic framework within which the central research and development committee will advise on how national health service funds should be used to support research and development. Membership of the central research and development committee reflects a wide range of interests.

The central research and development committee will consult widely on national health service needs for research and development and will benefit from advice from regional research and development committees through the regional research and development directorates. These have a broad membership including representatives of the service and others who use research-based information.

Research (Human Beings)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department accepts the principles of recommendation No. R(90)3 of the Committee of Ministers to member states concerning medical research on human beings; and if she will incorporate them into United Kingdom legislation.

Mr. Malone: The Department accepts the principles contained in this Council of Europe recommendation on medical research and human beings. They reflect current good medical research practice across the United Kingdom, particularly in terms of informed consent which is underpinned by the Department's own guidelines on medical research given in the booklet "Local Research Ethics Committees", which was published in 1991. It has no plans to incorporate the principles into UK legislation.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her latest estimate of the cost of closing Bart's hospital and moving the facilities to Whitechapel;

(2) what is her estimate of the annual revenue saving from operating Bart's and Royal London, Whitechapel hospitals on one side;

(3) what is the estimated extra revenue cost of a two-site solution of merging Bart's with the Royal London hospital, over the one-site solution.

Mr. Malone: Estimated revenue and capital costings are contained in the East London and the City health authority's consultation document "Health services for the future", copies of which can be obtained from the authority.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is Bart's hospital projected trading surplus for the current financial year.

Mr. Malone: St. Bartholomew's hospital together with the Royal London and London chest hospitals comprise the Royal Hospitals trust. The hon. Member may wish to approach Sir Derek Boorman, chairman of the trust, to establish the availability of this information.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much capital has been invested in Bart's hospital over the years 1989 to 1995.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Derek Boorman, chairman of the Royal Hospitals trust, for details.

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many long-stay mental handicap hospitals have gained trust status.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available in the form requested. There are, however, 101 national health services trusts which provide long-stay mental handicap beds.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions blood collected by the blood transfusions service and contaminated with hepatitis C has been sold to private sector hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service does not sell blood. It has always been the policy of the NHS to meet independent hospitals' reasonable requests for blood on the basis of availability and clinical need. Independent hospitals will be included in the look-back exercise to trace, counsel and—if necessary—treat those who have been inadvertently infected with hepatitis C in this country, as I announced on 11 January 1995, Official Report, column 145.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has of hepatitis C infected blood volumes donated prior to current testing methods but during the period when other testing regimes were available to the blood transfusion service.

Mr. Sackville: Testing regimes were not available to the blood transfusion service until September 1991, when routine testing of all blood donations for antibodies to the hepatitis C virus was introduced. The blood transfusion service directors estimate that around 3,000 people may have been infected through blood transfusions prior to September 1991. The look-back exercise, which I announced on 11 January, will enable a more precise calculation to be made.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of expenditure has been committed to combat hepatitis C infection within the blood transfusion service from 1990 to the present.

Mr. Sackville: The cost of measures to combat hepatitis C infection within the blood transfusion service is not separately identifiable. Since September 1991, all blood donations have been routinely tested for antibodies to the hepatitis C virus.

Mental Illness

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the 1994 social services inspectorate monitoring report on the mental illness specific grant.

Mr. Bowis: This has not yet been received.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the report of the 1994 survey of English mental hospitals initiated by the mental health task force has now been submitted to Ministers; and when its publication may be expected.

Mr. Bowis: No.

General Medical Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the lay members of the General Medical Council; on what date each was appointed; what qualifications they hold; when each term of office ceases; and what is their remuneration.

Mr. Malone: The current lay members of the General Medical Council are:

Name	Date appointed	Expiry date of term of Office
Mr. John Ifron Davies	2 August 1992	1 August 1997
Professor Christine Chapman	16 September 1992	15 September 1997
Mr. James Campbell Morton	1 August 1993	31 July 1998
Mrs. Rani Atma	1 August 1993	31 July 1998
Rabbi Julia Neuberger	1 August 1993	31 July 1998
Mr. Rodney Brookes Yates	1 August 1993	31 July 1998
Mrs. Angela Macpherson	18 May 1994	17 May 1999
Mr. Roy Goddard	18 May 1994	17 May 1999
Mrs. Johanna White	18 May 1994	17 May 1999
Mr. William Darling CBE	13 June 1994	12 June 1999
Mr. Roger Sims (Conservative)[1]	1 August 1994	31 July 1999
Mr. Alec Carlile (Liberal Democrats)[1]	1 August 1994	31 July 1999
Mr. Gareth Wardell (Labour)[1]	1 August 1994	31 July 1999

[1] Political nominations.

There are no formal requirements concerning lay members' qualifications other than that a lay member must neither be a fully registered medical practitioner, nor hold a qualification registrable under the Medical Act 1983.

Lay members receive no renumeration, but are able to claim their expenses for attending council and committee meetings.

NHS Centre for Information Technology

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the staff of the NHS centre for information technology became civil servants when CIT merged with the corporate data administration to form the NHS information management centre in May 1988.

Mr. Sackville: The staff of the national health service centre for information technology remained employees of the NHS when CIT merged with the corporate data administration.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of her departmental colleagues were responsible for the setting up of the NHS centre for information technology in 1985; what considerations underlay the decision to set up the centre, and what documents have been published setting out the justification for the centre.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State at the time was responsible for setting up the national health service centre for information technology. CIT was concerned primarily with the development and application of common standards and systems for the NHS. Further details were contained in the document "A National Strategic Framework for Information in the Hospital and Community Services" published in October 1986, copies of which are available in the Library.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1145, if the agency agreement with the west midlands regional health authority was the sole legal basis for the centre for information technology.

Mr. Sackville: West Midlands regional health authority was given formal status within existing legislation to act as agents of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the employment of centre for information technology staff.

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health trusts hired private detectives in the last year; for what purpose; at what cost; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances regional health authorities may make use of private detectives; and what guidelines her Department has issued on their use.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not available centrally. It is the responsibility of each health authority and trust, after seeking appropriate advice, to consider the circumstances under which they would wish to take such action.

Special Transitional Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by authority the amount of special transitional grant for 1993–94 spent on (a) nursing home placements, (b) residential home placements and (c) non-residential services.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which authorities failed to spend 85 per cent. of the special transitional grant in the independent sector during 1993–94.

Mr. Bowis: Audited returns detailing community care spending in the independent sector by local authorities in 1993–94 were due to be submitted to the Department by 31 December 1994. Some returns are still outstanding and are being followed up through the Audit Commission.

Blood

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a full list of tests undertaken to identify pathogens in donated blood.

Mr. Sackville: In the United Kingdom, all blood donations are screened for hepatitis B surface antigen, and antibodies to hepatitis C and HIV1 and 2, and syphilis.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to require NHS trusts (a) to hold all meetings in public and (b) to publish minutes of all meetings.

Mr. Malone: No. National health service trusts are already required to hold one public meeting each year, at which they must present their annual accounts, annual report and any report on the accounts.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many trusts have introduced some aspect of performance-related pay for their staff;

(2) how many trusts have negotiated their own pay awards for staff.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 20 January 1995]: As national terms and conditions for management, ancillary, maintenance and ambulance staff have included performance-related pay for some time all trusts will have staff who benefit from such pay. Comprehensive information is not available centrally about the nature of new local terms and conditions being introduced in national health service trusts. However, from responses to a survey of trusts in autumn 1994, it is estimated that around 70 per cent. of trusts already had some staff on locally determined pay—involving over 10,000 nursing staff and a small but growing number of hospital doctors.

EC Butter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she has taken or intends to take against Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu Mexborough NHS trust in their selling to the public at the Doncaster royal infirmary coffee shop European Community intervention board butter; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have been assured that no charge was made for the European Community intervention board butter when a small quantity was used in the hospital's coffee shop, and that all remaining supplies will be used, as the scheme intends, solely for the benefit of hospital patients and staff. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Doncaster Royal and Montagu national health service trust, Mr. Raymond Tonkinson, for further details.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the number and percentage of emergency ambulance calls in the London area that took (1) up to 14 minutes, (2) 15 minutes, (3) 16 minutes, (4) 17 minutes, (5) 18 minutes, (6) 19 minutes, (7) 20 minutes, (8) 21 minutes, (9) 22 minutes, (10) 23 minutes, (11) 24 minutes, (12) 25 minutes, (13) 26 minutes, (14) 27 minutes, (15) 28 minutes, (16) 29 minutes, (17) 30 minutes, (18) 31 minutes, (19) 32 minutes, (20) 33 minutes, (21) 34 minutes, (22) 35 minutes, (23) 36 minutes, (24) 37 minutes, (25) 38 minutes, (26) 39 minutes, (27) 40 minutes, (28) 41 minutes, (29) 42 minutes, (30) 43 minutes, (31) 44 minutes, (32) 45 minutes, (33) 46 minutes, (34) 47 minutes, (35) 48 minutes, (36) 49 minutes, (37) 50 minutes, (38) 51 minutes, (39) 52 minutes, (40) 53 minutes, (41) 54 minutes, (42) 55 minutes, (43) 56 minutes, (44) 57 minutes, (45) 58 minutes, (46) 59 minutes and (47) 60 minutes during (a) October 1994, (b) November 1994, (c) December 1994 and (d) in total since April 1994.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested has been supplied by the London ambulance service, and will be placed in the Library.

The hon. Member may wish in future to write to Martin Gorham, chief executive of the LAS, asking for the information.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the absenteeism rate for the London ambulance service in 1994.

Mr. Sackville: The London ambulance service states that in the year 1994–95 to date the absenteeism rate is as follows:

	Per cent.
Accident and Emergency Service	7.79
Central Ambulance Control	8.14
Patient Transport Service	10.51

Appendicectomy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in respect of the recent appendicectomy case in Cornwall, what considerations underlay the decisions (a) to suspend the theatre sister, (b) initially not to suspend the surgical registrar and (c) to take no action against the anaesthetist.

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for the Royal Cornwall Hospitals national health service trust and the South and West regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. John Williams, chairman of the trust, and Ms Rennie Fritchie, chair of South and West regional health authority, for details.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees for which her Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Female	All	UG3	UG7	EO	AO	AA
1991[1]	2,431	—	—	—	—	—
1992[1]	2,586	—	—	—	—	—

Conception Rates

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the rate of conceptions among under-16s for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Conception rates per thousand girls under 16 (England and Wales)

1982	7.8
1983	8.3
1984	8.6
1985	8.6

1987	9.3
1988	9.4
1989	9.4
1990	10.1
1991	9.3

The provisional figure for 1992 is broadly in line with the 1991 figure.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospitals, overall and by region, have been closed since 1979; and how many NHS hospitals there are at present.

Mr. Sackville: There are at present, depending on definition, 1,600 national health service hospitals in England. Information about the numbers of hospital closures since 1979 is not available centrally.

Consultants

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS consultant doctors currently opt for maximum part-time NHS contracts; and what is the average and median amount of hours per week that these consultants spend in their private practices.

Mr. Malone: At 30 September 1993, 28.7 per cent. of national health service hospital medical consultants in England were on maximum part-time contracts. Information is not available on the amount of hours per week that those consultants spend on private practice.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospital consultants also practise in the private sector of health-care.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Compulsory Registration (Care Workers)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to introduce a compulsory registration process for all paid care workers.

Mr. Bowis: Many people in the care professions already have to be registered with a professional organisation. Proposals for a general social services council have been submitted to the Government. These include a recommendation that all persons employed in the personal social services should be registered. We are considering these.

NHS Boards

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who appoints those individuals who have responsibility for interviewing and assessing the suitability of applicants for positions as non-executive members of NHS boards; and what criteria are used to select them.

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health appoints the chairmen of regional health authorities, who are responsible for making recommendations to Ministers on appointments in their region. Regional chairmen are appointed for their personal qualities, knowledge and skills.

Supplementary Medicine

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend statutory powers to require continuing professional development in medical and nursing professions to professions supplementary to medicine.

Mr. Sackville: We are considering the scope for a review of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960.

GP Lists (Patients' Removal)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were removed from general medical practitioners' lists in each year since 1989 (a) in total and (b) at the request of the doctor by regional health authority area.

Mr. Malone: Information is available only for 1992–93 and I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Minister for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), to the hon. Member for Ynys Mon (Mr. Jones) on 19 July 1994, Official Report, columns 367-68.

Medicines Expenditure

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of the statistical model used by her Department to forecast future expenditure on medicines.

Mr. Sackville: No. The details of the Department's spending models comprise an important strand of the Government's internal public expenditure discussions, informing but not determining decisions about public spending priorities. It would not be appropriate to publish this material.

Patients Charter

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what increased resources she has provided for the NHS to fulfil the standards and expectations raised by the patients charter.

Mr. Malone: The patients charter is about doing things differently, changing ineffective working practices, providing a more patient-orientated service and adopting good practice from elsewhere. This need not require additional resources. Funding for the national health service in 1995–96 will increase by £1.3 billion—that is 1 per cent. in real terms. In addition, we expect hospital and community services to improve efficiency by at least 3 per cent. which is equivalent to an extra £600 million for patient care. As a result patients will continue to receive improving standards of service across the whole of the NHS, including those set out in the patients charter.

Operations

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of operations carried out per NHS hospital surgeon per week.

Mr. Sackville: This cannot be determined from the data available. Information on the number of cases operated on in operating theatres in 1993–94 is available in "NHS operating theatres availability and use: England 1993–94", and the number of hospital medical staff at 30 September 1993 is available in the "Statistical Bulletin: Hospital, Public Health Medicine and Community Health Service Medical and Dental Staff in England 1983 to 1993". Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Asthma

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will commission a report into the level of asthma in rural areas; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to do so.

Waiting Times

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time it takes for a patient to be admitted on to a waiting list including time accounted for by self-deferral; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Data on the time to first appointment are collected. It is not possible to separate data relating to patients who have out-patient appointments and who are then put on to waiting lists for in-patient or day case treatment; nor does it include time elapsed as a result of self-deferral.

Cigarette Advertising

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the findings of a recent survey on the level of compliance with the voluntary agreement covering cigarette advertising at newsagents.

Mr. Sackville: As part of the 1991 voluntary agreement on tobacco products' advertising and promotion, the industry undertook to reduce the number of external permanent advertising signs for cigarette and hand-rolling tobacco brands at retail premises by 50 per cent. over five years. The committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship last year commissioned an independent survey to monitor the industry's progress in this undertaking in the year from July 1993. The findings of the survey will be announced in the committee's eighth report, which is expected to be published in summer 1995.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which she has knowledge any civil servants in her Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months she or any of her Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave him today.

Abortions

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest available data on the percentage of abortions which are funded by the national health service in each regional health authority area.

Mr. Sackville: The latest year for which the data requested are available is 1992.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities routinely carry out cervical smear tests every (a) two, (b) three, (c) four and (d) five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Dental Services

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many dentists were offering national health service treatment in September 1994;

(2) how many salaried dentists were employed by English family health service authorities in December 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 23 January 1995]: At 30 September 1994, excluding salaried dentists, there were 15,084 principal general dental practitioners on the dental lists of family health services authorities. Additionally, although not on family health services authority lists, there were 801 assistants and vocational trainees working under the supervision of a principal.

The number of salaried dentists employed by English family health services authorities is shown in the table.

[2] December data for 1994 are not available.

Dental Services

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many unfilled vacancies for salaried dentists there were in English family health service authorities in December 1994;

(2) how much was spent on providing the services of salaried dentists employed by English family health services authorities, including establishment costs for 1992–93, 1993–94 and to date in 1994–95; and if she will provide a breakdown of those costs.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 23 January 1995]: The information is shown in the table:

Expenditure on salaried dentists employed by English family health service authorities

		£ million
1992–93	Remuneration	1.805
	Expenses	0.594
	Total	2.399
1993–94	Remuneration	2.729

Notes:

1. The above figures show a gross expenditure by FHSAs for the provision of general dental services by salaried dentists and include National Insurance costs and superannuation contributions. These figures are reported by the FHSA through the financial information system.
2. Figures under the heading of expenses, including establishment costs.
3. Figures for 1994–95 are year to date to November.

The information on numbers of unfilled vacancies in December 1994 is not available centrally.

GP Surgeries

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the average value of capital projects (a) at general practitioner fundholders' surgery premises and (b) non-general practitioner fundholders' premises in each regional health authority area in each of the past three years;

(2) what estimate she has made of the average capital value of the surgery premises of (a) general practitioner fundholders and (b) non-fundholders and of any change in the average value of such premises since 1991; and if she will make it her policy to carry out a full valuation of all surgery premises at five-yearly intervals.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 23 January 1995]: General practitioners are independent self-employed contractors to the national health service. Under their terms of service, they are required to provide adequate practice premises from which to see their patients. The capital value of and investment in premises they own is a matter for them or the owners of any accommodation they rent.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been allocated to general practitioner fundholders for (a) computer hardware costs and (b) computer software costs in each of the last five years in each region.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 23 January 1995]: Family health services authorities are not allocated separate funds for general practitioner fundholder computers. Available information about expenditure is shown in the table. It is not possible to identify hardware and software costs.

EMPLOYMENT

Lambeth College

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department accepts responsibility for payments due from South Thames training and enterprise council to Lambeth college; and how much his Department estimates is due from the council to the college.

Mr. Paice: The Department is making payments for legitimate claims to providers, including Lambeth college, for training delivered under the terms of their contract with South Thames training and enterprise council between 7 November 1994 and 1 January 1995 for the following Government programmes: training for work, youth training/credits, careers and guidance years nine and 10, work-related further education, child care and careers libraries.

For the period of three months from the appointment of the receiver the Department will make available to the receiver sufficient funds to ensure that providers receive payments for training delivered by them under the terms of their contract with South Thames TEC for the same programmes.

The amount of money owed by South Thames TEC to Lambeth college prior to 7 November 1994 is a matter for the administrative receiver.

Integrated Regional Offices

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities on which the integrated regional offices are required to advise him on the allocation of resources and, for each integrated regional office, the annual expenditure on each programme;

(2) if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities which are administered by the integrated regional offices and, for each integrated regional office, the estimated annual expenditure on each of these responsibilities;

(3) if he will list those of his Department's responsibilities on which integrated regional offices are responsible for preparing, advising on or implementing regional policy.

Mr. Paice: Government offices for the regions are primarily concerned with delivering the Department's training, enterprise and education responsibilities. The estimated allocation of resources for the administration and the programmes delivered through the offices in 1994–95 is shown in the following tables:

Inward Investing Companies

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the British work force is employed by inward investing companies within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Oppenheim: In 1991, foreign owned firms accounted for 17 per cent. of manufacturing employment in the United Kingdom. The information is not available for the service sector.

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created by inward investing companies in the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Oppenheim: According to figures notified to the Department of Trade and Industry's Invest in Britain Bureau, 320,104 new jobs were created and 302,143 jobs were sustained in the United Kingdom as a result of inward investment for the financial years 1979–80 to 1993–94.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for how long the Child Support Agency has been logging telephone calls from clients.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 24 January 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency logging telephone calls.

The Agency has logged the number of calls received from clients since operations began in April 1993.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the CSA to terminate Mrs. Sandra Thurlbeck's (Ref. 1002139325) authority to act on her behalf in collecting maintenance.

Mr. Burt: I shall write to my hon. Friend separately.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals have been made to child support appeal tribunals since 1 April 1994; what is the total number of cases awaiting a Child Support Agency tribunal hearing; how many have been waiting more than three months; in how many of these cases the Child Support Agency has forwarded submissions; how many of these met the target of responding to the Independent Tribunal Service within 18 days; and what has been done since his answer of 17 May 1994; Official Report, column 440, to improve the success rate.

Mr. Burt: I am informed by his honour Judge Bassingthwaighte, the president of the Independent Tribunal Service, that since 1 April 1994 it has received, 4,876 appeals. At 31 December 1994, 4,337 were waiting to be heard. On these cases they have received 1,022 submissions: six within 18 days of lodgement. The information requested about the number which have been waiting over three months is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I am informed that the chief executive of the Child Support Agency set up a centralised appeals unit on 30 August 1994 as a measure to improve the production of submissions. Since then clearance rates have improved significantly.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many child support appeal tribunal hearings have been held since 1 April 1994, how many of these have been adjourned; in how many cases (a) the absent parent and (b) the parent with care attended; in how many one of the parties was represented; and in how many cases the child support officer's decision has been overturned.

Mr. Burt: I am informed by his honour Judge Bassingthwaighte, the president of the Independent Tribunal Service, that 1,446 cases have been heard since 1 April 1994 and of these 132 were adjourned. In 229 cases one of the parties was represented. In 614 instances the child support officer's decision was overturned. The information requested on the number of absent parents and parents with care who attended the hearings is not available. However I can inform the hon. Gentleman that the appellant attended 976 hearings and the other party attended on 378 occasions. Both the absent parent and the parent with care can appeal against a child support decision.

Family Credit

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents are in receipt of family credit child care disregard;

(2) what proportion of parents who are in receipt of family credit child care disregard receive (a) less than £10 per week, (b) £10 to £20 per week, (c) £20 to £30 per week and (d) more than £30 per week or the best available breakdown of the amount paid.

Mr. Roger Evans: In the three-month period to 31 December 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, 7,180 families received higher family credit awards as a result of the new help with child care charges. The amounts of additional family credit, and the proportion of families receiving these amounts, were as follows:

(a) 35 per cent. received less than £10 a week

(b) 27 per cent. received between £10 and £19.99

(c) 38 per cent. received between £20 to £28.00

The maximum extra help in family credit alone is £28 a week although families may benefit by up to £38.20 a week if they also receive housing benefit and council tax benefit.

Back-to-work Bonus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his most recent calculation on the financial consequences of the proposed back-to-work bonus.

Mr. Roger Evans: Our latest estimate of the financial implications of the back-to-work bonus is that the scheme will bring an estimated increase in benefit expenditure of around £20 million in 1996–97 and around £50 million in 1997–98. However, when behavioural effects are taken into account, the scheme is likely to be broadly cost neutral.

Notes:
1. Assumes 2.4 million unemployed.
2. Estimates rounded to nearest £10 million in cash prices.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost to the national insurance fund of all current holders of an APP who make no additional contributions with an annual income of

(a) £2,000 or below (b) up to £3,000, (c) up to £4,000, (d) up to £5,000, (e) up to £6,000, (f) up to £7,000, (g) up to £8,000, (h) up to £9,000 and (i) up to £10,000 opting back into SERPS.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total cost to date to the national insurance fund of national insurance rebates, tax relief and other incentives paid in respect of personal pensions contracted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of Tuesday 10 January to the hon. Member for Ealing, Southall (Mr. Khabra), Official Report, column 56.

There is no cost to the national insurance fund of tax relief as the fund is continually reimbursed by the Inland Revenue for any payments of tax relief. Total tax relief to appropriate personal pensions amounted to £0.8 billion up to and including 1992–93.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost to date to the national insurance fund of national insurance rebates, tax relief and other incentives paid in respect of personal pensions contracted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme of individuals with an annual income of (a) £2,000 or below (b) up to £3,000, (c) up to £4,000, (d) up to £5,000, (e) up to £6,000, (f) up to £7,000, (g) up to £8,000, (h) up to £9,000 and (i) up to £10,000.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is shown in the table.

Rebates and incentives for Personal Pension holders with earnings under (£ per annum)	Total up to and including 1991–92 GB, £ millions Cumulative by earnings
2,000	0
3,000	16

7,000	1,246
8,000	1,887
9,000	2,600
10,000	3,350

Notes:
1. Data is based on an analysis of a 1 per cent. sample of people who are recorded on the Department of Social Security national insurance recording system as contributing to an appropriate personal pension scheme.
2. The figures are for accruals of rebates and incentives up to and including 1991–92 which are normally paid in the next year. The figures are therefore comparable with figures for total payments up to and including 1992–93.
3. The cost of tax relief is not included as this is not a charge to the national insurance fund.
4. Earnings are used, as a breakdown by income is not available.

The following table shows estimates of tax relief.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made, following the recent appeal court judgment, of how many severely disabled people should have been receiving the premium between April 1988 and 1 December 1994, when the amending regulations were laid, but did not receive it; what steps are being taken to identify these people; and where the premium is now being awarded for the years in question, what policy he has with regard to suspending payment pending the appeal which he and the chief adjudication officer are seeking to bring to the House of Lords; and in how many cases a suspension has been imposed.

Mr. Roger Evans: The Court of Appeal decision given on 30 November 1994 resulted in entitlement to the severe disability premium being extended until the amendment regulation came into force on 2 December 1994. Consideration is still being given as to how the cases affected for these few days might be identified.

It is our practice to suspend payment in cases which are subject of an appeal to the courts, or in cases where benefit would be affected by the outcome of such an appeal. The number of cases in which payment of the severe disability premium has been suspended in these particular circumstances is not known.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently in receipt of the severe disability premium as part of income support.

Mr. Roger Evans: As of February 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, the total number of claimants whose income support entitlement included the severe disability premium was 184,000.

Source:
"Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry" February 1994—based on a 5 per cent. sample.

Note:
The figure has been rounded to the nearest thousand.

Jobseekers Bill

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of the provision of the Jobseekers Bill on the classification of unemployment benefit and analogous expenditure on income support into (a) planned expenditure and (b) cyclical expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Like the benefits which it is to replace, jobseeker's allowance will be, subject to passage of necessary legislation, cyclical social security expenditure.

WALES

Dental Services, Gwynedd

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what emergency provision there is for dental patients in Gwynedd who cannot get access to NHS dental treatment.

Mr. Richards: According to information supplied by the Gwynedd family health services authority, there are 11 emergency sessions each week, at various times, on most days, including weekends, in clinics throughout Gwynedd.

That authority is best placed to advise and assist patients who require emergency treatment. Patients can also be referred to the community dental service, which provides a "safety net" for those unable to obtain general dental services.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received during the past three months on the subject of dental service provision in Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Since 1 October 1994, 38 representations have been made on the subject of dental service provision in Gwynedd. During the same period, three questions have been asked in the House on the same subject.

I am aware that patients in Gwynedd who are not registered with a dentist may have difficulty in obtaining NHS treatment. I fully recognise the unsatisfactory situation in the county and officials are in frequent contact with the Gwynedd health authorities. I will continue to assist them in their efforts to find solutions.

Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of those now being taken on in Wales for training as qualified nurses come as graduate entrants; and if he will make a statement on the changing qualification patterns for nurses in Wales and its implications for recruitment in future.

Mr. Richards: The current proportion of graduate entrants to Project 2000 student nurses is approximately one to 12. It remains the responsibility of the United Kingdom Central Council, as the statutory body governing nurse registration, to ensure that nurse training is tailored to meet the requirements of the NHS. This is monitored in Wales by the Welsh National Board.

It was anticipated that the recent introduction of Project 2000–September 1991 in Wales—with its emphasis on a broader-based training would better meet the needs of patients. This diploma level qualification will be evaluated including the implications for recruitment.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that the forthcoming increase in nurses pay will not be financed by a reduction in the number of nurses employed in the NHS.

Mr. Richards: This is a matter for individual health authorities and NHS trusts to determine.

Police Funding

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the standard spending assessment proposed for the North Wales police authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received 67 written representations on the proposed standard spending assessment for North Wales police. On 20 December, my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones), the Under-Secretary, met a deputation from the police authority to discuss its concerns. I will announce my final settlement decisions shortly.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the consultation period for discussion on the standard spending assessment proposed for Welsh police authorities will expire.

Mr. Redwood: Formal consultation in respect of my provisional standard spending assessment and capping proposals for Welsh police authorities ended on 9 January. I am considering all the representations received and I will make my final settlement decisions shortly.

Training Providers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the companies in (a) Gwent and (b) the Islwyn constituency that facilitate the work of training and enterprise councils by being training providers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Gwent TEC has contracts with the following training providers who arrange placements for trainees in a wide range of companies across the country.

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the approximate average net profit for dairy farmers in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on incomes of full-time dairy farms and other farm types is collected in the farm business survey and published each year in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom". The latest edition, "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1992/93", shows estimates of several different measures of income for dairy farms in 1991–92 and 1992–93. Definitions of these income measures are contained in appendix 2.

To illustrate longer-term trends in incomes, index series are also given for net farm income, occupier's net income and cash income back to 1986–87—table 1.1 and appendix 1, tables 1 and 2—the earliest year for which data are available on a consistent basis.

"Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1993/94" will be published in the spring.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Redwood: CADW: Welsh Historic Monuments is the Welsh Office's sole wholly-owned, executive agency. The body's corporate identity was established in 1984 when it was launched as a discrete management unit in its own headquarters, where it remains. No additional costs arose in this area when the agency was vested in April 1991. However, four additional support staff were required. A uniform or protective clothing is provided for some staff, but no additional costs arose from agency status. A newsletter is provided for members of Heritage in Wales—a subscription scheme which allows admission to CADW sites without further charge. The agency does not provide executive cars.

Animal Diseases

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of sheep scab there were in each year since 1990 and in each month for 1994.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The total number of confirmed cases of sheep scab in Wales for the years 1990 to 1992 was as follows:

	Number
1990	9
1991	15
1992 (to 30 June)	14

The collation of official records on the number of outbreaks of sheep scab was discontinued after deregulation of compulsory controls in 1992.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out those matters in regard to environmental policy in Wales that are the responsibility of his Department and those which are primarily the responsibility of other Government Departments or non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Details of the Welsh Office's environmental policies and programmes and information on the environmental activities of its public bodies are given in the departmental report, Cm 2515, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Information on the environmental policy responsibilities of other Departments and their public bodies is similarly available in their reports.

Air Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he proposes to lessen air pollution in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: On 19 January, the Government published new proposals for improving air quality in the paper "Air Quality: Meeting the Challenge", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The measures detailed there will apply, as appropriate, in Wales as elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Council Tax

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average council tax for a band D house in (a) Alyn and Deeside district council and (b) Westminster.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The average band D council tax for 1994–95 in Alyn and Deeside is £385 and in Westminster £245. The value of properties in valuation band D ranges from £51,000 to £66,000 in Wales and from £68,000 to £88,000 in England.

Millennium Fund

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what projects under the control of his Department he will be applying for funds from the millennium fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 20 December by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage, which explains the relationship between Ministers, Departments and the lottery distributing bodies.

Fluoride

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to implement the recommendation of Health Promotion Wales to add fluoride as a supplement to Welsh water supplies.

Mr. Richards: None. This is a matter for local determination.

Through Ticketing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he will be making to the rail regulator concerning the future availability of through ticketing from railway stations in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Rail Regulator and Ministers are committed to continuing easy access to through ticketing for passengers. Ministers will consider carefully the Rail Regulator's decisions on ticketing obligations at railway stations after his wide-ranging consultations.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated number of (a) jobs lost and (b) new jobs created in each of the last five years for which figures are available for (i) each district council area in Wales and (ii) Wales as a whole.

Mr. Redwood: Comprehensive information on the number of jobs lost and created is not available. Information on employees in employment for district council areas is available from the 1989 and 1991 censuses of employment. Figures for Wales are available from the Employment Department's quarterly estimates series and are published in table 1.5 in the Employment Gazette. All these data are available from the NOMIS database which can be accessed by the staff of the Library of the House.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Redwood: Officials may receive representations about a variety of matters, but the information requested is not collected.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Redwood: My Ministers and I meet a wide range of people from many organisations at informal and official occasions.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the letter from the Under-Secretary of State for Employment to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West of 11 January, concerning outcomes-based funding of training and enterprise councils, if he will give details of the consultation exercise referred to as it applies in Wales; and which organisations in Wales have been consulted.

Mr. Redwood: My Department is currently in the process of consulting TECs in Wales on the prospective changes in the funding arrangements for training for work before the determination of contacts for 1995-96.

Mr. W. C. Powell

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans) of 7 January, concerning Mr. W. C. Powell, what proposals he has to issue new guidelines to require the participation of general fundholders in inquiries such as the one agreed with Mr. Powell.

Mr. Redwood: There are no plans to issue guidelines. Informal inquiries of the kind offered to Mr. W. C. Powell, do not include powers to compel the attendance of witnesses. There is no distinction to be drawn between fundholders and non-fundholders.

SCOTLAND

Higher and Further Education

18. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of students entering higher and further education in 1994–95.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of students who entered higher education in Scotland for the first time in 1994–95 is currently estimated to be 46,800.

Many FE students enter courses at different times or for studies of less than one academic year. The current estimate of the total number of students on all FE courses in 1994–95 is 169,200.

Poverty

19. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his best estimate of the number of people in Scotland living in poverty; what plans he has to reduce this figure; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics on patterns of household disposable income are provided in "Households Below Average Income 1979 to 1991–92", published in July last year. The best response to low household income is to sustain economic recovery and to assist those in greatest need. The Government's policies address both these aspects.

Nursing and Residential Homes

20. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to modify the rules governing the ownership and management of both nursing and residential homes for elderly citizens.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to modify the rules governing the ownership and management of nursing and residential care homes for the elderly. Officials are, however, reviewing the procedures and standards in both sectors.

Motorail Service

21. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effect on tourism of the proposals to terminate the motorail service and reduce sleeper services to Scotland; and when he was consulted on these matters.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for railways rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. However, I understand British Rail has yet to decide the future of these services in the light of the franchising director's decision not to include certain services in passenger service requirements.

Scottish Prison Officers Association

22. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish Prison Officers Association; what he discussed with them; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend last met representatives of the Scottish Prison Officers Association on 6 May 1994 when he met a delegation from the Scottish Prison Service trade union side.

The subjects discussed were the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, market testing and staff morale in the Scottish Prison Service.

Local Government Reorganisation

23. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further assessment he has made of the staff and other costs of work being undertaken by local authorities in preparing for the new authorities.

Mr. Stewart: I have nothing to add to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch), on 13 December 1994, Official Report, columns 595-96, which outlined his plans for funding the costs of local government reorganisation in 1995–96.

Local Government Expenditure

24. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from local authorities in Scotland on their spending plans.

Mr. Stewart: The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and some individual local authorities have made representations to my right hon. Friend about the level of the 1995–96 local government finance settlement and the implications for authorities' budgets.

Health Care, Lanarkshire

25. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chief executive of Lanarkshire health board to discuss the provision of health care in Lanarkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State regularly meets representatives from all health boards to discuss health issues.There are no immediate plans for a meeting with Lanarkshire health board.

Manufacturing Industry

26. Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet the chairman and chief executive of Scottish Enterprise National to discuss the state of manufacturing industry in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend regularly meets the chairman and chief executive of Scottish Enterprise. He has, however, no immediate plans for a meeting.

Floods, Strathclyde

27. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the recent floods in Strathcylde.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the replies to his parliamentary questions answered last week and to his recent meeting with my right hon. Friend and me.

29. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet Strathclyde regional councillors to discuss flood prevention.

Mr. Stewart: Although there are no such plans at present, my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for agriculture and the environment, who is responsible for flood prevention matters, would be willing to meet the hon. Gentleman together with representative Strathclyde councillors, if this would be helpful.

Proposed Bridge, Kelso

28. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will approve the financial consents necessary to enable Borders regional council to build a new bridge at Kelso.

Mr. Stewart: Final decisions have not yet been made about the distribution of roads and transport capital allocations for 1995–96. The case for a new Kelso bridge will be taken into consideration, along with other proposals, in setting the levels for individual councils.

Prison Cell Searches

30. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of prison cell searches.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E.W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Lady Olga Maitland, dated 25 January 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about what assessment has been made of the adequacy of prison cell searches.

Cell searches are an essential element in a range of security measures, which includes the use of drug detection dogs, closed visits, rub down and strip searches, to prevent the introduction of unauthorised and/or prohibited articles into prisons. A comprehensive set of guidelines on the safe custody of prisoners, including cell searches, was issued to all Governors-in-Charge of establishments in 1991. These are subject to continuous review.

In the year ended 31 March 1994, 2079 punishments against prison discipline were awarded by Governors to prisoners who either took or were found in possession of unauthorised or prohibited articles. We have no statistical information which would indicate how many of those offences against discipline were the result of cell searching, but Governors are aware of the importance of the security guidelines and of the need for cell searching to be properly carried out.

Rail Privatisation

31. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of rail privatisation upon the economy of the highlands and islands; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for railways rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. However, the Government believe that private sector involvement in the railways will benefit users and the economy as a whole.

Secondary Schools

32. Sir David Know: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent per pupil in secondary schools in Scotland in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what were the figures in 1978–79 at constant prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Current expenditure per secondary pupil in 1992–93 was 46 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1979. The latest figure is £2,914 per secondary pupil.

Details of budgeted school running costs per pupil for 1994–95, for individual primary and secondary schools in Scotland, were published last month and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Scottish Homes (Tenants)

33. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that tenants of Scottish Homes are entitled to remain with Scottish Homes if they vote against the takeover of a new landlord.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Disposal of housing stock by Scottish Homes must be in accordance with guidelines issued by my right hon. Friend which promote substantial safeguards for tenants. These provide that the majority view should prevail and all the tenants in a ballot area will transfer if a majority of those voting are in favour. Throughout the consultation process Scottish Homes emphasises to tenants the importance of casting a vote. My right hon. Friend has no plans to change these arrangements.

Forth Rail Bridge

34. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he is going to publish the results of the Scottish Office independent engineering and structural survey of the Forth rail bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such survey has been undertaken.

35. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the result of the meeting arranged by the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton) between Mr. Patrick Hetherington of the Scottish Office, Mr. Colin Aston and Mr. John Watson of Maid of the Forth in relation to metallic problems of the Forth rail bridge and of the subsequent inspection of the bridge by Mr. Hetherington in relation to bird remains, bird droppings in crevices and the non-function of lights installed by Scottish Power.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Inquiries are continuing and I shall write to the hon. Member when these are complete.

Bank Holidays

36. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he has taken to safeguard bank holidays in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The dates of bank holidays in Scotland are either defined in schedule 1 to the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971 or designated each year by royal proclamation under section 1(3) of the Act. There are no proposals at present to change these dates.

Rented Housing

37. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to increase the supply of affordable rented housing in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Our policy is to assist and enable provision of an adequate supply of housing, by monitoring housing supply and demand and encouraging housing agencies to identify and address local imbalances in the supply of housing.

Labour Statistics

38. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many men were in full-time jobs in Scotland (a) in June 1979 and (b) at present.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information on male full-time employment is not available for 1979. The total number of male employees, in June 1979, was 1,205,200. In June 1994, there were 972,800 male employees, of whom 876,300 were full-time. The total number of employees in June 1979 was 2,102,300, and in June 1994 was 1,963,600.

In comparison, the total civilian work force in employment fell by 29,600 over this period. This includes an increase of 76,900 in the number of self-employed and the introduction of the work-related Government training schemes.

NHS Waiting Lists

39. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the trend in national health service waiting lists in Scotland; and what comparable statistics he has on waiting lists elsewhere.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As the information requested is lengthy, I have arranged for a copy to be sent to the hon. Gentleman and for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Scottish Constitution

40. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what pamphlets or speeches he wrote or delivered in 1994 setting out his views on the Scottish constitution.

Mr. Lang: During 1994, my belief that Scotland's constitutional future lies firmly within the United Kingdom was expressed on many different occasions.

Barnacle Geese

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland further to his answer of 16 December 1994, Official Report, column 1055, if he will give details of the conditions attached to the licence issued to a farmer on Solway firth on 15 December 1994 for the killing of barnacle geese.

Sir Hector Monro: The current licence was issued on 11 November 1994. As the information requested is rather lengthy, I am arranging for a copy of the licence and guidance notes to be sent to the hon. Member and placed in the Library of the House.

NHS Trusts

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent by each hospital trust in Scotland on public relations for each year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally.

The Arts

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to fund overseas presentation of Scottish arts linked to efforts by Scottish businesses to win contracts.

Sir Hector Monro: None. Government support for overseas activities by arts organisations is primarily a matter for the British Council. The business sponsorship incentive scheme, which provides matching government funds for private sponsorship moneys, may also help.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to assist arts organisations to make themselves and their educational services known to individual schools and to the new unitary authorities.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish Office Education Department will draw the potential role of arts organisations in education to the attention of the new local authorities in a guidance circular on the arts to be issued later this year.

The Scottish Arts Council has identified education as a priority and has published a handbook "Now to Create: Arts and Education in Partnership", a copy of which has recently been sent to every school in Scotland, to every school board and to appropriate local authority officers.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase pupils' access to active participation in arts activities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: National guidelines on the expressive arts, issued in 1992, offer schools advice on art education for pupils aged five to 14. The guidelines cover art, drama and music, and place emphasis on the value of active participation. They set out attainment targets and programmes of study in which performance, participation and appreciation have a place. The arts community generally has welcomed this advice to schools.

Guidelines issued by the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum for pupils aged 14 to 18 also ensure that the arts have a secure place within the curriculum. Scottish Examination Board and Scottish Vocational Education Council courses and qualifications are available at standard grade, higher grade, certificate of sixth year studies and national certificate in the areas of music, drama and art. Within the higher still programme, a unified framework of study programmes and qualifications will be developed in these areas.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding is available to arts organisations to assist them with tourism-related projects.

Sir Hector Monro: Relevant financial assistance is available to arts organisations from the Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise networks, including the local enterprise companies, and the Scottish tourist board. The Scottish Arts Council has a general responsibility for funding and encouraging the arts in Scotland; in partnership with the Scottish tourist board and the Scottish Museums Council among other public sector organisations, the council is actively involved in various initiatives to develop arts-based tourism.

Tanker Terminals (Benzene Emmissions)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the levels of benzene emissions from tanker terminals in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: Benzene is a commodity chemical that has well-recognised toxic and carcinogenic properties and transfers of the chemical itself into tankers of all sorts are undertaken using closed vapour handling systems to prevent emissions leading to unacceptable exposures to the process operators.

Benzene is also a constituent of petrol and its precursor component mixtures. Vapours given off by such materials contain only very low concentrations of benzene which is vented along with the displacement gases during tanker loading. The implementation of the stage 1 petrol vapour recovery directive, formally adopted by the European Union in December 1994, and intended primarily to reduce emissions of ozone precursors, will see the progressive installation of closed vapour handling systems at all road, rail and inland waterway terminals. For shiploading terminals such as Hound point and Braefoot bay, the International Maritime Organisation is negotiating amendments to the MARPOL convention that, once implemented, will extend closed vapour handling systems to ships. An incidental benefit of these changes will be to reduce further the very low levels of benzene emissions arising currently during tanker loading.

Monitoring exercises in the Grangemouth area have detected benzene at levels consistently below 1 part per billion—14-day average. Some at least of this concentration can be attributed to tanker loading, but when compared with the 1ppb air quality target recommended by the expert panel on air quality standards, it is clear that the operation of the tanker terminals in the Grangemouth area has a negligible impact on air quality in that locality.

A recent monitoring exercise carried out around the Braefoot bay terminal during shiploading of natural gasoline, which contains low concentrations of benzene, and is used in petrol formulation, demonstrated that peak concentrations—eight-hour averages—in the Aberdour area were greater in numerical terms than the levels recommended by EPAQS for adoption as annual average air quality concentrations. The panel, in making its recommendation, noted that at concentrations occurring in the ambient atmosphere benzene does not have short-term, or acute, effects. In these circumstances, any carcinogenic effect is attributable to the total intake of the material over a lifetime and short-term peaks are of themselves of little import. Concentrations in the Aberdour area measured at times other than during shiploading of natural gasoline were found to be negligible.

Student Finance

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on guidelines on the award of bursaries and students by the new unitary authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The power to award bursaries to further education students is discretionary and it is for the authorities themselves to determine if and how these awards are to be made. Officials from the Scottish Office Education Department, COSLA, and the Employers Association for Further Education Colleges meet periodically to discuss the operation of the guidelines for existing education authorities. I expect such discussions to continue when the new authorities come into existence.

Homelessness

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the level of additional capital allocations to Scottish local authorities for projects for homelessness people in each of the past five years;

(2) what has been the level of direct Government subsidy to public bodies for tackling homelessness in Scotland in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Specific supplementary allocations totalling almost £30 million for homelessness projects have been issued to local authorities in each of the past four years as follows:

1991–92: £7.6 million
1992–93: £15 million
1993–94: £4.35 million
1994–95: £2.62 million

Since March 1993, homelessness has been designated as a national priority for housing investment and some local authorities also received an increase in their mainstream allocations for 1993–94 and 1994–95 based on the homelessness strategies included in their housing capital programmes.

Local social work authorities, new towns, Scottish Homes and health boards also make a contribution to tackling homelessness. Normally, neither mainstream capital allocations nor the substantial grants in aid or other direct central Government subsidies given to public bodies are earmarked for specific activities.

Exceptions to this relating to homelessness are:

	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Hostel housing support grant	1.4	1.3	1.4	1.6	1.6
Urban programme	0.8	0.8	0.9	1.1	1.1

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the age profile of emergency admissions recorded for each health board for the last five years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As the information requested is rather lengthy, I have arranged for copies of the age profiles to be placed in the Library of the House.

Dourine

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of dourine were reported in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro: No cases of dourine have ever been reported in Scotland.

Equine Infectious Anaemia

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of equine infectious anaemia there have been in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro: There have been no recorded cases of equine infectious anaemia in Scotland over this period.

Robes and Regalia

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy in respect of the availability for use on appropriate ceremonial occasions of robes and regalia used by office holders in the former Scottish boroughs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 January 1995]: Following local government reform in 1975, ownership of the former burgh councils' civic robes, insignia and so on, passed to the new district councils. However, entitlement to the wearing of robes requires royal approval. The design and use of coats of arms on chains of office and other insignia are matters for the Lord Lyon King of Arms.

Liver Transplants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many liver transplants were carried out in 1994.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 January 1995]: Thirty-one liver transplants were carried out in 1994.

DEFENCE

Gulf War

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what triggered the nerve agent immobilised alarm detectors alarms on the night of 20–21 January 1991 during Operation Granby.

Mr. Soames: We have found no record of such an incident. There are, however records of an incident in the Al Jubayl area on 19 January 1991 when chemical agent monitor—CAM—and residual vapour detector—RVD—indicated the presence of blister agent—mustard. Nerve agent immobilised enzyme alarm and detector—NAIAD—did not respond, however, thus ruling out the presence of nerve agent.

An immediate follow up by explosive ordnance device—EOD—and chemical reconnaissance teams failed to find any evidence of chemical attack, which if it had taken place, would have included ground contamination, blister is a persistent agent, and weapon debris.

The identity of the compounds which caused the CAM and RVD to alarm on 19 January 1991 is therefore not known. It was assessed that the most likely cause of the incident was a damaged aircraft jettisoning JP4 fuel which is consistent with reports of air activity at the time.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the administration of nerve agent pre-treatment set, anthrax and plague inoculations would normally require a medical consultation with the patient to determine whether there are counter indications; to what extent these drugs were administered to military personnel involved in the Gulf war without such consultation; and for what reasons.

Mr. Soames: Standard peacetime medical practice is for consent to be obtained before immunisation with any vaccine. Specific details of anti-biological warfare medical counter-measures employed by British forces remain classified. However, in Operation Granby it was policy for vaccines against those biological agents identified as a threat to be made available to service personnel on the standard basis of informed consent. This entailed informing service personnel of the vaccines they were receiving, their purpose and their possible side effects. In the operational circumstances pertaining in the Gulf it is not possible to guarantee that this policy was universally adhered to.

Standard text books on immunisation detail no specific contraindications for the anti-biological warfare vaccines used during Operation Granby.

The universal and regular basis on which the nerve agent pre-treatment set—NAPS—has to be taken do not allow for individual medical consultation. However NAPS is a licensed drug and the safety and efficacy of its active ingredient, pyridostigmine bromide, in giving protection against chemical warfare agents is internationally medically recognised.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when personnel at Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, acknowledged that chemical detectors, nerve agent immobilised alarm detectors and chemical agent monitors, could be activated by substances other than the toxic chemicals they were designed to detect; and by what means military personnel involved in Operation Granby were expected to know when they should use their personal protective equipment;

(2) when a copy of the report by Major John Watkinson, the Officer Commanding 21 EOD squadron, was received by Major Parsons of M.O.1/MoD UK Army and Mr. P. Hearn of Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down; and when the memorandum written by Captain Michael Johnson, Commander of the US 54 Chemical Troop, dated 4 January 1994, was seen by MoD officials;

(3) what assessment the MoD has made of the availability of the plague and anthrax vaccines; and what are their common applications.

Mr. Soames: These are matters for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham S. Pearson to Mr. Peter Robinson, dated 25 January 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when personnel at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, acknowledged that chemical detectors (NAIAD and CAM) could be activated by substances other than the toxic chemicals they were designed to detect, and by what means military personnel involved in Operation GRANBY were expected to know when they should use their personnel protective equipment has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the British Armed Forces have the most effective protective measures possible against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The staff of the Chemical and Biological Establishment have long recognised that any detection system for chemical warfare agents needs to have appropriate sensitivity and selectivity so as to respond to the chemical warfare agents and to minimise false alarms. The principal route by which chemical warfare agents attack the body is through the respiratory tract although some agents such as mustard and some nerve agents are percutaneously active. The aim in designing an effective detector is to obtain sufficient specificity without reducing sensitivity to a level in which personnel would be exposed to a harmful concentration prior to the detector responding.

4. The British chemical agent detectors such as NAIAD and CAM are designed to be highly specific whilst having a sufficient sensitivity to ensure that those utilising such detectors receive a warning from the detector before they inhale a harmful concentration of chemical warfare agent. Although they like all other chemical warfare agent detectors can respond to substances other than chemical warfare agents, it is important to recognise that these other substances are very unlikely to be present on the battlefield in concentrations sufficient to produce an alarm. In practice, the use of more than one type of detector reduces the chance of possible false alarms whilst retaining an undiminished capability for the detection of chemical warfare agents.

5. Consequently, British Service personnel serving in Operation GRANBY donned their personal protective equipment when they were judged to be under a possible chemical warfare attack. This is known as the Immediate Action Drill and is designed to ensure that Service personnel are protected should they be subjected to an attack in which chemical weapons may be used. Likewise, if a chemical detector such as NAIAD or CAM alarms then full protective equipment is donned. The information relating to the possible attack is then passed to the next high level of command at which a judgement will be made as to whether chemical warfare agents have indeed been used in such an attack. Such a judgement would take into account whether other techniques for detection and monitoring of chemical warfare agents have indicated the presence of a chemical warfare agent or not. The equipment provided to the British Armed Forces to detect and monitor chemical warfare agents is highly effective and is second to none.

Letter from Graham S. Pearson to Mr. Peter Robinson, dated 25 January 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when a copy of the report by Major John Watkinson, the Officer Commanding 21 EOD Squadron, was received by Major Parsons of M.O.1/MOD UK Army and Mr. P. Hearn of CBDE Porton Down; and when the memorandum written by Captain Michael Johnson, Commander of the US 54th Chemical Troop, dated 4 January 1994, was seen by MOD officials has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The report by 21st EOD Squadron was received in MOD in August 1991 and, in accordance with its recommendations, samples collected in Kuwait City were provided to CBDE Porton Down for analysis.

4. A subsequent note from CBDE Porton Down to the Ministry of Defence dated 23 August 1991, prior to the receipt of the samples, stated that the brown fumes associated with the material, the destruction of the NBC suit material and the burns produced on skin suggests that the material may be fuming nitric acid, a highly corrosive oxidising acid which may be used as a rocket propellant. The damage to the NBC suit material and the brown fumes showed that the material was not liquid mustard.

5. The CBDE analytical report dated 24 September 1991 showed that the samples had a definite yellow/brown colour compared to the original white of the resin and were labelled Sample 1 dated 10 August 1991 and Sample 3 dated 10 August 1991. Analytical results showed that there was a high concentration of nitrate in the sample and a pH that was extremely acidic. Extraction of the resin with dichloromethane and analysis by gas chromatography/mass spectrometry showed the presence of no material of CW interest. The samples were entirely consistent with the contents of the tank being nitric acid and there was no evidence of any CW agent being present.

6. There is no record of a copy of the memorandum by Captain Michael Johnson of the US Army having been received by MOD officials.

Letter from Graham S. Pearson to Mr. Peter Robinson, dated 25 January 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what assessment the MOD has made of the availability of the plague and anthrax vaccines, and what are their common applications has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the British Armed Forces have the most effective protective measures possible against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare is assessed and the effectiveness of medical countermeasures evaluated.

3. As part of this work, the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment carry out a continuing assessment of the availability and effectiveness of vaccines. Plague and anthrax vaccines are available from a number of countries which include the following:

(a) Plague. This is available from Greer Laboratories in the United States of America and the Commonwealth Serum Laboratories in Australia.

(b) Anthrax. This is available from the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research at Porton Down and the Michigan Department of Public Health in the United States of America.

These vaccines are produced to protect individuals at risk from the respective diseases; these include persons working with these microorganisms in laboratories and the pharmaceutical industry or at risk from the natural occurrence of the disease.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if plague vaccine used during Operation Granby was obtained on a named-patient basis.

Mr. Soames: Details of the specific medical countermeasures employed by British forces against the potential biological warfare threat during Operation Granby remain classified. All vaccines administered to British forces in Operation Granby were offered on the basis of voluntary informed consent. Any vaccines without a United Kingdom product licence were licenced in their country of origin, fully tested in the United Kingdom and cleared for use.

Pyridostigmine Bromide

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if licence No. 4537/0003 for pyridostigmine bromide, 30mg, granted to the MOD by the Medicines Control Agency governs (a) by whom the drug is supplied and (b) the chemical make up of the drug.

Mr. Soames: Yes. The licence specifies the manufacturer of the active substance as Raschig AG, Germany, and of the finished product as Duphar BV, Holland. The active constituent of the product is listed as pyridostigmine bromide and the other constituents are: pregelatinised starch, maize starch, lactose, colloidal silicon dioxide, talc and magnesium stearate.

Atomic Energy Co-operation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information Her Majesty's Government have received as to the disposition of plutonium sent to the United States under the 1959 amendment to the Anglo-American mutual defence agreement on atomic energy co-operation of 1958, Cmnd 859; and whether all plutonium sent to the United States under this agreement since 1965 was transacted under the barter arrangement.

Mr. Freeman: The disposition of plutonium supplied to the United States under the 1958 agreement is a matter for the United States Government. However, the United States Government gave an assurance in 1964 that plutonium originating from United Kingdom civil reactors would not be used in their weapons programme.

Most plutonium supplied to the United States under the 1958 agreement has been transferred under barter arrangements. However, some plutonium has also been transferred under separate loan arrangements.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what costs are expected to be incurred through the Atomic Control Office in implementing the 10-year extension to the 1958 United States-United Kingdom mutual defence agreement on atomic energy matter, Cm 2686.

Mr. Freeman: The articles of the 1958 mutual defence agreement that were recently amended have little bearing on the work load of the atomic control office, London. The additional costs that will fall to this office as a result of the amendment will therefore be negligible.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out details of the nuclear materials accounting and central arrangements to which the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis) made reference in the Official Report, 15 December 1994, column 1237.

Mr. Freeman: These arrangements involve bookkeeping and auditing systems, similar to those in the civil nuclear industry, to control and monitor movements and inventories of nuclear materials. For reasons of security, it is not our practice to reveal further details of such arrangements.

British Troops (Gorazde)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of British troops in the Bosnian enclave of Gorazde; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: British troops in Gorazde are making a very effective and highly valued contribution to UNPROFOR's efforts to stabilise the situation on the ground and to assist in the delivery of humanitarian aid to the enclave. One of their current priorities is to facilitate the implementation of the four month cessation of hostilities agreement which came into effect on 1 January 1995.

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what date the staff council was first elected at International Military Services Ltd.; and if it is his general policy to encourage such staff councils.

Mr. Freeman: The MOD's support for staff councils is demonstrated through the long-standing Whitley council arrangements which have existed in their present form since 1956.

The staff of International Military Services Ltd., who were not civil servants, were not covered by the MOD Whitley councils. As a private company, International Military Services made its own arrangements for staff representation. The Ministry of Defence played no part in these arrangements.

Nuclear Co-operation Agreement

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what joint actions are being taken in pursuit of the Anglo-French nuclear co-operation agreement.

Mr. Soames: There is no such agreement. We are, however, developing contacts on defence nuclear matters with France in a number of ways, including the Franco-British joint commission on nuclear policy and doctrine. The work of the commission has shown an identity of approach between the UK and France on fundamental policy issues. The detail of this work is, of course, confidential between the two Governments.

Joint Services Command

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many acres of land are currently occupied by the Army Command and staff college at Camberley.

Mr. Soames: The staff college at Camberley occupies an enclave within the site of the Royal military academy, Sandhurst. The overall size of the site, including the married quarters, is some 883 acres. In addition, a training area serving the staff college and the academy occupies a further 1,176 acres.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer today from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Combined Cadet Force

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent in 1993–94 to support the Combined Cadet Force in schools; what schools received support; and what was the amount awarded to each school.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) deaths and (b) serious injuries were caused to pupils taking part in Combined Cadet Force activities in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: Available records show that between January 1990 and December 1994 there were no deaths or serious injuries sustained by members of the Combined Cadet Force which were attributable to cadet activities.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of running the Defence Export Services Organisation; and how many people were employed (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Numbers employed by DESO:

1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
541	626	662	673	708
			[1]523	[1]542
			[2]150	[2]166

[1] UK based.
[2] Overseas.

Information relating to the breakdown between United Kingdom-based and overseas posts is not available prior to financial year 1993–94. The net cost of the organisation in 1993–94 was £16.02 million. Changes in accounting conventions make exact comparisons difficult with earlier years.

Equipment (Exports)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of exports of United Kingdom military equipment to (a) all countries and (b) developing countries for each of the last five years in (i) cash prices and (ii) constant prices.

Mr. Freeman: Details of the value of exports of defence equipment by geographic region are contained in table 1.1 of "UK Defence Statistics". A copy of the 1994 edition has been placed in the House Library. The figures are published at current prices. There is insufficient data on the prices of such goods to enable satisfactory estimates to be made of defence exports at constant prices.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what deliveries of United Kingdom manufactured arms to Nigeria have taken place since December 1993.

Mr. Freeman: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to publish details of individual exports.

United States Bases

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the answer of 19 January, what jurisdiction the Visiting Forces Act 1952 gives to American military personnel to take action against those entering bases to make a peaceful protest; to what extent the powers exceed those of the Ministry of Defence Police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Visiting Forces Act 1952 does not give United States service personnel jurisdiction to take action against United Kingdom citizens. In accordance with article VII of the NATO status of forces agreement, however, the United States visiting forces are entitled to police premises made available to them in the United Kingdom and, with due regard to United Kingdom law, to take all appropriate measures to ensure the maintenance of order and security on such premises.

United States service personnel do not have more legal powers over United Kingdom citizens in this country than the Ministry of Defence police.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what was the sortie mission, operational height and actual height of the military jet aircraft that overflew the village of Clayton-with-Frickley in South Yorkshire at approximately 09.32 hours on 12 January; if the sortie transgressed the low flying transit area in that locality; what airfield the aircraft took off from; where it landed at the end of its sortie; at which squadron or unit it was based; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A Tornado aircraft from the Standards Squadron at RAF Cottesmore overflew the village at approximately the time indicated. The aircraft, which was on a routine low flying training sortie; took off from and landed at RAF Cottesmore. We have no reason to believe the aircraft flew below the permitted height of 1000 ft within the low flying transit area.

DEFENCE

HMS Victorious

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reasons for the failure of the launch of HMS Victorious Trident submarine at Barrow-in-Furness.

Mr. Soames: HMS Victorious' departure from Barrow-in-Furness, scheduled for Sunday 15 January, was delayed for two days due to bad weather. A combination of restricted visibility and heavy sea swell meant that the safe passage of the submarine through the shallow and extremely narrow channels at Barrow could not be assured. HMS Victorious was accepted at sea by the Royal Navy yesterday.

Trident

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the cost of the Trident programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The current estimate of the total project cost of the Trident programme is £11,682 million, if all expenditure, including payments already made, is brought up to current prices and a common exchange rate of £1 = $1.48, as assumed in the long-term costing of the defence programme. If payments already made are expressed at the prices and exchange rates actually incurred, the equivalent estimate is now £9,770 million. Expenditure on the Trident programme to 31 October 1994 represented some 78 per cent. of the overall hybrid estimate.

After allowing for the effects of inflation and exchange rate variations, the revised estimate of £11,682 million represents a real cost reduction of £211 million compared with that announced last year. The increase in cash terms is £51 million. The reduction in real terms since the original 1982 Trident II estimate, including the savings resulting from the decision to have United Kingdom missiles processed at the United States facility at Kings bay, Georgia, now stands at some £3.7 billion.

The proportion of the estimate for work undertaken in the United Kingdom has increased from 70 per cent. to 71 per cent., reflecting the effects of the change in exchange rate, price base and volume changes in the year.

I am pleased to confirm that HMS Vanguard entered operational service in December 1994, achieving the in-service date set when the decision to purchase Trident II was taken in 1982, and that the remainder of the Trident programme remains on schedule. I am, as in previous years, sending to the Chairmen of the Public Accounts Committee and of the Select Committee on Defence a more detailed report on the programme. I am also placing a copy of this report in the Library of the House.

Defence Agency

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Defence Agency status for the defence dental services and the defence medical supply organisation.

Mr. Soames: Following my announcement in the House on 8 December, in which I confirmed the recommendations made by the "Front Line First" medical study, it has been decided that, in addition to the defence dental services, the defence medical supply organisation is also to be considered as a candidate for agency status under the next steps procedure. An entry to this effect will appear in the February 1995 market testing bulletin and I should welcome comments from interested parties. These should be sent by 10 March either to Air Vice-Marshal J. Mackey RAF, director defence dental services, Ministry of Defence, room 102 Lacon house, Theobalds road, London WC1X 8RY in respect of comments on the Defence Dental Care Agency; or to Mr. G.R. North, deputy director of medical supply, Ministry of Defence, room 134, Lacon house, Theobalds road, London WC1X 8RY in respect of the Defence Health Care Supplies Agency.

Support Vehicles

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about progress in encouraging private sector involvement in the financing, acquisition, management and operation of support vehicles for the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: Very good progress has been made. A study team is considering a range of possibilities and is consulting widely in the private sector. Over 175 companies have expressed an interest. Yesterday my Department held a very successful briefing seminar for the private sector at Aldershot. The private sector has been asked for proposals, to include radical and innovative ideas, and we will be evaluating these in the coming weeks. We expect to be able to announce the selection of contractors for a number of pilot schemes by the end of this year.

Gulf War

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many British service personnel involved in the Gulf war were administered with the combination of vaccines for anthrax, plague and nerve agent pre-treatment sets;

(2) how many servicemen refused to be administered with drugs and vaccines during Operation Granby.

Mr. Soames: Details relating to biological warfare counter-measures available to British forces remain classified. The nerve agent pre-treatment set—NAPS—tablets were widely issued to British service personnel in areas and units judged to be under threat of chemical attack during Operation Granby. Taking NAPS is a personal responsibility and no information is available on the numbers of personnel, if any, who did not do so.

Junior Medical Officers (RAF)

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the course requirements for junior doctors entering the RAF as junior medical officers in 1989.

Mr. Soames: The course requirements for junior doctors entering the RAF as junior medical officers in 1989 were:

a. Officer training at RAF Cranwell.
b. Initial medical officer training (administration).
c. Initial medical officer training (aviation medicine).

Bullying

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps is he taking to counter bullying among members of the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: My Department takes a very serious view of bullying and it has been made clear throughout the services that such behaviour will not be tolerated.

Measures taken to counter bullying include the publication in July 1994 of the Navy's policy throughout the fleet to remind all ranks that there is an effective policy to deal with bullying. Officers and senior ratings were advised to be alert to the possibility of bullying, and victims were reminded of their rights of complaint.

The Army has banned initiation ceremonies and has established additional posts in its training organisations to allow officers and non-commissioned officers to devote more time to their supervisory role. In 1993, the Army published a discipline and standards paper which included instructions to counter bullying.

The Royal Air Force published a policy letter on bullying and initiation ceremonies in 1989, and similar letters were published in 1992 and 1994. The Royal Air Force produces orders to be read and signed annually by officers and non-commissioned officers which specifically cover bullying. The Royal Air Force's policy on bullying and initiation ceremonies is repeated in quarterly standing orders which all personnel are required to read.

Planned Air Displays

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration underlay the decision to post key members who have planned past RAF premier air displays at Royal Air Force Finningley to Royal Air Force Waddington for a planned air display there on 1 and 2 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Preliminary plans drawn up for the purposes of consultation show that, should the decision be taken to close RAF Finningley following formal consultation, the station would not be capable of mounting a major air show in 1995. As the planning period for the air show is lengthy and complex it was decided, after careful consideration, that the air show should, for this year at least, relocate to RAF Waddington to ensure its continuance in the event of the decision being taken to close RAF Finningley. Two experienced staff from RAF Finningley have transferred to RAF Waddington, which has little experience of mounting such a complex event, to assist in the organisation of this year's show.

Market Testing

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all of his Department's medical and health services which (a) have been or (b) are intended to be market tested; and if he will indicate the outcomes of market testing in those cases where the exercise has been completed.

Mr. Soames: At this stage a number of medical and health services are being considered for competition but none is yet completed. The Department is currently involved in garrison market tests which include health services at Catterick, Aldershot, Salisbury Plain and Colchester and of all primary and secondary health services in British forces, Germany, with the exception of the provision of primary medical and dental care at RAF main operating bases—RAF Bruggen and RAF Laarbruch—and certain other locations remote from the main garrisons. Operational Army medical units are also excluded from the exercise.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the timetable for market testing the services provided by the RAF hospital at Wegberg, Germany.

Mr. Soames: The Department is currently in the process of market testing the provision of health services in Germany, including those provided by the RAF hospital at Wegberg, and hopes to make an announcement on the outcome of this exercise by 31 July 1995.

Security

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the use of serving military personnel to provide security for private military, security and police exhibitions or conferences.

Mr. Soames: On occasion, service personnel may be provided to outside bodies or organisations on loan, to perform a variety of tasks. This is normally on the basis of full recovery of all the relevant costs involved. Service personnel are not normally provided for security duties at private military, security or police exhibitions and conferences.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the use of serving military personnel to provide security at the recent covert and operation procurement exhibition centre held at Sandown exhibition centre in November 1994; and what costs have been reimbursed by the exhibition organisers to his Department for security provided.

Mr. Soames: I am not aware that any serving military personnel were employed on security duties at the covert and operational procurement exhibition held at the Sandown exhibition centre in November 1994.

Electro-shock Devices

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision or training in the use of electro-shock devices is made in respect of (a) his Department, (b) the Army, and (c) special forces; and what guidelines control the deployment and use of such devices.

Mr. Soames: None.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information his Department has in respect of the sale or arrangement of sale of any form of electro-shock weapon or equipment from the United Kingdom to a Gulf state in the last 13 years; and if he will supply details of such transactions.

Mr. Freeman: I am not aware that my Department has any such information.

Aurora Prototype Aircraft

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Aurora prototype aircraft of the United States air force are based at the Machrihanish air force base in Argyll; and for what period permission has been given for basing these aircraft in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: There are no United States air force prototype aircraft based at RAF Machrihanish and no authorisation has been given by Her Majesty's Government to the United States air force, or any other US body, to operate such aircraft within or from the United Kingdom.

Joint Services Command

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis he formed the views expressed in paragraph 10g of his consultation paper on the proposed joint services command and staff college about the respective merits of Camberley, Greenwich and Bracknell in respect of (a) local schools, (b) medical care, (c) provision for overseas students, (d) shopping and (e) other facilities.

Mr. Soames: The basis for paragraph 10g of the consultative document was consideration of the provision of domestic support to the families of students at the proposed joint services command and staff college. The availability of common facilities which can be used by a large proportion of the students' families would help in establishing a sense of community within both the college and its associated married quarters. This would be of particular benefit to the families of overseas students.

As explained in paragraph 10f of the consultative document, the married quarters serving Bracknell and Camberley are compact and relatively close to the colleges themselves and the extensive nearby facilities. By contrast, the married quarters serving Greenwich are dispersed and some distance from the college itself; the likelihood of families benefiting from common local facilities is therefore much lower.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report from Building Design Partnership on the refurbishment costs and implications of works at Greenwich necessary to accommodate the proposed joint services command and staff college.

Mr. Soames: The Building Design Partnership option study report into the siting of a joint services command and staff college contains both information that is classified and which comprises advice to Ministers. It would therefore be inappropriate to place a copy in the Library of the House.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in undertaking the financial appraisal of options for the proposed joint services command and staff college, what assumption was made about the sale value of the Camberley site; and what figure has been included for this in the estimated costs of locating the college at Greenwich.

Mr. Soames: This information is commercially confidential.

Amport House

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the sale of Amport house.

Mr. Soames: We announced, as part of the defence costs study our intention to form a tri-service chaplains' school. A study is at present under way to determine the location of the school, and Amport house is one of the sites under consideration. No decisions have yet been made. If Amport house was not selected as the site for the school, and no alternative defence uses were identified for it, our intention would be to sell it on the open market in the normal way.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions and measures his Department has implemented in support of article 1 of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Soames: The nuclear non-proliferation treaty is the cornerstone of international efforts to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons. My Department fully complies with the terms of article 1 of the NPT and works closely with other Government Departments to enforce export licensing procedures. This includes contributing to the work of the Zangger committee and the nuclear suppliers group.

Firearms (Trade Missions)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information his Department has in respect of and in what ways it is supporting trade missions to Latin American countries in January and February; what is the involvement of such trade missions in the sale or arrangement for sale of items classified under section 5 (1) (b) of the Firearms Act 1968; and if he will list the items which are so classified.

Mr. Freeman: There are no Ministry of Defence supported trade missions visiting Latin America in January or February 1995.

Tugboat Rotesand

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his Department's decision to engage the tugboat Rotesand for use at Devonport in Plymouth.

Mr. Freeman: The tug Rotesand was chartered to provide assured continuity of in-port services at Devonport during a period when two Devonport-based tugs of the Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service were deployed to Barrow-in-Furness to assist the departure of HMS Victorious. The Rotesand was chartered on the open market and was the cheapest suitable tug available. The charter was originally for one week from 10 January but this was extended to 27 January after severe weather prevented the timely return of the RMAS tugs to Devonport.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work has been undertaken by the tugboat Rotesand since its arrival at Plymouth; and how many times it has been used.

Mr. Freeman: The tug Rotesand assisted HMS Westminster into port on 12 January. For the rest of the charter period it provided emergency cover for the safety of vessels at Devonport.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total cost to his Department of hiring the tugboat Rotesand for use at Devonport in Plymouth; and if he will provide a breakdown of the costs.

Mr. Freeman: The charter costs are commercially confidential.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with the chief executive of the Atomic Weapons Establishment concerning the diversification of AWE Cardiff into production outside nuclear warhead production; and what efforts have been made in this regard.

Mr. Freeman: There have been continuing discussions between my Department and the managing contractor about diversification of work at the AWE Cardiff site, and my Department remains prepared to consider proposals for alternative work there.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Government are yet in a position to respond to consultation on the White Paper, "The Civil Service, Continuity and Change", CM 2627, and to the fifth report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, Session 1993–94, on the role of the civil service, HC 27; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to introduce a code of ethics concerning the operation of the civil service.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government are publishing today a Command Paper, Cm 2748, taking forward the policies on the civil service set out in last July's White Paper "The Civil Service: Continuity and Change", Cm 2627. The command paper incorporates the Government's response to the fifth report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, "The Role of the Civil Service", HC(1992–94). It also takes account of other responses to the invitation to comment on the proposals in "Continuity and Change". Comments were received from 50 individuals and organisations. Copies of the responses where confidentiality was not requested have been placed in the Library of the House.

In "Continuity and Change", the Government re-affirmed their commitment to the maintenance of a permanent civil service, based on the values of integrity, political impartiality, objectivity, selection and promotion on merit and accountability through Ministers to Parliament. This commitment has been widely welcomed—and was equally emphasised by the Select Committee in its report. The Government also welcome the Select Committee's belief that > "the commitment of the overwhelming majority of civil servants to the principle and practice of a politically impartial Civil Service is undiminished".

The Command Paper announces further measures to underpin these values.

The Government have accepted the Select Committee's recommendation for a new civil service code, to apply to all civil servants and summarising the constitutional framework within which civil servants work and the values they are expected to uphold. A draft code, suggesting the changes which the Government think necessary to the text proposed by the Select Committee, with an associated commentary, is published in the Command Paper as a basis for further consultation. The proposed code incorporates, as recommended by the Select Committee, a new independent line of appeal to the civil service commissioners in cases of alleged breaches of the code or issues of conscience which cannot be resolved through internal procedures.

The Government also intend to enhance the role of the civil service commissioners as guardians of the principle of selection on merit. They will be responsible for the interpretation of the principles of fair and open competition on merit for all civil service recruitment. The commissioners will be responsible for approving all appointments from outside the civil service to the new senior civil service; and the next first civil service commissioner is to be given a new role in monitoring senior internal appointments. Consequently he or she will not hold the post as a serving civil servant.

The Command Paper re-emphasises the Government's commitment to maintaining the civil service as a good employer, ensuring equality of opportunity, maintaining a predominantly career civil service, and to the training and development of all staff. It also confirms the Government's intention to proceed with the other approaches set out in "Continuity and Change" to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the civil service, including the delegation of pay and grading below senior levels to Department, and the introduction of efficiency plans in place of the centrally-driven "Competing for Quality" programme; to establish the proposed new senior civil service; to carry out senior management reviews in all Departments to introduce new pay arrangements for the senior civil service, including permanent secretaries; and to introduce contracts for all senior civil servants.

The Government are also publishing today detailed responses to the "Review of Recruitment Responsibilities" and the "Review of Fast Stream Training" which were published in parallel with Cm 2627. Copies of the responses have been placed in the Library of the House.

The command paper charts a clear course for the civil service. The Government believe that Parliament, the public and particularly the civil service itself should be encouraged by the degree of agreement on the way forward, reflected in the very considerable sharing of views on key issues between the Government and the Select Committee, as well as by those who have given evidence to the Select Committee and have commented on the White Paper. There is wide recognition of the work of the civil service, the values it upholds and the progress it has made in improving the effectiveness and efficiency of the services it provides. This offers an excellent foundation on which to move ahead.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. David Hunt: I am responsible for six agencies: Her Majesty's Stationery Office, Central Office of Information, Chessington Computer Centre (Chessington), Civil Service College, Occupational Health Service and Recruitment and Assessment Services. The details requested concern mostly operational matters and I have asked the chief executives to reply directly.

HMSO and COI are individual departments as well as being agencies. They already had their own headquarters and were self-contained for support staff.

The other agencies are parts of the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and Science. All had their own headquarters buildings and were self contained for support services or very nearly so. Four additional support posts were created when they were launched as agencies. Since that time there have been further changes in the agencies to reflect levels of business and efficiency and productivity gains.

Within the Cabinet Office, excluding the agencies, there are now 25 fewer support staff than immediately prior to the launch of the first OPSS agency in 1989.

Letter from E. C. McCloy to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 26 January 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science (Mr. Robert Hughes) has asked me to provide, for my Agency, the information requested in your Parliamentary Question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster about certain costs which might have been incurred by his Executive Agencies.

Since its inception in 1986, the structure and organisation of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service (OHS) has undergone little change. Between 1986 and 1990, when OHS achieved Agency status, it functioned as a free-standing unit within the Cabinet Office (Office of the Minister for the Civil Service). In 1989, the Headquarters was transferred from London to our present offices in Edinburgh as part of the government's programme of dispersal of Civil Service jobs. No additional costs were incurred resulting from the change.

Since 1990 the only addition to our support staff numbers has been the equivalent of one Executive Officer post which was added to our strength to take over accommodation and general support duties which had previously been undertaken by the Cabinet Office.

There are two or three editions, in each year, of a journal called "Health at Work" which is aimed at promoting health and safety within the Civil Service. The cost of each edition is approximately £9,000. "Health at Work" replaced previous journals which had been published before we attained Agency status.

Our logo was designed in 1987 before we became an Agency and our headed stationery also dates from that time.

We have no executive cars or corporate clothing.

Letter from Michael D. Geddes to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

There are two areas of the question that apply to Recruitment and Assessment Services (RAS).

In 1991 RAS paid a one-off sum of £20,000 to produce a corporate image for the Agency. This included choosing a name, logo design and preparation of a design manual with specifications for future use, ie a house style.

To supplement the use of the logo, RAS uses corporate stationery for a regular newsletter (Radius), for marketing and for tender documentation. This has cost £11,000 over the period late 1993 to date.

Letter from R. N. Edwards to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

Chessington Computer Centre is an Agency of the Office of Public Service and Science. I have been asked to respond to you directly on the Parliamentary Question tabled on the costs of Agency. The costs were as follows:-

Headquarter Buildings—Nil, Chessington is wholly located at its single site in Surrey.

Support Staff—No additional support staff were added to the Chessington complement on becoming an Agency.

Periodical Journals—Chessington produces quarterly Newsletters to its customers. These were produced at a cost of £6261 in 1993/94, Chessington's first year as an Agency.

Executive Cars—Nil.

Logos—Chessington paid an amount of £5150 for professional consultancy and artwork in adopting a new logo as it became an Agency.

Corporate Clothing—Nil.

Cost of Specially designed Stationery—£7,500 in 1994/5. This included binders folders; headed stationery; compliment slips etc.

Letter from Stephen Hickey to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the expenditure incurred by the Civil Service College since it has been a Next Steps agency. I will cover the points in the order that you raised them:

Headquarter building

The College's main centre has been at Sunningdale Park since it was formed in 1971. No additional office accommodation has been created at Sunningdale because of the College becoming an agency. The current rent paid by the College totals £1.2 million per annum covering all the teaching, residential and office accommodation.

Support staff

Three additional support staff were employed as a result of the College taking on new roles when it became an agency. Other increases in staffing since 1989 have been a result of the College's continuing success at expanding its business.

Periodic journals

We do not publish any periodic journals.

Executive cars

We do not have any executive cars.

Logos

The College has commissioned no specially designed logos since it became an agency.

Corporate clothing

The College issues no corporate clothing.

Corporate stationery

The College expects to spend £75,000 this financial year on corporate stationery. This includes headed letter paper, envelopes, ring binders, document wallets and financial stationery. All of these would have been required as part of the College's normal business, whether or not, it was an agency.

Letter from Paul Freeman to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

I have been asked by The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to reply to your question concerning expenditure by Next Steps Agencies.

As well as being an Agency reporting to the Chancellor, HMSO is also a department in its own right and has been a Trading Fund since 1980. Assumption of Agency status in 1988 did not therefore represent a dramatic change.

HQ accommodation. HMSO has 2 Headquarters buildings in Norwich. A 40-year lease was obtained on Sovereign House in 1968 with an annual rental of £97,000. St Crispins, which was previously leased, was purchased for £6 million in 1986. This pre-dates Agency status.

Support staff. Support staff have reduced from 600 to 450 since HMSO became an Agency in 1988.

Periodicals. The only 'periodical' produced by HMSO is an in-house magazine for staff communications. This pre-dates Agency status, and currently costs around £24,000 per annum.

Cars. HMSO has one vehicle which serves both as an executive car and as a delivery vehicle for sensitive documents. It costs £10,000 per annum, and pre-dates Agency status.

Logo. HMSO has a simple logo which is designed and developed by our own design team many years ago. The cost, which was modest, is not readily available.

Corporate clothing. The only clothing purchased by HMSO is protective clothing for messengers and some reprographic staff. £5,000 was spent in 1994.

Stationery. Headed stationery has always been used by HMSO but the extraction of this detail from the overall printing and stationery budget is not possible.

Letter from Mike Devereau to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

You asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for various figures and costs associated with Next Steps agencies.

As these relate to operational matters I have been asked to reply on behalf of the Central Office of Information.

COI was established as an Executive Agency on 5 April 1990. However, it is a Department in its own right and its operations have never been conducted within any other department.

In answer to your specific questions:

COI has not acquired any new headquarters accommodation since its establishment as an Executive Agency; indeed, headquarters accommodation holdings have reduced by 1182.3 square metres (10.57%) between 1989/90 and 1993/94.

No new support staff have been required. Staff costs fell by 14.47% between 1989/90 and 1993/94 without any reduction in the span of activities performed.

COI publishes a house magazine "Inform", the primary function of which is staff communication. The current annual cost is £25,000.

COI has no executive cars.

The COI logo is updated from time to time. The last significant change was made in 1990 at a cost of £10,000.

Appropriate clothing for Receptionists and Porter/Messengers has been provided since the Department was set up in 1946. Annual cost is less than £1000.

As a Department COI has always had to provide its own stationery. Any necessary changes in design are introduced when new stocks are printed and additional costs are avoided.

In the four years since COI became an Executive agency it has achieved efficiency savings of £56.4m (18.1%).

I hope that this information meets your needs.

University Research

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of gross domestic product was devoted to the public funding of university research in (a) Britain, (b) the USA and (c) France from 1981 to 1992; and what are the corresponding figures for each country for annual percentage growth in real GDP.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The information requested is shown in the following table.

International comparisons of expenditure on higher education research are of questionable significance, because of the large structural differences in the make-up of this sector between countries.

	Government funding of higher education R and D			Annual percentage growth in real GDP

Decision Making

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has for increasing the openness of decision making (a) in the national health service and (b) generally in 1995.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has already consulted on a draft code of openness for the national health service, the final version of which will be published during 1995. One of the stated aims of the code is to provide people with an explanation of service changes in the NHS and give them the opportunity to influence decisions on such changes.

The Government remain committed to the principles of transparency and openness laid down in the White Paper on open government. We are currently preparing a report for Parliament on Departments' experience of the first nine months of operation of the code of practice on access to Government information. This will help us to assess its impact.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Disabled People (Court Access)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department who is responsible for ensuring that court buildings are adequately accessible to disabled people.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor, through his officials, is responsible for ensuring that court buildings are accessible to disabled people. It is the Department's policy that the design of a court should enable disabled people to have access to and around the building appropriate to their functions there. Subject to resources and building constraints, every effort is made to improve access and facilities in existing courts.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his estimate of the cost of training and retraining (a) justices of the peace and (b) members of the professional judiciary in respect of the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The estimate of the cost of training justices of the peace and members of the professional judiciary in respect of the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 was given in a written answer to the House on 27 May 1993, Official Report, column 658, as approximately £250,000. As subsequent training was included in the general training of magistrates and judges, the cost cannot be separately identified.

PRIME MINISTER

British Association of Sheep Exporters

Mr. Morley: To ask the Prime Minister what meetings with the British Association of Sheep Exporters he has had since 1994.

The Prime Minister: None.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on documents made available in the United States of America following the ending of the Pan Am insurers' appeal to the Supreme Court in relation to the loss of the airliner over Lockerbie; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The document in question quotes a source relying on "second and third party information" and stating that the former Iranian interior minister paid $10 million to have the Lockerbie bombing carried out. Allegations to this effect were first made early in the investigation; they were examined at the time by the competent authorities, together with a great deal of other often contradictory material, but no evidence has been found to substantiate them. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate remains satisfied that the evidence supports the charges against the two accused and that there is no evidence to establish that other persons or nations were involved.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 26 January.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 26 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Straw: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) of 16 January, Official Report, column 275, if he will place in the Library a list of the offices of Government Departments and next steps agencies in the west country and Bristol.

The Prime Minister: A list of Government Departments and next steps agencies which have offices in the west country and Bristol has been placed in the Library of the House.

Regional Offices

Mr. Straw: To ask the Prime Minister how many Government Departments and agencies' have regional offices in each of the standard regions of England; and how many people are so employed in each region.

The Prime Minister: Twenty-seven Government Departments and 50 next steps agencies have offices in the economic planning regions of England.

Information on the number of civil service employed in each region, including their agencies, is contained in "Civil Service Statistics" 1994 edition, table 3, a copy of which is in the Library.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received concerning the impact of reduced activity by the Countryside Council for Wales on the commitment arising form the biodiversity convention under the Rio treaty; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received two such representations. The Government remain committed to the convention on biological diversity signed in Rio de Janeiro in June 1992.

Channel Islands

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what discussions have taken place with the authorities on the Channel Islands regarding the 50th anniversary of the defeat of Nazi Germany;

(2) if he will make arrangements as part of the 50th anniversary of the defeat of Nazi Germany for memorials to be put up in the Channel Islands in memory of those who were deported and died as a result of the German occupation;

(3) if it is intended for him and the heads of Government invited for the 50th anniversary of the defeat of Nazi Germany to pay homage in Alderney to the memory of those who were used as slave labour and died in the camps.

The Prime Minister: As internally self-governing dependencies of the Crown, the Channel Islands are themselves taking the lead in organising celebrations to mark the 50th anniversary of their liberation from war-time occupation, on 9 and 10 May. I am pleased to say that, following discussions between the relevant authorities here and in the islands, HRH the Prince of Wales will represent Her Majesty the Queen at the celebrations, and units of our armed services will take part in them.

It is for the authorities and people of each island to decide on the setting up of memorials. In both Jersey and Guernsey there are already plaques commemorating those who died during the second world war, including deportees, and in Alderney there is a long-standing memorial dedicated to the memory of those prisoners who died in labour camps on the island, at which an inter-denominational service is held annually. The states of Jersey and Guernsey have each commissioned public memorials of the 50th anniversary of the liberation.

It would not be feasible for me and the heads of state or Government invited to the commemorations of the 50th anniversary of VE Day in London on 6 and 7 May to visit Alderney.

Nursery Education

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the effect on his policy for the expansion of nursery education of the Government policy on the enactment of the Nursery Education (Assessment of Need) Bill of Session 1993–4; and to which provisions of the Bill Her Majesty's Government remains opposed.

The Prime Minister: There is no need for the provisions of the Nursery Education (Assessment of Need) Bill. We are already committed to providing, over time, a pre-school place for all four year-olds whose parents wish to take it up. We want to promote choice and diversity by building on the existing wide range of providers, including the private and voluntary sectors.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy not to authorise the detention of any asylum seeker who has entered the United Kingdom illegally but whose application for asylum has not been determined; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will instruct immigration officers that they do not have powers to compel an illegal entrant to submit to examination and to be detained for that purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: These questions raise issues which are currently being considered by the Court of Appeal and the court's judgement will be given very careful consideration once it is received. In the meantime, it is not proposed to change our current general practice.

Director General of the Prison Service

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the contract of the Director General of the Prison Service comes up for renewal; what criteria will be used to decide whether his contract should be renewed; and who will take that decision.

Mr. Howard: The appointment of the Director General of the Prison Service was made for three years in the first instance from 6 January 1993, extendable to five years by agreement between him and the Department. It will be for me, on the advice of the permanent secretary, to take the decision on whether the director general should be offered an extension of his contract.

Mrs. Qureshian Bibi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when, last year, the United Kingdom post in Islamabad requested a sponsor interview concerning the application by Mrs. Qureshian Bibi to enter the United Kingdom, GV100/25109; when a second request from the ECO in Islamabad for a sponsor interview was received; and when the sponsor is going to be interviewed.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The first request from the British High Commission in Islamabad for an interview with Mr. Rangzeb was received by the Home Office on 14 July 1994. There is no record of a further request having been received. The immigration service at Leeds Bradford airport will shortly contact Mr. Rangzeb to offer him an appointment for an interview on 5 February.

Emergency Calls (Response Times)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken for (a) the Metropolitan police and (b) the London Fire Brigade to arrive at the scene following an emergency 999 call.

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that during the period of three months from October to December 1994 the average time taken by the Metropolitan police to respond to a 999 call was 11 minutes 23 seconds.

In 1992, the latest year for which the information is available centrally, the average response time to fire incidents for the London fire brigade was six minutes. This information is based on response times for fires involving occupied buildings, casualties or rescues and certain other types of fire.

Electro-shock Equipment

Mr.Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what permission has been given at any time to the companies (a) CAZ and (b) International Procurement Services to hold or trade in any form of electro-shock equipment in the last 15 years.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Stop and Search

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the relationship between the number of stops and searches carried out by police services and the remuneration allocated to (a) police divisions/areas or (b) individual police officers.

Mr. Maclean: None whatsoever.

Criminal Offences

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the criminal offences that have been introduced by regulations or directives from the European Union in 1994.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Infanticide

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children were killed by their parents in each year since 1984.

Mr. Maclean: The following table shows the number of offences recorded as homicide in England and Wales, as at 5 August 1994, where children under the age of 16 years were killed by their parents:

Year	Number
1984	62
1985	72
1986	36
1987	55
1988	76
1989	44
1990	49
1991	68
1992	52
1993	50

Figures for 1994 are not yet available.

Secure Remands (Juveniles)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 December 1994, Official Report, columns 566–67, when he will reach a decision on defraying the costs of local authorities accommodating juveniles subject to court-ordered secure remands; and at what stage discussions have reached on this subject.

Mr. Maclean: This work is at an early stage. I have yet to embark on discussions with interested parties. I shall make a decision once the discussions have been concluded.

Parkhurst Prison

Mr. Hoyle : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who provided him with the information that members of the Prison Officers Association were instructed not to co-operate with the police inquiry at Her Majesty's prison, Parkhurst; and what evidence he has that they did not do so.

Mr. Howard: I received this information, and evidence that some members of the POA did not co-operate with the police inquiries into the escapes from Parkhurst on 3 January 1995, from the police.

Inquests (Legal Expenses)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what authority or vote appropriation Her Majesty's Government made available funds to assist or defray the legal expenses incurred by the relatives of the King's Cross and Clapham disasters at the relevant inquests; and if similar provisions could be made available to the relatives of the victims of the Marchioness disaster at the resumed inquest.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

The costs of legal representation for the relatives who attended the inquests into the King's Cross and Clapham disasters were met by London Transport and British Rail respectively. Generally, relatives' costs are not met in inquests or fatal accident inquiries. The proceedings are informal and are concerned with facts surrounding a death rather than issues such as civil or criminal liability. Legal representation is usually unnecessary. We therefore do not consider that it would be appropriate, or necessary, for the Government to underwrite the legal costs of the families' attending the inquest into the Marchioness disaster.

TREASURY

Royal Mint

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made on the Royal Mint's review of the coinage.

Mr. Nelson: The Mint has consulted the general public and organisations representing people with special interests, for example, the blind and the elderly, as well as major coin users or handlers. The formal consultation period ended on 31 December 1994 and the analysis of the results is now underway. My right hon. and learned Friend expects to be able to make an announcement on the results of the review in the spring.

Personal Allowance

Ms. Rachel Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost of extending the additional personal allowance to married women with dependent children who have husbands who are mentally incapacitated or mentally infirm.

Sir George Young: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Inflation Target

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to reduce the Government's inflation target of 1 to 4 per cent for the retail prices index excluding mortgage payments in RPIX;

(2) what is his target for the underlying rate of inflation, RPIX, after the current Parliament; and what plans he has to specify a narrow sub-range for this target.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government's aim is to keep underlying inflation, as measured by the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments, in the range 1 to 4 per cent., and to bring it down in the lower half of this range by the end of the present Parliament.

The Government remain committed to keeping inflation permanently low.

The target for after the current Parliament will be announced in due course.

Bank of England (Meetings)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the forward dates of his monthly monetary meeting with the Governor of the Bank of England.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The monthly monetary meetings I hold with the governor are generally held in the first week of each month, but the precise dates are only confirmed one month in advance in the monthly monetary report.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury refers to central guidance on the use of executive search agencies. Decisions on when to recruit and the method of recruitment are taken in the light of the overall staffing requirements of the Department.

National Lottery

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his assessment of the total net annual change in Government tax revenues as a consequence of the introduction of the national lottery.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The 12 per cent. duty rate was set so as to have no effect on tax revenues.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Rwanda Refugees

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure humanitarian aid is effectively delivered in the refugee camps in Rwanda and Zaire.

Mr. Baldry: We keep in close touch with non-governmental organisations and the United Nations agencies working in the refugee camps in neighbouring countries and the camps for internally displaced within Rwanda. An ODA assessment and monitoring mission visited the region last week.

Steps taken to improve effective delivery include targeted distribution of food aid to family units. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees plans a comprehensive registration exercise in early February.

Pergau Dam

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what means subcontracts were allocated on the Pergau dam project; and how many British firms benefited from the allocation of subcontracts on the project.

Mr. Baldry: Sub contracts were let by the main contractor, Kerjaya Balfour Beatty Cementation. A list of the main subcontractors, vendors, plant and spares suppliers and main material suppliers was presented to the Foreign Affairs Committee in connection with its inquiry into the Pergau project, Cm 271–11, pages 80 to 85. One hundred and eighty-one British firms were involved in the project.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Corporate Manslaughter Charges

Ms Walley: To ask the Attorney-General what proposals he has to review the decision by the Crown Prosecution Service not to pursue a charge of corporate manslaughter against Fewston Transport Ltd. and H. G. Pheasey.

The Attorney-General: The evidence in relation to an incident on 6 September 1993 involving a vehicle owned by Fewston Transport Ltd. was considered by the Crown Prosecution Service at the conclusion of the police investigation and again after the inquest taking account of the evidence given to the coroner. On both occasions the Crown Prosecution Service concluded that there was insufficient evidence to prosecute the company for manslaughter.

Herbert Graham Pheasey was a sole trader who owned a vehicle involved in an incident on 22 May 1992 as the result of which the driver, Robert Edward Marsden, was prosecuted for and convicted of causing death by reckless driving. The evidence did not justify proceedings for manslaughter against Herbert Graham Pheasey.

The two cases were not in any way connected.

The CPS is not aware of any material which would justify further reconsideration of either case.

Ms Walley: To ask the Attorney-General how many corporate manslaughter charges were brought against heavy goods vehicle operators in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service maintains no central records of proceedings in respect of specific offences. The information is recorded on individual cases files, and a definitive answer could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It is however the recollection of senior Crown prosecution lawyers that there have been no such cases.

ENVIRONMENT

Departmental Responsibilities

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many parliamentary questions he has referred to chief executives of next steps agencies in each year since 1992.

Mr. Gummer: The information is as follows:

	1992	1993	1994	1995
Building Research Establishment	4	0	0	1
Planning Inspectorate	4	1	3	0

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the occasions on which Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has informed his Department in each year since 1979 of the discovery of illicitly dumped nuclear materials, giving details of locations, quantities and types of materials involved.

Mr. Atkins: Approximately 900kgs of depleted uranium was discovered at Poplars farm, Chelveston, Northamptonshire in January this year. The inspectorate is carrying out an investigation of the circumstances.

A review of the inspectorate's records, covering the period 1979 to date, reveals no other incidents of illicitly dumped radioactive materials.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what records and maps are kept indicating (a) the radioactive inventory, (b) nature and (c) the exact location of low level radioactive wastes disposed of on authorised landfill sites; and to what extent this information is publicly available.

Mr. Atkins: Records of disposals are maintained by disposers in accordance with the conditions of authorisations granted under the provisions of the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. The quantities consigned for burial at those sites currently receiving such wastes are listed in the answer I gave to the Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) on 25 January, Official Report, column 206.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is planning to extend the chemical release inventory, which is maintained by the inspectorate and is the subject of published reports, to include details of radioactive disposals.

The exact location of each deposit within a landfill site is not significant in determining the radiological safety of this practice and it is not usual for such records to be kept.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the volume of low level radioactive waste disposed at (a) Milton landfill, Cambridge, (b) ICI Ltd., Cowpen Bewley Tip, Cleveland, (c) Vickers waste ponds, Walney island, Cumbria, (d) Rolls-Royce, Hilts quarry, Derbyshire, (e) Magnesium Elektron, Swinton, Manchester, (f) Cilgwyn quarry, Caernarfon, Gwynedd, (g) Braziers landfill, Hertfordshire, (h) SCM Chemicals, site tip, Humberside, (i) Clifton Marsh, Preston, Lancashire, (j) Sefton Meadows tip, Merseyside, (k) Beighton tip Sheffield, South Yorkshire, (l) Beddingham quarry, Sussex, (m) Ryton tip, Gateshead, Tyne and Wear, (n) BNFL, Drigg, Cumbria, (o) BNFL Sellafield, Cumbria, and (p) Ulnes Walton in the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 19 January 1995]: The volume of low level radioactive waste disposed at the listed sites is as follows:

Site	Volume M[3]	Period [1]
Milton Landfill	83	1993
Cowpen Bewley	52	1993–94
Vickers	less than 1	1994
Hilts Quarry	37	1994

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what is the fare box ratio of the revenue costs of operating the docklands light railway and the appropriate level of public support and total costs per passenger mile for operating that railway in the last financial year.

Sir Paul Beresford: The ratio between the revenue costs and the farebox of the docklands light railway was 4.3:1 in the last financial year. The total cost per passenger mile was 78p, of which 18p was supported by revenue and 60p was covered by public subsidy.

Kirklees Council

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the spending by Kirklees council on (a) education, (b) social services and (c) highways in relation to those functions' individual standard spending assessments in 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is as follows:

Kirklees Council

£ million

	1993–94 (Outturn)		1994–95 (budget estimate)
	SSA	Expenditure[1]	SSA	Expenditure[1]

Surrey County Council

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list Surrey county council's (a) standard spending assessment and (b) actual expenditure on social services in each year since 1991–92; and what will be (i) the standard spending assessment and (ii) the budgeted expenditure for 1994–95.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is as follows:

Surrey County Council

£ million

	Personal Social Services[1]
	Standard spending assessment	Expenditure[2]
1991–92	71.410	[3]58.831

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations underlay the decision of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Sir P. Beresford), to give a detailed reply to the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms Eagle) on 17 January, Official Report, columns 411–12, on the subject of the Merseyside development corporation rather than to wait until his Department was able to issue a Treasury minute in response to the Committee.

Sir Paul Beresford: The question asked by the hon. Member for Wallasey referred to the position of the chairman and chief executive of the corporation. My reply addressed that issue, which was not raised in the conclusions or recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee report. It also referred to the action already taken to address shortcomings in financial management following the publication of the National Audit Office report in March 1994. Those actions are on the record and are summarised in paragraph 51 of the PAC report.

The Government's response to the PAC report will be made shortly in the normal way.

Northumberland County Council

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the level of local government expenditure in Northumberland county council in each year since 1988.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is as follows. The figures are not adjusted for changes in local authority functions, of which the most significant were, in 1993–94, the loss of responsibility for further education and the addition of responsibility for community care.

Northumberland County Council expenditure[1]

£ million

1988–89	[2]140.44
1989–90	154.170
1990–91	161.481
1991–92	178.739
1992–93	190.553
1993–94	185.770
1994–95	191.127

[1] Total expenditure 1988–89 to 1989–90. Net revenue expenditure 1990–91 to 1994–95.
[2] Outturn expenditure 1988–89 to 1993–94; budgeted expenditure for 1994–95.

Dioxins

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he is taking to eradicate dioxin pollution in the Bolsover and north Derbyshire area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The industrial processes which have been identified as the most significant potential sources of dioxin production are now either subject to control under part I of the Environments Protection Act 1990 or are about to transfer to this control from earlier legislation. These processes are regulated either by the local authorities under the local authority air pollution control procedure or are controlled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution using integrated pollution control. Both these regulatory regimes require the application of best available techniques not entailing excessive cost — BATNEEC—to prevent the discharge of dioxins and only where that is not practicable to minimise and render harmless the discharges. For the processes controlled by HMIP, work is already progressing well to require companies to achieve substantial reductions in discharges to all media. Where appropriate, process changes are being sought to eliminate the releases.

Reductions in the level of dioxin pollution already in the environment are being studied. Substantial reductions in the level of dioxin on plants in the Bolsover area have already been reported. It is expected that tighter emission controls on the industrial processes will allow this trend to continue. Dioxin already in the soil is subject to slow degradation by natural processes.

Business Rates

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the average percentage change in business rates in 1995–96 as a result of the recent revaluation of rateable values for (a) shops, (b) offices, (c) warehouses, (d) factories and (e) other premises in each region; and what is his assessment of change for all property types in each region.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested is given in the tables below which show estimated average changes in rates bills both before and after the effects of the Government's transitional arrangements are taken into account. They reflect the impact of the 1995 revaluation and also of the cessation of the previous transitional arrangements from which some ratepayers were still benefitting in 1994–95.

South Yorkshire Navigation

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on how many occasions in the last 12 months freight traffic has been subject to delay on the South Yorkshire navigation; and for what reasons such delays were experienced;

(2) what action is being taken to ensure that freight traffic can be carried on the South Yorkshire navigation without delays due to obstruction in the waterway, inoperable locks or lack of staff.

Mr. Atkins: The Sheffield and South Yorkshire navigation is in the undertaking of the British Waterways Board. These questions should be addressed to the board since they relate to management and operational matters for which the board is responsible.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Sir Paul Beresford: Executive search agencies are appointed by competitive tender in accordance with the Department's rules on the engagement of consultants. They are used to assist the mandatory process of public open competition for the occasional recruitment to singleton specialist and senior posts. The agencies provide expert knowledge of the target market sector, and handle ancillary clerical tasks such as the procurement of advertising and the processing of applications, for which it would not be cost-effective to maintain stand-by resources in the Department.

Standard Spending Assessment, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total standard spending assessment for Nottinghamshire county council for each year from 1992–93 to 1995–96; and, within the total, what was the standard spending assessment for (a) education, (b) social services, (c) police, (d) fire, (e) highway maintenance, (f) other services and (g) capital financing in each of these years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The figures requested are as follows. They have not been adjusted for changes of responsibility.

£ million

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	[1]1995–96
Education	383.420	[2]342.430	343.437	347.054

[1] 1995-96 figures are those in the proposed local government finance settlement 1995-96, announced by the Secretary of State on 1 December 1994.

[2] Responsibility for most further education was transferred out of local government from 1 April 1993.

[3] Nottinghamshire police authority receives a police SSA of £54.380 million and a total SSA of £55.365 million.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, (1) pursuant to his answer of 12 December 1994, Official Report, column 436, when he expects to reach a conclusion in his considerations as to whether further measures to reduce carbon dioxide emissions are necessary following the decision not to increase value added tax on domestic fuel to 17.5 per cent;

(2) what is his estimate of the effects on the Government's ability to meet its targets agreed to at the Rio summit on the environment of the decision to retain value added tax rate for domestic fuel at 8 per cent., rather than the previously planned rate of 17.5 per cent.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answers which I gave to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 18 January 1995, Official Report, column 706. We will conclude our work on this review as soon as possible.

EC Directives (Funding)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation he has had with his opposite number in the European Union concerning the implications of reduced funding for the Countryside Council for Wales on United Kingdom compliance within Wales with the habitat and species directive and other timetabled European directives.

Mr. Atkins: None: there are no such implications.

Local Government Finance, Redbridge

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of state for the Environment what were the (a) standard spending assessment and (b) single regeneration budget bids from the London borough of Redbridge for 1995–96; what was the value of the settlement given; and how much Redbridge will receive.

Mr. Curry: The revenue support grant settlement for 1995–96 will be the subject of a report to the House. Under the proposals announced by the Secretary of State on 1 December 1994, the standard spending assessment for the London borough of Redbridge would be £176.167 million. Total external support would be £134.553 million, including £87.766 million revenue support grant and £46.786 million business rate income.

No final bids were received from the London borough of Redbridge for funding from the single regeneration budget.

Planning Applications

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to take design considerations into account when deciding whether or not to call in planning applications to be decided under section 77 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

Mr. Gummer: My general approach is not to interfere with the jurisdiction of local planning authorities unless it is necessary to do so. I will therefore be very selective about calling in applications to determine myself and will, in general, only take this step if planning issues of more than local importance are involved. Each case must be considered on its individual merits. An application for development which raises significant architectural and urban design issues is one example of the type of case which may be of more than local importance. Other examples include cases which, in my opinion, could have wide effects beyond their immediate locality, which give rise to substantial regional or national controversy which may conflict with national policy on important matters, and those where the interests of foreign Governments may be involved.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Exhibitions

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to "Liverpool: Architecture and Design" to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 6 February to Friday 10 February 1995.

Hall Keepers Lodge

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what changes occurred regarding the vehicle used by the Hall Keepers Lodge for collection purposes until the beginning of this year, what are the present financial arrangements for outside firms to undertake the work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend.

EDUCATION

Standard Spending Assessment Settlements

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she had made of the effect of the 1995–96 standard spending assessment settlement (1) on the number of teachers employed in England; and (2) on class sizes in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: The effect of the settlement on the number of teachers and on class sizes will depend on decisions yet to be made by individual LEAs and schools, and on the cost of the teachers' pay award.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many independent sector schools have had pupils under the assisted places scheme in each financial year since 1980.

Mr. Robin Squire: The number of independent schools participating in the assisted places scheme for each academic year since the scheme's inception in 1981 is given in the following table:

Assisted places scheme

Academic year	Number of participating schools
1981–82	220
1982–83	220
1983–84	223
1984–85	226
1985–86	226
1986–87	226
1987–88	226
1989–90	278
1990–91	295
1991–92	295
1992–93	295
1993–94	295

The figures relate to England only

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many independent sector schools have had (a) more than 5 per cent., (b) more than 10 per cent., (c) more than 15 per cent., (d) more than 20 per cent. or (e) more than 25 per cent. of their school roll made up of pupils covered by the assisted places scheme in each financial year since the establishment of the scheme.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available for each financial year since the establishment of the scheme and could be derived only at disproportionate cost. Information is available in respect of the academic year 1993–94; the number of schools in each category is (a) 238, (b) 166, (c) 116, (d) 75 and (e) 43. In addition there are 57 schools with less than 5 per cent. assisted pupils.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which independent sector schools charged (a) the highest and (b) the lowest fees to assisted places scheme pupils on the financial year 1993–94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The school which charged the highest fee in academic year 1993–94 was Charterhouse, in respect of its sixth form assisted pupils. The annual fee was £9,348. Salesian college, Farnborough charged the lowest fee at £2,283 per year.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she has taken to reduce the costs of operating the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Robin Squire: We are committed to providing 35,000 available places in England and Wales and will continue to support this excellent scheme within the resources which can be made available for it. Assisted pupils achieve outstanding results in public examinations and the scheme is good value for money. We must, of course, manage the available resources prudently and have taken steps over the past few years to restrain fee increases for assisted pupils at participating schools.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement about the level of parental contributions to the fees of pupils in the assisted places scheme in the next academic year.

Mr. Robin Squire: Remission of tuition fees under the assisted places scheme is dependent on the level of fees at participating schools and the amount parents can afford to contribute. Subject to parliamentary approval, the parental contribution scales will be adjusted upwards for the school year 1995–96 as set out in the table. Where the relevant income for the appropriate financial year does not exceed £9,572, the tuition fees will be wholly remitted.

Student Grants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many people aged 29 to 50 years and over 50 years are in receipt of (a) a student maintenance grant and (b) a mature student allowance.

Mr. Boswell: Data on the ages of students in receipt of maintenance grants or older students' allowances are not collected centrally.

Public Sector Schools

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average amount of money which her Department spent on educating a student at a school within the public sector during the financial year 1993–94.

Mr. Boswell: Each local authority is responsible for setting its own budget and deciding its priorities between and within services, including education, from funds distributed by the Department of the Environment through the standard spending assessment system.

The average spending per pupil by LEAs in England in LEA-maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools is estimated to be £1,972 in 1993–94.

Equivalent information on grant-maintained schools is mainly the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the FAS to reply separately to the hon. Member.

Independent Schools

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 233, how many independent schools were operating in England in each year since 1990, excluding city technology colleges.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information available is given in the following table for January of each calendar year:

Year	Number of independent schools
1990	2,280
1991	2,280
1992	2,256
1993	2,247

The figures relate to England only.

Schools, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the capital bid for 1995–96 from the George Spender school, Ravensdale middle school and Greenwood Dale school, Nottinghamshire; for what purpose the bids—grant maintained—were made in each case; and what capital allocation has been agreed.

Mr. Robin Squire: These matters are mainly the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the agency to write to the hon. Member.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines are operated by her Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within her Department and her Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances her Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Boswell: An executive search agency might be used to fill a key vacancy in the Department or the Teachers' Pensions Agency, which is the only executive agency administered by this Department. The decision in each case would be based on need and value for money.

Secondary Schools

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) local education authority maintained and (b) grant-maintained secondary schools in each local authority have fewer pupils than their standard number; and in how many the number of pupils is equal to or greater than the standard number.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not collected by the Department.

Schools, Wolverhampton

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the cost of a state secondary place in Wolverhampton local education authority controlled schools in 1993–94; and what is the estimated cost in 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: Provisional outturn figures returned by Wolverhampton LEA show net institutional spending per secondary pupil of £2,300 in 1993–94. The authority has given an estimate of its net expenditure for 1994–95 in a return published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. This amounts to an estimated cost per pupil of £2,531.

Non-state Schools

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of children between the ages of five and 16 years were educated in non-state schools in 1993–94; and what is her estimate of the percentage in 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: In England in January 1994, 6.5 per cent. of pupils aged five to 16 were being taught in non-maintained schools. The projection for January 1995 is 6.3 per cent.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the total cost of the 10 most expensive parliamentary questions in the past 15 years for which calculations have been made; which hon. Members asked the questions; and what considerations led him to waive the normal rule regarding disproportionate cost.

Mr. Newton: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Judgment about the application of the rule are for individual Ministers.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994, of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Newton: The details are as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and, of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

	1991	1992	1993	1994
Total number of women	51,102	49,138	55,234	56,752

Administrative officer	25,610	24,899	29,286	30,398
Administrative assistant	8,098	7,608	7,821	7,510

Note: Permanent non-industrial staff on 1 April each year expressed as full-time equivalents.

Part-time staff are counted as half-units and totals are rounded to whole units.

[1] The figures in the table do not include the following numbers of female grade 3 staff who were on loan to other Departments: 1 in 1991; 2 in 1992; 2 in 1993 and 2 in 1994.

Electronic Cards

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans exist for the distribution of electronic cards to benefit claimants as replacements for the present order books; what research has preceded such plans or is at present under way; and what rights of access will be granted to holders of such cards to the information contained on these.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Government have already announced plans to automate post offices and introduce a benefit payment card to replace order books. These plans were based on a feasibility study by the Benefits Agency and Post Office Counters Ltd. who are now developing detailed proposals with five potential suppliers. We will require the new system to be acceptable to customers, including elderly and disabled people, and consultation with their representatives is planned for the coming year. The system will be subject to the right of access provisions of the Data Protection Act.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Byers : To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the average time for the Child Support Agency to complete first line reviews in the last year for which information is available; and what was the longest time that such a review took;

(2) what was the average time for the Child Support Agency to complete submissions to appeal tribunals in the last year for which information is available; and what was the longest time for such a submission to be made.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter to Mr. Stephen Byers from Ann Chant, dated 26 January 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the average times taken by the Child Support Agency to complete first line reviews and submissions to appeal tribunals.

The Agency does not keep information on the average time taken to complete a Section 18 review or a submission to an appeal tribunal. There is no business requirement for the Agency to keep information on the longest time taken to complete either a Section 18 review or a submission to an appeals tribunal. The information which is available is contained in the tables below.

Time taken to complete Section 18 review: August—2 December 1994

Time taken	Cases reviewed	Per cent.
0–3 months	805	20.5
3–6 months	985	25.1

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out (a) the number of letters from hon. Members which received a full reply (i) in 14 days, (ii) between 15 days and 28 days and (iii) in more than 28 days from the Child Support Agency and (b) the target set by the Child Support Agency for the time to respond to letters from hon. Members since the appointment of the current chief executive.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 26 January 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the time taken and the target set to reply to letters sent to me by Members of Parliament.

The information is not available in the form you request. The Agency aims to reply to letters from Members of Parliament within 20 working days, in line with the Department of Social Security target. Whilst I recognize that this target has not always been met procedural changes have been introduced and I hope that Members will have noticed an improvement in both the quality and speed of the replies sent to them over recent months.

Average clearance times between September and November 1994 are shown in the table:

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many cases were cleared by the Child Support Agency in the first half of 1994–95 (a) without maintenance assessments and (b) with an assessment; and what are the reasons for this;

(2) what was the total number of the Child Support Agency's uncleared cases at 30 September 1994; and if this information could be added to the Child Support Agency's monthly statistical information.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 26 January 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary for Social Security about cases cleared by the Child Support Agency.

A total of 338,642 maintenance assessment cases were cleared between April and September 1994, of which 152,482 resulted in a maintenance assessment and 186,160 were other clearances. Cases may be cleared without a maintenance assessment being completed for a variety of reasons. There is no business requirement for the Agency to record the specific reason for clearance in each individual case. Analysis of cases falling into this category suggests, however, that the majority are a result of the parent with care ceasing to receive benefit and not proceeding with a private application; good cause not to co-operate being accepted; or the case becoming ineligible for consideration by the Agency as a result of a change in circumstances.

The total number of cases in which a maintenance application had been received, but a maintenance assessment had not yet been completed at 30 September 1994 was 474,000; this figure includes cases progressing normally through the system. By the end of November 1994, the figure had fallen to 444,000.

The statistical information made available on a monthly basis is under review. I hope this is of help.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the most recent review he has carried out on the system for paying (a) deposits and (b) rents for prospective and actual tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: Help with returnable deposits for accommodation was excluded from the social fund in 1988 because of the abuse of such payments under the old supplementary benefits single payments scheme. Help with rent in advance may be available as a social fund loan. Each application is assessed on its merits to see if payment can be made. We have no plans to reintroduce a statutory key money scheme. Under the access to local authority and housing association tenancies proposals, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is considering encouraging local authorities to make greater use of rent guarantee schemes.

Disability Injuries Committee

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the remit of the Government's interdepartmental committee on disability injuries; what information it has published; and if it accepts representations from the public.

Mr. Hague: The inter-departmental group on disability provides a forum for officials from Government Departments to co-ordinate work on policy and operational issues affecting disabled people.

Sub-groups involving officials and representation of voluntary organisations have been set up to consider particular issues.

The group itself has not received representation from the public or published information. Representations should be made to the relevant Minister, who will ensure that they are given appropriate consideration.

Severe Hardship Payments

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications were made by 16 and 17-year-olds for severe hardship payments in each month since January 1994; and what is the number which were successful.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table.

Applications for severe hardship payments January to October 1994

Month	Number of applications	Successful applications
January	13,870	12,348
February	12,707	11,190

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on Departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Hague: Executive search agencies are employed where their expertise can add value to the recruitment of certain senior or specialist staff.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what considerations led to the decision not to operate the assisted places scheme in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The assisted places scheme in England and Wales enables children to attend independent schools. In Northern Ireland there is no significant independent schools sector.

Equine Infectious Anaemia

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of equine infectious anaemia there have been in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: There have been no cases of equine infectious anaemia in Northern Ireland.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the absenteeism rate for (a) his Department, (b) the Compensation Agency, (c) the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (Northern Ireland), (d) the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency, (e) the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency, (f) the Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland, (g) the Rate Collection Agency, (h) the Social Security Agency (Northern (Ireland), (i) the Training and Employment Agency (Northern Ireland) and (j) the Valuation and Lands Agency in each year since 1991;

(2) what was the absenteeism rate for the Valuation and Lands Agency in each year since 1991.

Sir John Wheeler: The absenteeism rates are not fully available in all Departments in the format requested. However, available information is as follows:

Abortions

Ms Mowlem: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many abortions were performed by each health and social services board in Northern Ireland in the past five years; and what were the age categories of the women.

Mr. Moss: While the Abortion Act 1967 does not extend to Northern Ireland, therapeutic abortions can be carried out in Northern Ireland hospitals on strictly medical grounds. The number of such terminations cannot be identified separately in the information collected centrally on obstetric and gynaecological procedures.

Ms Mowlem: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the number of women travelling from Northern Ireland to Great Britain for abortions during the past five years aged (a) under 19 years, (b) between 19 and 25 years and (c) 25 years or over.

Mr. Moss: The information is not collected in the form requested. The table shows the number of legal abortions performed on Northern Ireland residents in England, Wales and Scotland between 1989 and 1993 by available age bands.

Travellers

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision is made for the health needs of travellers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Moss: Travelling people are entitled to the full range of health and personal social services on the same basis as the rest of the community in Northern Ireland. Health and social services boards are required to identify groups with particular needs arising from their particular location, level of deprivation or lifestyle, and to ensure that services are targeted accordingly.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Sir John Wheeler: Recruitment to the Northern Ireland civil service and to the Northern Ireland Office is regulated by the Civil Service Commissioners to ensure selection on the basis of merit in fair and open competition. When filling vacancies at the higher appointment levels, where candidates with the relevant combination of skills and experience may be in short supply or may not be attracted by advertisement, the use of executive search agencies may be considered to supplement the pool of applicants. All candidates receive equal treatment at interview irrespective of the source of their application and selection is made on merit.

Club Licensing

Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the review of the licensing arrangements in Northern Ireland in respect of registered bona fide clubs will be completed; and if he will make it his policy to consult the Working Men's Club Institution and other umbrella organisations before publication.

Mr. Moss: The review of the legislation on registered clubs has been completed and I have today announced the main changes which I propose to make. A copy of my statement has been placed in the Library. In due course I shall publish for consultation draft legislation containing the Government's full proposals for amending the law. At that stage, I shall welcome comments from a wide range of interests, including organisations representing registered clubs.

Prison Cells

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the daily timetable for locking and unlocking cells for each Northern Ireland prison.

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

There is no uniform daily timetable for locking and unlocking cells in prisons in Northern Ireland. Variations take account of a variety of factors.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Commission on the Status of Women

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries are currently members of the UN Commission on the Status of Women; how countries have achieved membership; and what is the position of the United Kingdom in respect of membership criteria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Membership of the UN Commission on the Status of Women is by election on a regional basis by the UN Economic and Social Council. The United Kingdom will seek election in 1996. The current members are:

African States (13 seats): Algeria, Angola, Congo, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Libya, Madagascar, Namibia, Sudan, Togo, Tunisia, Zambia

Asian States (11 seats): China, Cyprus, India, Indonesia, Iran, Japan, Malaysia, Pakistan, Philippines, Republic of Korea, Thailand

Eastern European States (4 seats): Belarus, Bulgaria, Russian Federation, Slovakia

Latin American and Caribbean States (9 seats): Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru, Venezuela.

Western European and Other States (8 seats): Australia, Austria, Belgium, Finland, France, Greece, Portugal, Spain

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs to what extent the United Kingdom will be represented at the meeting in March of the Commission on the Status of Women when the draft platform for action for the fourth world conference on women in Beijing in September 1995 is discussed; which Government Departments will be represented and by whom; who will lead the delegation; and if the delegation will include non-governmental organisation representatives.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Although not a member of the UN Commission on the Status of Women at the moment, the United Kingdom will play an active role as observers at the meeting of the commission in March and at the parallel drafting group for the platform for action for the fourth world conference on women. The United Kingdom will be represented by officials from the Department of Employment, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Overseas Development Administration, who will work closely with NGOs.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when joint discussions have been held with the European Union member states on the draft platform for action for the 1995 fourth world conference on women in Beijing; and which states were represented.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There have been no discussions with our European Union partners about the platform for action for the fourth world conference on women because the draft has not yet been circulated by the conference secretariat.

Lockerbie

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was informed of a paper produced by a United States air force intelligence unit in February 1991 relating to the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We first learned of the report from a press inquiry on 23 January 1995. The allegation contained in the paper was first made at an early stage in the investigation and has been reflected in books about the Lockerbie diaster. It was examined at the time by the competent authorities, as part of their investigation, but no evidence has been found to substantiate it. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate remains satisfied that the evidence supports the charges against the two accused and that there is no evidence to establish that other persons or nations were involved.

Mutual Defence Agreement

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent, Official Report, 30 November 1994, column 710, what further developments have taken place in regard to the proposed extension of the 1958 United Kingdom/United States mutual defence agreement.

Mr. David Davis: The 1994 amendment to the 1958 United Kingdom/United States mutual defence agreement was discussed during the debate on the Consolidated Fund Bill on 15 December. On 23 December there was an exchange of notes in Washington and the 1994 amendment entered into force.

Bermuda

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 745, if the Governor of Bermuda is accountable to him for matters relating to policing in Bermuda.

Mr. Baldry: Section 62 of the Bermuda constitution states that:

"The Governor, acting in his discretion, shall be responsible for the conduct subject to the provisions of this Constitution and any other law of any business of the Government, including the administration of any department of government, with respect to the following matters:

(a) external affairs;

(b) defence, including the armed forces;

(c) internal security;

(d) the police."

These 'reserve' powers of the Governor have been the subject of considerable delegation. Under (d) the following matters have been delegated to the Minister of Home Affairs:

Establishment matters; Finance; General Organisation; Training; Recruitment Policy; Community Relations and Equipment.

In those areas of policing for which the Governor retains responsibility he is of course accountable to the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 745, if he will make a statement on the relationship between the Governor of Bermuda, the Government of Bermuda, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and himself in relation to the administration of their colony.

Mr. Baldry: The relationship between HMG and Bermuda is governed by the constitution of that territory.

The FCO, as the Government Department responsible for co-ordinating policy towards the dependent territories, liaises with Bermudian Government departments through the governor. Under the constitution, the governor, in his discretion, has special responsibility for certain aspects of government which have not yet been delegated to a Bermudian Minister, for example external affairs, defence, internal security, and certain matters relating to the police. All other aspects of government are dealt with by the elected Government of Bermuda.

The governor is accountable to the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, who in turn is ultimately responsible to Parliament for the good government of Bermuda.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many terrorist offences have occurred in Bermuda in each of the last three years.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 744, what allowances are payable to the new expatriate Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Police in Bermuda; what is their value; if they would be payable to a Bermudian appointee; and what funding Her Majesty's Government are providing for the posts.

Mr. Baldry: There are no allowances payable to the expatriate commissioner and deputy commissioner of police which would not be payable to a Bermudian appointee. Her Majesty's Government provides no funds towards either post.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 744, how long the expatriate Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Police in Bermuda will be required to remain in post; and if he will name them; and indicate from which United Kingdom police force they came.

Mr. Baldry: Three and two years respectively. Mr. Coxall, assistant chief commissioner of the City of London police, and Mr. Mylod deputy chief constable of Hampshire have been appointed as commissioner and deputy commissioner.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the crime statistics in Bermuda for each of the past five years.

Mr. Baldry: The statistics which are readily available are for the five years up to and including 1993. These are:

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Crimes:
Against the person	409	466	428	474	483
Against property	3,558	4,291	4,515	3,936	5,216
Others, including drugs	1,173	861	714	792	625

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 744, what training Her Majesty's Government are providing for Bermudian police officers with a view to their being appointed in future to the posts of commissioner and deputy commissioner of police.

Mr. Baldry: The commissioner of police will address the training requirements of the Bermuda police when he takes up his appointment. Officers at all levels of the Bermuda police force regularly attend police training courses in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who paid for the report compiled by HM Inspector-General of the Dependent Territories constabulary; if the report is a private document; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The report was paid for jointly by the FCO and the Government of Bermuda. It was compiled for the Government of Bermuda and is confidential to that Government.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the principal achievements of his recent visits to (a) Bangladesh and (b) India; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's visit to Bangladesh and India enabled him to judge personally the practical value of the United Kingdom's two largest bilateral aid programmes. In Bangladesh he urged the importance of political stability for foreign investors. In both countries he met the Prime Minister and gave high level support to the process of economic reform, notably in a well received speech at the centenary of the Confederation of Indian Industries in Calcutta. He also discussed the future direction of the massively successful Indo-British partnership initiative.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 15 December, Official Report, column 760. My Department's executive agencies make no use of executive search agencies, so there are no guidelines. Should my Department or an executive agency under its control decide to use an executive search agency, it would follow the guidelines set out in "Guidance on Civil Service Commissioners' Recruitment".

Nigeria

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom Government will put pressure on the Government of Nigeria to release all prisoners of conscience.

Mr. Baldry: With our European Union partners we have consistently deplored all abuses of human rights, including the frequent use of detention without trial. We look to the Nigerian Government to respect all their international human rights obligations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Nigerian Government concerning the trial of Mr. Ken Saro-Wiwa.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 January 1995]: With our European partners we have consistently urged the Nigerian authorities to release political detainees, or ensure fair judicial process. Mr. Saro-Wiwa's trial started on 16 January, and we and our EU partners are following developments closely.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to Shell International concerning the trial of Mr. Ken Saro-Wiwa in Nigeria.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 January 1995]: No such representations have been made.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Uranium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of (a) the low enriched uranium, (b) the highly enriched uranium and (c) the natural uranium imported into and exported from the European Union in each year since 1982, came into and out of the United Kingdom annually since 1982.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information, where available, is given in the table.

United Kingdom share by value of European Union extra-EU trade in uranium

Manufacturing

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of gross domestic product manufacturing currently represents; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is available from the Central Statistical Office's "United Kingdom National Accounts"—the "CSO Blue Book". A copy of the "CSO Blue Book" is available in the Library of the House.

British Coal Enterprise

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the west midlands regional forum of local authorities about the continued existence of British Coal Enterprise after March; and what plans his Department has to continue the financial contribution to job creation which British Coal Enterprise has made.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Energy has received several representations from and on behalf of the west midlands regional forum of local authorities about British Coal Enterprise.

The Government and British Coal are continuing to explore options for the range of services provided by BCE. No final decisions have been taken about its future.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met representatives of British Coal Enterprise to discuss their record and future plans.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My ministerial colleagues and I meet representatives from British Coal Enterprise as necessary to discuss a variety of issues.

Engineering Steel Prices

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the average cost per tonne of engineering steel produced at the Sidenor works in Spain and the Klockner works in Germany during the last two years.

Mr. Eggar: The Government do not have access to this type of commercially sensitive detailed information about individual companies, and therefore is not able to provide a meaningful estimate of production costs at these plants.

Lyon Instant Coffee Factory, Greenford

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to intervene in respect of the proposed closure of Lyons instant coffee factory in Greenford by Kraft, Jacobs and Suchard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The closure is most unfortunate and we have every sympathy for the work force involved. However, manning levels are a matter for the commercial judgment of the company and it would be counter-productive for the Government to try to interfere in normal commercial processes. There are a range of facilities available to help redundant workers find new jobs, retain or set up businesses of their own.

Competitiveness White Paper

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he intends to update the White Paper, "Competitiveness, Helping Business to Win".

Mr. Heseltine: As part of its commitment to the continuous improvement of the United Kingdom's competitiveness, the Government plan to publish a second White Paper on competitiveness this summer. This will report on progress over the last year, extend the analysis of the UK's competitiveness and bring forward new initiatives to help business to win.

Green Minister

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will outline the main activities of the green Minister in his Department, in his role as green Minister, during 1994.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 25 January 1995]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has designated me as the green Minister for the Department. During 1994, I and my predecessor as green Minister have continued to ensure that environmental considerations are integrated into the strategy and policies of the Department. Specific environmental initiatives taken during the year will continue to feature in the Department's report on its expenditure plans.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answers 25 January 1995]: I refer to my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster's answer of 25 January 1995, Official Report, column 197.

HEALTH

Hepatitis C

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has available to determine the effectiveness, duration and commencement of United Kingdom screening for hepatitis C compared with European Union countries and the United States.

Mr. Sackville: Routine testing of all blood donations for antibodies to the hepatitis C virus was introduced in September 1991 when the expert committee advised that sufficiently reliable tests, including confirmatory tests were available. In considering their advice the expert committee took into account the experiences of other countries, including EU countries and the United States.

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many long-stay mental handicap hospitals in England are still open.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Dulwich (Ms Jowell) on 27 October 1994 at column 821.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of remaining residents in long-stay mental hospitals in England.

Mr. Bowis: It is estimated that at 31 March 1994 there were 11,500 people with mental handicap needs and with a length of stay of one year or more, in national health service hospitals.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many long-stay mental handicap hospitals do not yet have an agreed closure plan;

(2) what plans she has to close the remaining long-stay mental handicap hospitals;

(3) how many long-stay mental handicap hospitals have closed;

(4) what are the closure dates of the remaining long-stay mental handicap hospitals.

Mr. Bowis: Under Departmental guidance HSG(92)42, copies of which are in the Library, health authorities should work with matching social services departments in planning the transfer of residents and the resources to support them to the community by a mutually agreed date. No deadlines have been set but the aim is to close the old long-stay mental handicap hospitals as soon as practicable. No central record is kept of proposed and actual closure dates.

Secure Hospital Beds

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made with the provision of the additional 550 medium secure hospital beds which the Government plan to have in place by 1996; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: There were no medium secure places by 1979 in response to the Glancy report recommendations which were published in 1974.

The number of purpose-built national health service medium secure places has increased from 602 in January 1992 to 712 at the end of December 1994.

A further 446 places currently being developed are due to open by December 1996, and will take the total to over 1,150. We have allocated £47 million in centrally-funded capital to support this development, and additional places are being funded through the main NHS capital programme.

Blood

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what volume of blood donated was used within the NHS, annually, from 1989 to the present day.

Mr. Sackville: The last year for which complete information is available centrally about the number and usage of blood donations is 1993. Complete information is not available centrally for earlier years.

In 1993 there were a total of 2,312,000 donations of whole blood and 120,000 plasmapheresis donations.

An individual donation may be put to a number of uses as a number of components may be harvested from it. In 1993 the figures for the use of donations were:

Whole blood—106,000 of which 97.9 per cent. was NHS usage;

Red Cell Components—1,959,000 of which 99.5 per cent. was NHS usage;

Platelets—842,000 of which 99.3 per cent. was NHS usage;

Fresh Frozen Plasma—266,000;

In addition some 486,000 litres of plasma were recovered from whole blood donations and 60,000 litres of plasma from plasmapheresis donations.

Patients Charter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it a mandatory requirement for all health authorities and national health service trusts to inform patients if treatment is not being provided on economic grounds.

Mr. Malone: The patient's charter already sets out the right of all patients to receive health care on the basis of their clinical need, not on their ability to pay, their lifestyle, or any other factor. Health authorities are responsible for purchasing health care to meet the needs of their local population.

Suicide Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has ben the suicide rate for (i) each local health authority, (ii) each regional health authority and (iii) nationally among (a) young men, (b) young women, (c) all men, (d) all women and (e) the population as a whole for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: This information will be placed in the Library.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number of terminally or very seriously ill people who commit suicide with or without assistance from others.

Mr. Sackville: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys routinely collects information relating to deaths registered in England and Wales for which there is a statutory requirement to do so. For each death it is possible for the certifying registered medical practitioner to record on the death certificate

"Other significant conditions CONTRIBUTING TO THE DEATH but not related to the disease or condition causing it".

Analysis of this information could, if present, provide an indication of the presence of terminal illness or very serious illness. The information, however, would be unlikely to be complete, difficult to interpret, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

A death known and recorded as having been assisted by a person or persons unknown would not be recorded as a suicide.

Mundesley Hospital

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations govern the sale of the Mundesley hospital.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities manage the disposal of surplus property by virtue of regulation 3(1) of the Functions Regulations, SI 1991/554, subject to the Health Authorities Land Transactions Directions 1989. These directions require RHAs to dispose of land in accordance with property transactions in the NHS, part of the "Estatecode" issued by the Department.

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the effect on the hospital of the vandalism committed between June and December 1994.

Mr. Sackville: As this information is not available centrally, my hon. Friend may wish to contact Sir Stuart Burgess, chairman of Anglia and Oxford regional health authority, for details.

Consultant Rheumatologists

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultant rheumatologists were practising in each health authority area in each year since 1986.

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table:

Whole-time equivalents of consultant rheumatologists by region as at 30 September 1986–1993

Note:

1. Figures for 1990 and 1991 are estimates.
2. Regional figures have been rounded to the nearest whole number; England figures to the nearest 10. Regional figures may not sum to the England totals because of rounding.

Physiotherapists

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to introduce legislation to protect the patients of physiotherapists in the private sector.

Mr. Bowis: In order to practise within the national health service or local authorities physiotherapists must be registered under the provisions of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960.

The Government are considering what action may be needed in the light of concerns about the activities of unregistered practitioners.

Recovered Memories

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the "Recovered Memories" report by the British Psychological Society, a copy of which has been sent to her.

Mr. Bowis: We have received a copy of this report and we welcome its publication by the British Psychological Society, as we accept that psychologists, both as scientists and clinical practitioners, can make an important contribution to the understanding of human memory phenomena. Although strong arguments have been made for and against "false memory", there is a dearth of clear evidence and work which examines these matters is helpful.

Regulatory Bodies

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the composition of regulatory bodies for health care professionals.

Mr. Malone: Information relating to the composition of regulatory bodies for health care professionals will be placed in the Library.

Smoking

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the impact of a total ban on cigarette advertising on (a) the prevalence of smoking amongst the population as a whole and (b) the prevalence of smoking among the 11 to 15-year-old age group.

Mr. Sackville: In 1992 the Department of Health reviewed all the available evidence on the effect of tobacco advertising on tobacco consumption. The findings were published as a discussion document. "Effect of Tobacco Advertising on Tobacco Consumption", copies of which are available in the Library. The Government concluded on the basis of the evidence reviewed that a ban on tobacco advertising in the United Kingdom would not have a major impact in reducing levels of smoking.

The Department of Health review did not identify any studies which seek to quantify the effect of a ban on the prevalence of smoking amongst children aged between 11 and 15. The report "Why Children Start Smoking" Office of Population Censuses and Surveys 1990—identified a number of risk factors in this age group associated with starting to smoke. The report concluded that "greater awareness of cigarette advertising is associated with a slightly increased likelihood of starting to smoke in the future. However, the effect appears to be small in comparison with some of the other influences on children such as the example set by parents and siblings".

Consultants

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will undertake an inquiry to establish the extent to which NHS consultants are not fulfilling their NHS contracts.

Mr. Malone: No. National health service employers are responsible for ensuring that individual NHS consultants are fulfilling their contractual obligations.

Uniform Complaints Procedure

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she intends to introduce legislation to implement the findings of the Wilson committee in respect of a uniform complaints procedure; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: We welcomed the publication of "Being Heard", the report of the Wilson committee, and support its central recommendation for a simpler, speedier national health service complaints system. Over 600 responses were received to the consultation exercise on the report, raising some complex issues. We are carefully considering our response to the report in the light of this and will make an announcement as soon as our present considerations are complete.

Hospitals (Safety)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to review safety in hospitals to ensure the proper protection of patients and staff; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Government place great importance on the creation of a safe and secure environment in hospitals as part of quality health care. Specific arrangements for the safety of patients and staff in hospitals, whether in relation to health and safety requirements or security, are a matter for local national health service employers. Guidance on both of these areas has been made available to hospitals by the NHS Executive ((EL(93)66) and (HSG(94)51)), copies of which are available in the Library.

Disabled People (Access to Health Centres)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is responsible for ensuring that health centres are adequately accessible to disabled people.

Mr. Sackville: Under part M of the Building Regulations 1991, local authority building control officers are responsible for ensuring that health centres and other public buildings are adequately accessible to disabled people.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are operated by her Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within her Department and her Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances her Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Sackville: There are no central guidelines on the use of executive search agencies in the Department of Health. The Department and its agencies use such agencies only when internal advertising and inter-departmental advertising are unlikely to produce the right number or type of candidates.

Mentally Ill People (Registers)

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities have not yet established registers of mentally ill people in the community and how many names have now been entered on those registers which have been published.

Mr. Bowis: The latest reports indicate that all districts have established supervision registers. The National Health Service Executive is taking action to ensure that reviews of all patients are completed so that registers are fully implemented as soon as possible. Information on the numbers of mentally ill people placed on supervision registers is not yet available centrally.

Continuing and Respite Care

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place copies of responses to her consultation on the draft guidance concerning NHS continuing and respite care in the Library; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Copies of the replies which were sent in response to our invitation for comments on "NHS responsibilities for meeting long term health care needs" will be placed in the Library.

NHS Charges

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated total value of charges levied on NHS patients for (a) dental treatment, (b) ophthalmic treatment, (c) hospital treatment, (d) hospital facilities, including television and telephone, (e) car parking at hospitals and (f) other items.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The general dental services charge income, net of refunds, in 1993–94 was £367 million. People who are entitled to a national health service sight test do not pay anything towards its cost. People not entitled to an NHS sight test pay for a private test, and all purchases of optical appliances are private transactions.

For information on private patient income for hospital treatment I refer the right hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave her on 13 January at columns 267–68 and on 20 January at column 766. Information on NHS 'charged' patients—that is, overseas visitors not exempt from charges for NHS hospital treatment—are given in tables 1 and 2. Figures for NHS trusts are not centrally available.

The income generated by amenity beds in each year from 1979 to 1993–94 is given in table 3. Figures for NHS trusts are omitted since these cannot be separately identified. Information on the net income for patient television hire and other non-medical services is not available centrally.

The information requested on car parking charges is not collected centrally.

There are no figures available centrally for any other items.

Specialty Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give for each financial year since 1989–90 the numbers of (a) hospital spells and (b) finished consultant episodes in NHS hospitals in England recorded in the hospital episode system for (i) acute specialties, (ii) geriatrics, (iii) mental illness, (iv) mental handicap, (v) maternity, (vi) well babies and (vii) all specialties.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The number of finished consultant episodes in Hospital Episode Statistics (HES) for each financial year 1988–89 to 1992–93 is given in the annual publication "Hospital Episode Statistics, England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Previously quoted estimates of hospital spells have now been superseded by emerging new information and revised figures will be available in due course.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 December 1994, Official Report, column 401, on NHS expenditure on health care for non-NHS providers, if she will provide comparable information on a regional basis.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 19 January 1995]: The total expenditure, by region, in the last three years by district health authorities, regional health authorities, national health service trusts and general practitioner fundholders on the purchase of healthcare from non-NHS providers will be placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Arts Education

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives he has undertaken in arts education in areas of priority treatment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office provides financial assistance to 22 urban programme projects, the broad aims of which include developing interest in the arts and culture. The estimated cost in the current financial year is £1.65 million. The projects cover eligible areas throughout Scotland.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time equivalent arts teachers there are in secondary schools; and how many there were in 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There were 1,368 FTE art teachers in education authority secondary schools in September 1992, the latest year available. Information is not available for 1985; the estimated FTE figure for 1984 is 1,660.

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the approximate average net profit for dairy farmers in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro: Information on incomes of full-time dairy farms and other farm types is collected in the Scottish farm accounts scheme and published each year in "Farm Incomes in Scotland" and "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom". The latest editions of these publications show incomes for 1991–92 and 1992–93. Incomes for 1993–94 will be published in "Farm Incomes in Scotland" in February.

Longer-term trends in income are given in both publications by means of an index series back to 1986–87, the earliest year for which data are available on a consistent basis.

Both publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Heart Transplants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 573, when he expects to be able to provide the information for the number of heart transplants in November and December 1994.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Two heart transplants were carried out in November and three in December 1994.

Dental Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received since October 1990 from Scottish health boards in relation to the pay structure for dentists and the de-registration of patients.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No specific representations on these points have been received from health boards. However, all health boards submitted views on the Government's proposals for changes to dentists' remuneration and the provision of NHS general dental services, which were published in the recent consultation document "Improving NHS Dentistry". Ministers are now considering the way forward in the light of all views received.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent in each of the last five years on the provision of dental services in each health board area in Scotland.

Note:
Information taken from the annual accounts of the 15 Scottish health boards.
[1] Owing to accounting changes in 1990–91, the 1989–90 figures show net expenditure, i.e., total expenditure less patient charges collected by dentists. From 1990–91 figures show gross expenditure, without deducting patient charges.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dental patients within Scotland received private medical treatment in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No information is available on private treatment.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dentists were on each health board's dental list; and how many dentists joined each health board's dental lists and how many dentists withdrew from each health board's dental list in each of the last five financial years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Table 1 shows the number of individual principal dentists on health board lists for each of the last five financial years. Table 2 shows the number of new list numbers allocated and list numbers cancelled for the most recent two years. It is not possible to identify from these figures the number of individual dentists joining and withdrawing from lists as dentists already on a list may acquire additional list numbers, and dentists who surrender one number may hold other numbers.

[1] For the 1990 and 1991 data the figures show the number of dentists on health board list at 31 March. Dentists contracted to more than one health board are counted only in one health board.
[2] For 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94 the figures show the total number of dentists that practised during the financial year in each of the health boards. The data counts some dentists more than once, and so the total number of dentists shown in Scotland for these three years is less than the sum for the health boards.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many (a) residential and (b) nursing homes were operating for (i) each health board and (ii) each regional council area in Scotland in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) how many (a) residential homes have been closed down in each regional council area and (b) nursing homes have been closed down within each health board area because of the enforcement of the current regulations on the operation of these facilities in each of the last five financial years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information on the number of residential care homes as at 31 March 1994, is as follows:

Region	Local authority homes	Private and voluntary Homes[1]	Total
Borders	11	40	51
Central	17	29	46

Western Isles	17	4	21
Scotland	385	988	1,373

[1] Only includes private and voluntary homes registered with the local authority.

With regard to nursing homes, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 27 October 1994, Official Report, columns 729–30.

Information on the number of residential care homes closed is only available for the last three years. The table below shows the total number of closures. Information on the reasons for these closures is not collected centrally.

With regard to nursing homes, this information is not held centrally. This is a matter for individual health boards as registering authorities who have the power under section 2 of the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938, as amended, to cancel registration at any time if they consider that standards are not being maintained.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the guidelines which currently exist for the operation of nursing and residential homes; and what representations he has received from regional councils and health boards seeking changes to the current regulations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: With regard to nursing homes, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 27 October 1994, Official Report, columns 728-79.

The Scottish Office guidance on the registration and inspection of residential care establishments has been included in circulars issued to local authorities following the implementation of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, the Registered Establishments (Scotland) Act 1987 and the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. Those matters have been discussed at meetings with representatives of regional councils and are among the issues presently being considered by officials.

Fishing Industry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons are currently employed in the sea fishing industry; what were the numbers in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1990; and how many of the jobs are (i) on fishing vessels and (ii) ashore.

Sir Hector Monro: The latest available information is published in table 2.6 of "UK Sea Fisheries Statistics 1993", a copy of which is available in the Library. Figures for Scotland for 1993 reflect changes to the collection of information on vessels and fishermen following the requirement to license vessels of less than 10 m in length. Information on the level of employment ashore is not available.

Incomes

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average national household income in 1993–94 and 1994–95 for (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stewart: Information derived from the family expenditure survey, covering a sample of households, shows that average gross weekly household income in 1993 in Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland was, respectively, £334, £359, £306, and £326. Data for 1993 are the latest available.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for the financial year 1994–95 for each independent sector school in Scotland in descending order the proportions of their school rolls covered by the assisted places scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistical information on the assisted places scheme is collected in respect of each school session and not by reference to financial years. The information provided is in respect of the autumn term of school session 1994–95:

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils were covered by the assisted places scheme; how many independent schools were covered by the scheme; and how many schools were participating in the scheme in each financial year since the introduction of the scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistical information on the assisted places scheme is collected in respect of each school session and not by reference to financial years.

The table provides the information requested for each school session since 1981–82 when the scheme commenced:

Rural Policy

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on rural policy in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: It is now almost three years since the publication of the Scottish Office rural framework, which outlined a new approach to the development of rural policy in Scotland. It emphasised our commitment to ensuring that the needs of our rural communities are met in a way which fully reflects their distinctive and diverse character. Co–ordination of action by Government Departments, agencies, the private and voluntary sectors and local authorities has been achieved through the mechanism of the rural focus group.

It is now an appropriate moment to review our rural policies and the machinery we have in place for delivering them and I intend to report the outcome of that review in a White Paper on rural Scotland, to be published in the autumn.

"Progress in Partnership"

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his proposals for urban regeneration policy in Scotland following consideration of the response to the consultation paper "Progress in Partnership."

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to announce today the outcome of the review of urban regeneration policy in Scotland. The consultation paper attracted a good response and I am grateful to the many organisations and individuals which offered their views. We have studied the responses carefully and they have been influential in shaping our proposals. I have placed in the Library of the House a copy of the paper. "Programme for Partnership", which is being published today by the Scottish Office and which sets out our key proposals. I shall also send individual copies to all hon. Members representing Scottish constituencies.

Regeneration has to be comprehensive, tackling the economic, physical and social problems of disadvantaged urban areas. Each area needs a co–ordinated strategy and a partnership of public and private sectors and local communities.

We plan to encourage the formation of city/district wide partnerships in areas with significant concentrations of deprivation. They will involve, as key partners, the local authorities, Scottish Homes and the local enterprise companies as well as other public sector agencies and representatives of the private and voluntary sectors. These partnerships will be invited both to produce regeneration strategies at city/district level and to develop more localised proposals for priority areas.

About two–thirds of urban programme resources will, in future, be allocated to "Priority Partnership Areas" designed by the Scottish Office following discussions with city/district partnerships. The remainder of urban programme resources will be available to support regeneration activity in other eligible disadvantaged areas. In both cases, allocations will take account of need and the quality of proposals submitted. The Scottish Office will no longer be involved in assessing and approving individual urban programme project applications. These decisions will be made locally.

We plan shortly to consult those bodies chiefly involved in implementation on a range of matters, including the timetable for introducing the new arrangements and a number of detailed issues concerning the operation of the urban programme, and will be circulating a consultation document to them.

The Government are firmly committed to promoting greater private sector involvement in urban regeneration. We therefore propose to establish a working group to examine current private sector involvement in regeneration, identify any factors constraining this involvement and report back with recommendations. The membership of this group, which will draw in leading representatives of key private sector interests and their counterparts from relevant public authorities and agencies, will be announced shortly.

Publications

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of his Department's publications on health matters in the financial year 1993–94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 January 1995]: The total cost to the Scottish Home and Health Department for publications on health matters in the financial year 1993–94 was £317,500.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Crop Development

15. Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he is encouraging the development of viable crops for industry and energy.

Mr. Jack: We have set up an alternative crops unit within the Ministry, and sharply increased research and development funding in this area. We have also been consulting widely on how to help develop these new markets.

Farm Council

16. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the EU Farm Council about the need to reform the common agricultural policy regimes for wine, olive oil, fruit and vegetables.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have led the campaign for reform, not only in these sectors, but more widely. I have set up a policy group to look into the CAP which is meeting this afternoon.

Organic Food

17. Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on support for organic food production.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government are providing help to the organic sector through aid to help conversion from conventional farming; through a substantial research and development programme; and by support for the work of the independent United Kingdom register of organic food standards.

Animal Welfare

18. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes to minimise the trauma to animals raised for slaughter.

Mrs. Browning: There is already much legislation and guidance to protect, during rearing, transit and at the slaughterhouse, the welfare of animals raised for slaughter.

19. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve standards in the transportation of farm animals.

Mrs. Browning: We have issued a proposal to supplement our own comprehensive domestic legislation with a code of practice, and are pressing for EU legislation which matches our own high domestic standards.

25. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the welfare of animals in transit.

Mrs. Browning: Animals in transit have the protection of the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1994, which came into effect this week. This re-makes its 1992 predecessor, with the addition of tighter controls and tougher sanctions in relation to journey plans.

The order implements the provisions of Community directive 91/628, and sets down strict national standards on feeding and watering in transit, including for exported animals, as permitted by the directive pending EC agreement on these aspects.

We are continuing to press for tough and enforceable measures at Community level, and will supplement our national provisions with a code of practice, which we have circulated in draft for comment.

Spanish Fisherman

20. Mr. Sykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the exclusion of Spanish fishermen from the North sea, agreed in 1986, will continue unaffected following the agreement at December's Fisheries Council.

Mr. Jack: Yes. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 18 January, Official Report, column 543.

Forestry

21. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met members of forestry trade unions to discuss the future of the Forestry Commission in England.

Mr. Waldegrave: Representatives of the forestry trade unions regularly meet the Forestry Commission's senior staff discuss a range of issues; they have not sought a meeting with me.

Common Agricultural Policy

22. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in ensuring the effective implementation of EU general agreement on tariffs and trade obligations in relation to the CAP.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Agriculture Council from 12 to 15 December agreed changes in all the basic CAP commodity regulations needed to honour the EU's new commitments under the GATT agriculture agreement, which was ratified by the EU on 30 December. Implementation will generally begin from 1 July 1995, the start of most of the commodity marketing years. The Council's agreement means that management committees should now be able to take timely decisions on precisely how the GATT requirements are to be respected in each sector within the flexible framework laid down by the Council.

Speciality Food

23. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in promoting Britain's speciality food products.

Mrs. Browning: We continue to provide help for this dynamic and growing sector of the food industry through Food From Britain which actively supports over 20 county or regional marketing groups and administers the Government funded scheme of grants. My right hon. Friend will be seeing at first hand an excellent example of successful group activity when he opens the third show of "Taste of the West" in March.

Farm Incomes

24. Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the level farm incomes in 1994.

Mr. Waldegrave: In accordance with the practice of recent years, estimates of farm incomes in 1994 will be published on 31 January.

Dairy Industry

26. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet the President of the National Farmers Union to discuss the dairy sector of the industry.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend the Minister regularly meets representatives of all sides of the agriculture industry, including the President of the National Farmers Union, to discuss issues of importance to them.

Food Industry

27. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken to encourage deregulation in the food industry.

Mrs. Browning: Since we published our food law deregulation programme in September 1993 we have made important progress. Proposals to update and simplify general food hygiene rules have been drawn up as part of the implementation of the EC general food hygiene directive. We have held preliminary consultations on various food composition regulations and will be following these up shortly with firm proposals. Now that directives on food additives have been agreed in Brussels, we expect to be able to consolidate our regulations in this area. We are consulting on updated and revised food labelling regulations and we are reviewing options for the simplification and co-ordination of various vertical food hygiene directives with a view to discussing our ideas in Brussels.

Countryside Preservation

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that the Government are working in partnership with farmers to conserve the countryside.

Mrs. Browning: Farmers have a vital role to play as stewards of the countryside and we work in partnership with them in all our expanding range of environmental schemes.

Animal Exports

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live farm animals were exported in (a) 1994 and (b) 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: Data for 1994 are not yet available. Published figures for 1993 and 1979 are given in the table below. Data for 1993 are provisional, and are thought to under-record the true level of exports.

Numbers of farm animals exported

	1993	1979
Cattle	391,130	506,491
Sheep	662,846	445,438
Goats	136	483
Pigs	151,149	41,171
Poultry	20,450,736	9,386,293

British Pig Breeders Association

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will be supporting the British Pig Breeders Association's application for European Union capital grants to facilitate structural change; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The British Pig Breeders Association is seeking grant aid towards the cost of replacing sow stalls and tethers. Such expenditure would not necessarily attract reimbursement under EC regulation 2328/91, on the improvement of agricultural structures, and any other reimbursement would only be at the rate of 25 per cent. of the eligible national contribution. We are maintaining a tight control over public expenditure and we are not able to meet all demands placed upon the taxpayer by organisations such as the British Pig Breeders Association. The Government carefully considered the costs of the stall and tether ban in 1991 and our view remains that the eight-year transitional period will keep industry costs to an accommodatable level.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Waldegrave: These are matters which are delegated to agency chief executives and I have asked them to reply.

When functions were transferred from the department to the agencies, so was the necessary funding. Expenditure and staffing in the core Ministry was accordingly reduced. There have been various accommodation changes within the agencies which will overall result in savings.

All agencies have to meet performance targets which encompass cost recovery and efficiency gains or savings; these are reviewed each year. Achievement against these targets are summarised in the "Next Steps Review 1994", Cm 2750.

Letter from Martin J. Savage to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 26 January 1995:

In Dr. Walsh's absence, she has asked me to reply on her behalf. We thank you for the questions (PQ 402) in which you asked the Minister of Agriculture for information about each of the Next Steps Agencies within his department. This reply refers to ADAS.

Headquarters buildings

ADAS acquired its own Headquarters building at Kidlington, Oxfordshire in 1992 at an annual rent of £228,893. However, by 1 April 1996, ADAS expects to have relinquished accommodation in central London and elsewhere in England and Wales at an annual saving of approximately £3.5 million.

Support staff

There are no support staff which have been required which were previously not required when our operations were within MAFF. In fact, at the start of the agency there were 546 permanent full-time equivalent support staff and this has now reduced to 364. Thus there has been a reduction of approximately 33 per cent.

Periodical journals

Only four periodical journals have been published with a circulation of 72,000 copies at a cost of £215,760.

Executive cars

There is only one executive car which is used by the Chief Executive. This is at an approximate annual cost of £7,800.

Logos

At the start of the agency there was a relaunch of ADAS as an executive agency. This resulted in the creation of a new logo, its development and field-testing of the new identity. The total cost was approximately £15,000.

Corporate clothing

Before agency status, protective clothing for field and laboratory work was provided for staff. Following the change to agency status, new badges for these items were provided at a nominal cost. As old clothing was replaced new items bearing the corporate logo machined-on were introduced.

Pre-agency, all staff were provided with ties bearing the previous logo; these were replaced at the establishment of the agency. Female staff were provided with brooches bearing the corporate identity. This was at a total cost of £13,000.

Specially designed and printed corporate stationery

Prior to agency status, stationery was available at each office bearing the individual address and the corporate logo. Following the move to agency status this was replaced but the new stationery was generally introduced as the old was used. ADAS was able to purchase new stationery (including the design and artwork) for a total of 96 different offices at a total cost of £35,500 which was equivalent to £370 per office.

I hope that these details provide the answers you require.

Letter from C. J. Lawson to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 26 January 1995:

PQ11 18 January 1995

In the absence of the Chief Executive on business, I have been asked by the Minister to reply on behalf of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate to your questions about Next Steps Agencies in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

The information you requested is as follows:

Headquarters building

The Directorate has not acquired its own headquarters buildings since becoming as an Agency on 2 April 1990. It occupies the same site at the Central Veterinary Laboratory, Addlestone as it did before Agency status.

Support staff

Since 1990 there has been an increase of four in the number of support staff required, three dealing with information technology and one with finance.

Publications

Excluding the Annual Report and Accounts, the Directorate publishes only one periodical journal, the Medicines Act Veterinary Information Service (MAVIS) quarterly newsletter. This was first issued in May 1992 to improve both the quality of service provided to our customers and the transparency of the licensing process for veterinary medicines. Approximately 6,000 copies are issued each quarter to holders of marketing authorisations, veterinary surgeons, interested organisations and individuals. The cost of publication in 1994 was £23,288.79.

Executive cars

The Directorate does not have any executive cars.

Logos

Details of the costs incurred in the design of the Directorate logo are held in our archive store, and it has not been possible to access these in the time available. I will write with the information required as soon as possible.

Corporate clothing

The Directorate does not have any corporate clothing.

Corporate stationery

The Directorate had its own stationery before Agency status was achieved. As stocks ran out, it was replaced at no additional cost by stationery indicating that the Directorate was an Executive Agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Letter from A. M. Kerr to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 26 January 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your Question seeking details of various corporate and related cost aspects of the Next Steps agencies in his Department (MAFF).

The Directorate has not acquired its own headquarters buildings as a consequence of obtaining executive agency status. However, the agency has since been relocated along with some other parts of MAFF from buildings in central London and the South East to a MAFF office complex in York. PSD's share of the rental for the York office complex is estimated to be around £550,000 per annum.

The only published periodical journal that the agency has responsibility for is The Pesticides Register. This is produced jointly with the Health and Safety Executive each month and provides a listing of UK pesticide approvals and other official announcements on pesticides. It is available as an HMSO priced publication and the production costs are met by HMSO and recovered through the annual subscription charge of £55 and sales of individual issues costing £4.50 each.

The Directorate has its own specially designed logo. This was drawn up at the time of the agency launch on 1 April 1993 following an in-house competition and therefore no design costs were incurred. As far as corporate stationery is concerned, an initial set-up supply was obtained at a cost of £680.33. Apart from the need to obtain a new supply as a consequence of the change of address following relocation to the York site, the only stationery costs incurred by the Directorate have arisen from the general need to replenish used stocks and as such do not constitute any additional cost to the normal operational requirements of the organisation.

Finally, the Directorate has not required any additional support staff to that which was required when its operations were part of the core Department, nor has it purchased any executive cars or corporate clothing.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 26 January 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question covering the various running cost issues of the Ministry's agencies in so far as the Central Veterinary Laboratory (CVL) is concerned.

Perhaps I could deal with the issues you raise in the order they appear in your Question. CVL has not acquired a new Headquarters building and remains on the site it occupied at Weybridge when it became an Agency in April 1990.

As you will note the Agency has been in existence for nearly five years now. In that time there have been a number of changes both in central MAFF and at the Agency and it is therefore not possible to draw meaningful comparisons between support staff prior to the creation of the Agency and after. This is particularly the case since CVL now carries out some functions such as marketing and business development not previously undertaken by the Ministry.

CVL does not publish periodical journals nor does it have a fleet of or any single executive cars.

As a separate part of the Department even prior to Agency status, CVL had its own logo. We updated this two years ago at a cost of £503.70. Given we have always had a logo our stationery could not be regarded as specially designed and change was effected as old stocks ran down.

Finally, we do not use any corporate clothing at CVL.

Letter from P. I. Stanley to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 26 January 1995:

Information About HQ Buildings, Support Staff, Periodic Journals, Executive Cars, Logos, Corporate Clothing and Stationery for the CSL Agency

The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) was first launched as a Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) executive agency on 1 April 1992. Two years later CSL was re-launched as an enlarged Agency following the merger of the original Agency with the Food Science Laboratories at Norwich and Aberdeen.

In your question you asked specifically for information on several items, and taking each one in turn:

— prior to gaining Agency status CSL occupied several sites and had its headquarters building at Slough. This continues to be the case and so I can confirm that the Agency has not acquired any new headquarters building;

—since gaining Agency status it has been necessary for CSL to create its own support functions. However the cost has been met from funding that already existed as a result of posts being transferred from the Department along with the operations;

—the Agency has not produced any periodical journals;

—the Agency does not provide executive cars but does operate a leased cars scheme under Departmental rules, which, in order to obtain best value for money, is based upon minimum official mileage and is open to all staff;

—creation of the CSL logo resulted from an internal staff competition at a cost of a £50 award to the winning entrant;

—corporate clothing has not been introduced by the Agency;

—as a discrete part of the Department, prior to Agency status, CSL had its own bespoke stationery. This was replaced with new stationery bearing the Agency logo as stocks ran out.

Sea Fishing Industry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people are currently employed in the sea fishing industry; what were the numbers in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1990; and how many of the jobs were (i) on fishing vessels and (ii) ashore.

Mr. Jack: The latest available information is published in table 2.6 of "UK Sea Fisheries Statistics 1993", a copy of which is in the Library. No separate information is available on the number of United Kingdom onshore jobs from sea fishing.

Bananas

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his assessment of the accuracy of the estimate of the proportion of the benefit of the EU banana policy which accrues to banana producers; and if he will identify where the rest of the benefit goes;

(2) what estimate he has made of the additional costs of banana purchases to United Kingdom consumers in consequence of the EU banana policy; and what estimate he has made of the impact on the consumer prices in other EC nations;

(3) when he received the World bank report on the operation of the EU banana policy; and if he will make a statement outlining his view of their conclusions and also the power available to the United Kingdom Government to take any initiative on efficiency of use of Community funds and the prices charged to the general public;

(4) what impact the general agreement on tariffs and trade will have on the banana scheme of the EEC.

Mr. Jack: The EU schedule drawn up and deposited under the terms of the GATT agriculture agreement sets out the tariffs which will apply to imports within and above the EU tariff quota for bananas together with the size of the tariff quota. Also incorporated in the EU schedule is the text of the framework agreement negotiated between the EU and Colombia, Costa Rica, Venezuela and Nicaragua in the closing stages of the Uruguay round. This grants specific shares of the tariff quota to these suppliers. Under the terms of the agreement they have agreed not to bring any further challenges to the EU regime in the GATT/WTO.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Jack: All recruitment in my Department and its executive agencies is undertaken in accordance with the Minister's rules applying to departmental recruitment as set out in the civil service order in council of 1991. Executive search agencies are only used for more senior appointments where it is difficult to attract a good field through advertising alone. I can confirm that an executive search agency has been used on only one occasion in 1994.

Goat Producers

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial assistance is available to goat producers.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 20 January 1995]: In the United Kingdom there are no premia payable specifically to goat producers under either the sheep annual premium scheme or the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme. Nor are there any specific measures of assistance available to goat farmers under the farm and conservation grant scheme. However, provided that they meet the eligibility criteria, they would qualify for grant under the farm and conservation grant scheme. Grants are available towards the costs of conservation measures, such as repair or reinstatement of traditional buildings, hedges, stone walls and banks and the provision of shelter belts, to established agricultural businesses.

Goat producers may also be eligible for grant under the marketing and development scheme and in relation to goat milk and meat products, the EC processing and marketing grant scheme.

New Zealand Flatworms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has carried out into the areas where the New Zealand flatworm has been found; if it is increasing in numbers and areas affected; what assessment he has made of its impact on native earthworms and soil structure; what measures are available to control its spread; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry of Agriculture has commissioned a research project to look into the questions posed by the hon. Member in England and Wales. The results of that project will be known shortly and it would therefore be inappropriate to comment at this stage.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training, Leeds

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage of those who progressed to (a) full-time work, (b) part-time work, (c) self-employment, (d) further education and training and (e) unemployment from the youth training schemes of the Leeds training and enterprise council in 1992–93; and what are the latest available figures for 1994.

Mr. Paice: The information is not available in the format requested. The following table shows information on outcomes from youth training in the Leeds training and enterprise council area.

Per cent.

	1992–93	1994
Full-time work, part-time work, and self-employment	34	39
Further education and training	8	6
Unemployment	10	14
Found voluntary work or destination not known	48	41

Disability Symbol

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list employers now using the disability symbol.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. John Heppell, dated 26 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question requesting a list of employers now using the disability symbol.

May I refer you to the National List of Disability Symbol Users, copies of which are available in the Library.

The published list is updated approximately every six months and a revised list is currently in preparation. Copies will be sent to the Library when they become available.

I hope this is helpful.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 818, which posts were filled as a result of the employment of executive search agencies; which executive search agencies were involved in this exercise; and what were the values of the individual contracts involved.

Miss Widdecombe: St. James's Management Recruitment was used to fill the post of head of financial services branch and head of the accountancy profession for the Employment Department group. Price Waterhouse is being used to fill the post of permanent secretary of the ED Group. Details of the individual contracts concerned are confidential.

Unemployment

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current (a) unemployment rate and (b) number of persons unemployed among black people (i) under 25 years of age and (ii) in total, giving the figures by gender.

Mr. Oppenheim: The following table gives the latest information available from the labour force survey:

ILO Unemployed people from the black ethnic group
Summer 1994 (not seasonally adjusted)
Great Britain

	All persons	Men	Women
ILO unemployment rate (Per cent.)	26	31	19
Numbers unemployed (thousands)	103	69	35
Of which aged 16-14
ILO unemployment rate (per cent.)	42	53	[1]—
Numbers unemployed (thousands)	27	18	[1]—

[1]Estimate below 10,000, therefore not shown.

Spares Depot, Bromley-by-Bow

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will request the Health and Safety Commission to assess the effects of the current level of service to the public of the spares depot at Bromley-by-Bow as part of his referral of matters of safety related to the reorganisation of British Gas to the Health and Safety Commission.

Mr. Oppenheim: No. This is not a safety matter. The siting of spares depots and the level of stocks held are purely commercial decisions. Nevertheless, British Gas is obliged to conform to all health and safety legislation, including that relating to gas safety.

Jobcentres (Overseas Jobs)

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy on vetting overseas jobs advertised in jobcentres; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The existing instructions in the Employment Service are that vacancies notified to jobcentres for jobs abroad must be vetted by the ES's overseas placing unit before they can be made available to jobseekers.

The overseas placing unit carries out a number of checks including an examination of the contract of employment to be as sure as possible that jobseekers will not be put at risk by taking such employment.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs currently advertised in jobcentres involve work in (a) the European Union and (b) other countries.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. John Hutton, dated 26 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about how many jobs currently advertised in Jobcentres involve work in either the European Union or other countries.

We have at present 154 vacancies in Jobcentres for work outside the UK; 105 for work within the European Union and 49 outside it.

I hope this is helpful.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Miss Widdecombe: Once a decision has been made to fill a senior vacancy by open competition the decision whether to use an executive search agency is taken on a case-by-case basis, depending on the nature of the post, the type of person being sought and whether advertisement alone would produce a satisfactory field of candidates.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria his Department employs for assessing the effectiveness of a TEC's equal opportunities action plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: The training and enterprise councils are contractually required to have an equal opportunities strategy which must include a statement and a plan of implementation and assessment. TECs are assessed according to their action plans for each identified target group; the provision and funding for each group; and the TECs' partners in delivering the provision.

TECs are being helped by the Department and the TEC advisory group on equal opportunities to develop their equal opportunities strategy. The effectiveness of the strategy will be a requirement for TECs to receive a three-year operating licence.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 619, regarding creditors of the South Thames training and enterprise council, how many providers of training and business support programmes within the area covered by the South Thames TEC have not been issued with letters of comfort; and for what reasons.

Mr. Paice: The only providers of training and business services, contracted with South Thames training and enterprise council to deliver initiatives funded by the Department, which have not been issued with letters of comfort, are providers of employer investment in people services. I understand from the receiver that there are 33 employer investment in people providers contracted to South Thames TEC. The Department's main aim is to secure the continuation of training for individuals and therefore providers of such programmes have received assurance about funding. The employer investment in people programme is directed towards organisations and has not therefore been covered by a letter of comfort.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of training and enterprise councils has produced a mandatory action plan in accordance with the TEC's operating agreement clause 8; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: All training and enterprise councils in England have plans for implementing their equal opportunities strategy. The Department is working closely with TECs to ensure that those plans are up to date and effective.

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to ensure that all TECs produce an action plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: Each training and enterprise council is required to implement and assess and equal opportunities strategy in order to receive an agreement with the Department.

They are monitored by Employment Department officials to ensure compliance.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 619, how many employees of the South Thames TEC are to be made redundant by 1 February; what proposals there are to make further redundancies by (a) 1 March and (b) 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: I understand from the receiver that 34 employees of South Thames training and enterprise council have so far been made redundant. I further understand from the receiver that six employees of Routeways, a wholly owned subsidiary of South Thames TEC, have been made redundant and that another 18 Routeways employees are to be made redundant on or around 31 January. Any further redundancies are a matter for the receiver.

Training

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) of 2 December, 1994 Official Report, columns 913–32, if he will provide estimates of (a) Government expenditure or planned expenditure on training in cash terms, (b) Government expenditure or planned expenditure on training in 1994–95 prices, (c) claimant count unemployment, (d) long-term unemployment over one year, (e) real expenditure on training per unemployed person and (f) real expenditure on training per long-term unemployed person for each year from 1978–79 to 1997–98.

Mr. Paice: I have recently written to the hon. Member and placed a copy of my reply in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Westminster Underground Station

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision has been made for access for people with disabilities to Westminster underground station, London (a) during its rebuilding and (b) on its completion.

Mr. Norris: The existing Westminster underground station makes no special provision for people with disabilities. I understand that London Underground Limited is endeavouring to ensure that the current standard of access to the station is maintained throughout the period of the rebuilding. When the rebuilding is completed, the station will feature lift access from street level to both Jubilee line platforms and at both District and Circle line platforms.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on Departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Norris: The guidelines followed when using executive search agencies to fill vacancies are those issued by the Office of Public Service and Science in its publication, "Executive Searchlight". Executive search agencies are employed where it is considered by the Department that a wider field of applicants is required for a particular post than might be attracted by an advertisement alone.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that the proposals contained in the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill will not preclude an appropriate connection between CTRL and Crossrail being built by the private sector at some future stage.

Mr. Watts: The proposals in the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill do not preclude a connection between the rail link and Crossrail being provided at some point in the future.

Driving Licences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he decided to hold the photographs on driving licences in digital form; and when Parliament was first informed of the decision.

Mr. Norris: My hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Sir K. Carlisle) stated in reply to a question by the hon. Member on 9 June 1992, Official Report, column 115, that digitalised photographs of drivers will eventually form part of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's driver record.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the chapters of the study, referred to in the document "Photographs on Driving Licences", which relate to his Department's study into the main privacy issues; and if the study will be accessible to individuals using procedures established to meet the requirements of the code of practice on access to Government information.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to his question on 25 November 1994, Official Report, column 474.

Oxygenated Fuels

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase the use of oxygenated fuels.

Dr. Mawhinney: The environmental case for oxygenated petrol is not yet clear. The research on emissions, fuels and engine technologies—the EPEFE programme—which is being undertaken by the European oil and motor industries in conjunction with the European Commission, is looking extensively into the potential environmental benefits of future vehicle and fuel technology, including the effect of oxygenates. The results are due later this year. I believe that initiatives on fuel composition should be taken in that context.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the responsibility of (a) his Department and (b) other agencies in respect of (i) the issuing of licences for aircraft operators and (ii) satisfying themselves of the safety and air worthiness of aircraft operated by air freight operators; and if he will outline the procedures and regulations involved.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 January 1995]: Under article 6 of the Air Navigation Order 1989, operators of United Kingdom registered aircraft must hold a valid Air Operator's Certificate, issued by the Civil Aviation Authority certifying that aircraft operated by the holder are operated safely.

For an aircraft operated by an European Economic Area airline, the UK recognises an air operator's certificate issued by the country of registration and no further permit is required.

For an aircraft operated by non-EEA airline, under article 88 of the Air Navigation Order 1989 a permit must be obtained from the Secretary of State for Transport for the carriage of passengers or cargo to or from the United Kingdom. In support of an application, an operator must supply evidence that:

a. the national authority of the state of registry of the aircraft considers that the operating company is operationally competent to undertake the type of flight concerned. This is normally in the form of an air operator's certificate.

b. the aircraft to be operated is considered by the national authority of the State of registry of the aircraft to be airworthy.

c. the operating company has entered into adequate insurance arrangements in respect of the aircraft to be operated.

d. the aircraft to be used complies with noise compliance standards.

e. Aerodrome operating minima have been provided and approved by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often airworthiness checks on aircraft operated by air freight operators are carried out.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 January 1995]: A United Kingdom aircraft is not permitted to fly unless there is a valid certificate of airworthiness in force issued by the Civil Aviation Authority. This requires that the aircraft is maintained by the operator in accordance with a maintenance schedule approved by the CAA. This schedule specifies when maintenance reviews should be carried out.

As part of its monitoring and regulations of UK operators, the CAA checks the airworthiness of aircraft and maintenance schedules on a random basis throughout the year. All UK aircraft are checked in depth at least every three years when their certificates of airworthiness are renewed. Prior to each day's flying, and prior to each flight, all UK aircraft are checked by the commander to ensure that they are fit for flight.

For other aircraft, the frequency of checks depends on the policy adopted by the administration in the country of registration. The CAA also inspects foreign-registered aircraft when in the UK and when requested by the Department if there is any concern about the safety standards of a particular aircraft.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspections of aircraft have been carried out over the last five years at Coventry airport; how many licences were refused; what were the reasons for any refusals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This information is not readily available. As part of its responsibilities the Civil Aviation Authority carries out regular inspections of all United Kingdom operators as well as inspecting UK airports and aerodromes. The Department has asked the CAA to carry out two inspections of foreign aircraft at Coventry. The first on 11 January 1995 was on a Nigerian registered Boeing 707 aircraft owned by ADC Airlines of Nigeria. My Department is currently discussing the CAA's findings with the Nigerian authorities. No further applications by ADC Airlines will be considered until these discussions have been completed. The second was on a Russian aircraft operated by Atlant Soyuz on 23 January 1995. My Department is awaiting a report from the CAA.

Airports (Noise Nuisance)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the criteria for grants in respect of noise nuisance to people living near airports, with particular reference to (a) Coventry and (b) Birmingham.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 January 1995]: My right hon. Friend may lay down criteria for noise insulation grants for airports designated for the purposes of section 79 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982. The only airports so designated are Heathrow and Gatwick. At other airports, provision of noise insulation is at the discretion of the local airport management or may be the subject of planning conditions.

There have been various noise insulation schemes at Birmingham, but none at Coventry.

The boundary of the present scheme at Birmingham, which has been implemented in phases, was published in 1991. It is based on 66 Leq—16-hour—daytime aircraft noise exposure contour. The scheme provides grants for noise insulation to specified standards in up to three habitable rooms. The grants are subject to a cost limit of £1,600 plus VAT per dwelling and are paid by the operator of the airport.

Coventry Airport

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to announce the findings of the final report into the crash at Coventry airport.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 January 1995]: After the formal investigation is complete, probably this year.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations his Department received about the issue of licences for landing and taking off of freight operators from Coventry airport, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 January 1995]: Three hon. Members have written to Ministers about the licensing procedures for flights by freight operators from Coventry airport. No letters from the public have been received on this subject. Two telephone calls have been received on the general issue of livestock flights.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his findings regarding the issuing of the licences for air freight quotas at Coventry airport and the airworthiness of the aircraft.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 January 1995]: There is no air freight quota licensing system in this country. However, under article 88 of the Air Navigation Order 1989 and non EEA airline operating a public transport flight for the carriage of passengers or cargo to or from the United Kingdom must obtain a permit from the Secretary of State for Transport. My right hon. Friend has ordered an investigation into certain flights from Coventry airport last year and this is expected to be concluded soon. The question of further action will be decided once the outcome of the investigation has been considered.

In addition, the air accidents investigation branch of this Department is carrying out a formal investigation into the crash on 21 December under the Civil Aviation (Investigation of Air Accidents) Regulation 1989. The AAIB will examine all issues having a bearing on this accident, including the airworthiness of the aircraft. A special bulletin detailing the initial facts established by the investigation was issued on 6 January 1995. It is expected that the final report will be published later this year.

Roads Programme

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to carry out an economic impact assessment of the roads programme and to include a measure of employment effects when assessing the local impact of new roads.

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Truro, (Mr. Taylor) on 23 January at column 54 and on 24 January at column 98.

Railways (Operating Subsidies)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the annual operating subsidy given by each of the member states of the European Union to their railways, expressed (a) in pound sterling and (b) as a percentage of total operating costs for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Watts: The information is not available in the form requested.

Queen Elizabeth II

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has called for an investigation into why the Queen Elizabeth II was allowed to sail from Southampton to New York in December 1994 but was delayed from proceeding on its journey to the Caribbean; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, while satisfied that proper standard procedures were followed, has asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to consider this case as part of his review of the agency's survey and inspection instructions.

Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the consultants, (b) the tasks for which they were employed and (c) the payments made to them from the budget of his Department in (i) 1992–93 and (ii) 1993–94.

Mr. Norris: I will write to the hon. Member with details.

Vehicle Inspections

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many full-time vehicle examiners were employed by the Vehicle Inspectorate on (a) 1 April for each year since 1989 and (b) at present;

(2) how many full-time traffic examiners were employed by the Vehicle Inspectorate on (a) 1 April for each year since 1989 and (b) at present;

(3) how many heavy goods vehicles were examined by (a) traffic examiners and (b) vehicle examiners by traffic area in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and how many received (a) prohibition or (b) defect notices.

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Vehicle Inspectorate Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Ms Joan Walley, dated 25 January 1995:

Number of Vehicle Examiners and Traffic Examiners

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your 2 questions concerning the number of full-time Vehicle Examiners and Traffic Examiners employed by the Vehicle Inspectorate on a) 1 April for each year since 1989 and b) at present.

The numbers of full-time Vehicle Examiners and Traffic Examiners employed by the Vehicle Inspectorate on 1 April for each year since 1989 and at present are provided in the attached table.

Numbers of Vehicle and Traffic Examiners employed by the Vehicle Inspectorate

Operating division	Staff discipline	April 1990	April 1991	April 1992	April 1993	April 1994	December 1994

Notes:
[1] The separate Testing and Enforcement Divisions were not formed until November 1993.
[2] Traffic Examiners were not part of the Vehicle Inspectorate in 1990.
[1] Traffic examiner grades are not employed on vehicle testing work.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mrs. Joan Walley MP, dated 25 January 1995:

Heavy Goods Vehicles Examinations: Prohibition and Defect Notices.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the number of heavy goods vehicles examined by (a) traffic examiners and (b) vehicle examiners by Traffic Area in each of the last 5 years for which figures are available; and how many received (a) prohibition notices or (b) defect notices.

The attached 5 tables show the total number of heavy goods vehicles examined by Vehicle and Traffic Examiners in each of the last 5 years in each Traffic Area, together with the number of vehicles issued with Prohibitions and, where the information is available, Defect Notices.

The number of examinations provided in the tables for Vehicle Examiners cover all roadworthiness inspections apart from those done in connection with accidents or mechanical defect investigations. The prohibitions for these examinations are all for roadworthiness defects. The Traffic Examiner checks concentrate on other legal requirements, not roadworthiness. The prohibitions for this work would all have been issued to vehicles weighed and found to be overloaded.

Kingskerswell Bypass

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to expedite the start of the A380 Kingskerswell bypass; and when he expects work to commence.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 17 January 1995]: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 26 January 1995:

I am writing in response to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Transport about progress on the A380 Kingskerswell Bypass scheme.

This scheme carries Priority 1 status following last year's Review of the Roads Programme. We are currently re-assessing the scheme's traffic effects in the light of the Government's recent response to the SACTRA Report. However, we will press ahead with this work as quickly as possible, with a view to publishing detailed proposals in the form of draft Orders by the summer.

It is still too early to say when the scheme may enter construction. Future progress will depend largely on the successful completion of the statutory planning procedures (which will almost certainly include a public inquiry) and the continuing availability of funds.

WALES

Milk Quota

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what proposals he has to establish a milk quota pool for young entrants to farming; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what proposals he has to monitor the movement of milk quota within, out of and into Wales, and make the relevant information publicly available; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultation he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales concerning the reduction in support for the Wales Environment Education Committee;

(2) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales concerning the commencement of the Plynlymon Elenydd experiment;

(3) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales regarding the achievement of the United Kingdom action plan under the Government's obligations under the biodiversity treaty in (a) 1995–96 and (b) subsequent years;

(4) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales concerning the commencement of the heritage coast principle extension test; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what consultation he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales concerning the reduction of support for (a) the year of the coast programme, (b) the makers of Wales and (c) earth science trails projects;

(6) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales concerning the commencement of the Carneddau commons management experiment;

(7) what consultation he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales regarding the achievement of the obligations under the European Union habitats and species directive;

(8) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales concerning the reduced support for the national nature reserve and biodiversity for the layman interpretation programmes.

Mr. Redwood: I met the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales on 10 and 24 January 1995 to discuss a very wide range of issues concerning the council's functions. I will publish the conclusions in due course.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the Countryside Council for Wales concerning changes in legislation pending in relation to the administration of the (a) Tir Cymen and (b) hedgerow renovation schemes; what increase in staffing his Department will require to administer such schemes; and if he will give an estimate of the date of publication of any amended statutory provision enabling a corresponding transfer of responsibilities.

Mr. Redwood: I have received no such representations from the Countryside Council for Wales. The necessary statutory provision which would enable the Tir Cymen and hedgerow renovation schemes to be transferred to the Welsh Office and the countryside stewardship scheme in England to be transferred from the Countryside Commission to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is in clause 80 of the Environment Bill which had its First Reading in another place on 1 December 1994. But no decisions have yet been made on whether the Welsh schemes should be transferred, or on the staffing increase which my Department would require.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those sites of special scientific interest in national parks which are to be transferred for management purposes to local authorities; and if he will list all those sites of special scientific interest subject to international designation or classified as particularly fragile, intended to be excluded from any such transfer.

Mr. Redwood: No decisions have yet been made regarding the functions of the Countryside Council for Wales.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultation he has had with the local authority associations in Wales in relation to the transfer of powers, duties and resources from the Countryside Council for Wales to the local authorities for (a) public rights of way, (b) local landscape and nature conservation schemes, (c) country parks, (d) publications on sites of conservation interest, (e) oversight and monitoring of small sites of special scientific interest and (f) other miscellaneous duties and powers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations he has had with the nature conservation voluntary bodies concerning transfers of functions, duties and resources for the management of national nature reserves; what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales in relation to the competence and capacity of voluntary bodies to undertake such work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have not consulted local authority associations or others on these matters as discussions are still taking place with the Countryside Council for Wales. If I decide that the CCW should play less of a direct role in any of these activities, I will ensure that interested parties are consulted.

Coal Mining (Illness)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will placed in the Library a copy of the survey conducted by general practitioners in West Glamorgan in 1988 on the links between opencast coal mining and illness.

Mr. Richards: No. The report is the property of the authors, Dr. N. M. Temple and his partners. Dr. Temple is now a trainee registrar in public health medicine and can be contacted at Powys health authority, the Laurels, Bronllys, Brecon, Powys.

A copy of a report of September 1988, commissioned by the Welsh Office and undertaken by Dr. P. C. Elwood, commenting on Dr. Temple's report, has been placed in the Library of the House.

NHS Suppliers (Payment)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the Welsh Health Consumer Services Authority concerning delayed payments to suppliers to the Welsh NHS; what information he has on the number of suppliers who have put a stop on supplies to the Welsh Health Consumer Services Authority because of payment delays; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations he has had with the Welsh NHS trust hospitals and health authorities' directly managed hospitals concerning the delayed payments by purchases for hospital treatment, and delayed payments for supplies to the Welsh Health Consumer Services Authority.

Mr. Redwood: Meetings between the Welsh Office and representatives of NHS trusts and health authorities are held regularly to consider a wide range of issues. These have included the Government's requirement that all NHS organisations settle bills promptly. Appropriate guidance has been issued and I expect it to be followed.

New Zealand Flatworm

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies he has carried out into the numbers of areas in Wales where the New Zealand flatworm has been found; if it is increasing in numbers and areas affected; and what assessment he has made of its impact on native earthworm and soil structure.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Redwood: My Department does not use executive search agencies to fill vacancies in the Department or its executive agencies. It would consider doing so if this offered a cost-effective means of recruitment and was consistent with the principles of fair and open competition.

Patients

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many patients from each health authority were referred to Rookwood hospital, Cardiff, for assessment and for rehabilitation following severe head injury in each year since 1988;

(2) how many Welsh patients in a coma or persistent vegetative state have been discharged to a private nursing home without the health authority accepting the costs, in each year since 1988, giving the figures for each health authority;

(3) how many Welsh patients with severe head injuries, following neurosurgery, were discharged for assessment and for rehabilitation to (a) a recognised specialist assessment/rehabilitation centre, (b) a district general hospital, (c) an independent nursing home and (d) their home in each year since 1988.

Mr. Richards: This information is not available centrally.

Sea Fishing

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are currently employed in the sea fishing industry; what were the numbers in (a) 1970, (b) 1980 and (c) 1990; and how many of the jobs were (i) on fishing vessels and (ii) ashore.

Mr. Richards: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Training Contracts

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposal he has to ensure that the Welsh training and enterprise councils swiftly conclude their contracts for the next financial year with AST Training.

Mr. Richards: The negotiation of contracts between Welsh TECs and training providers such as AST Training is a matter for the parties to such contracts not my Department.

Head Injuries (Rehabilitation)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information has been made available to general practitioners in Wales about the availability of assessments and rehabilitation for patients with severe head injuries; on what date this was given; and in what form it was issued.

Mr. Richards: Only in a limited number of cases would general practitioners make such referrals. However, the Welsh Office has issued a series of protocols and technical documents which cover the type of care people with such injuries should receive. The protocol on "Physical Disability and Discomfort" was sent to family health services authorities in November 1991 and he protocol on "Injuries" in June 1992.

Students

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each county in Wales and for Wales as a whole for the last three available years the number of full-time students in (a) further education, (b) higher education and (c) further and higher education in total, indicating the percentage of women in each case.

Mr. Richards [holding answer 25 January 1995]: Information on the number of full-time students on further and higher education courses at publicly-funded institutions in Wales for the academic years 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94, is the latest available year, are shown in the following table.

Full-time students at publicly funded institutions in Wales [1]

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Financial Statements

Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners if the Church Commissioners will consider publishing quarterly financial statements in accordance with the "Bulletin Review of Interim Financial Information" issued by the Auditing Practices Board.

Mr. Alison: All listed companies, in which the public may buy or sell shares, are required by the council of the stock exchange to publish interim financial information every six months. The purpose of the APB bulletin is to provide auditors with guidance as to the methodology and scope of audit work in relation to such six monthly information. It contains no reference to, or definition of, quarterly financial statements.

The commissioners are an exempt charity and do not believe that the publication of quarterly audited information at a considerable cost would be either justifiable or appropriate.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 January 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 25 January 1995, Official Report, column 197.

Tourist Board Grants

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the level of grant given (a) to the English tourist board and (b) to each of the regional tourist boards in the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: (a) The grant in aid allocated to the tourist boards in the last five years was:

TRANSPORT

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Norris: The Department's personnel information system records the following information on women employees by year and grade:

	Grade 7	Grade 3	Executive Officer	Administrative Officer	Administrative Assistant
1991	58	0	994	2,510	2,911
1992	63	0	1,034	2,531	2,753
1993	68	1	1,007	2,445	2,543
1994	71	4	902	2,448	2,562

Note:
Part-time employees are included in the above and are counted on the same basis as full-time staff.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the classes of vehicle currently exempt from vehicle excise duty for which vehicle excise duty will become payable from 1 July; and if he will give the amount of vehicle excise duty that will be payable in each class.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is as follows:

Current exempt class	Proposed class (and vehicles within it)	Proposed duty
Special vehicles
Road roller	—road rollers:	£135 (under 3.5 tonnes) £150 (over 3.5 tonnes)
Special concessionary
Electric	—electric:	£35
Gritter	—gritter:
Snowplough	—snowplough:
Vehicles used for short journeys between private land	—6 miles a week vehicles:	[1]£15–£5,000
Road construction	—road construction:	[1]£135–£5,000
Street cleansing	—street cleansing:
Street lighting	—street lighting:

[1] No increase of more than £1,000 on first relicensing on or after 1st July 1995.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what amount of vehicle excise duty will be payable from 1 July by agricultural tractors (a) used solely by farmers on their own land and (b) which use public roads for less than six miles per week to travel from one field to another.

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

(a) Nil.

(b) £35.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what amount of vehicle excise duty is (a) payable on agricultural tractors in Northern Ireland at present and (b) will be payable after 1 July; and what exemptions there are from this duty.

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

(a) £35, but "nil" for those used on public roads for less than 6 miles per week when moving between different parts of privately-owned land, and those used solely on private land.

(b) £35. The only exemptions from this duty will be for agricultural tractors used solely on private land.

English Road Network (Expenditure)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the expenditure on the English road network by central Government for each year from 1979 to 1994 in 1994 prices.

Mr. Watts: The information requested is available only on a financial year basis. In 1993–94 prices, based on the GDP deflator, expenditure on trunk roads in England was as follows:

	£ million
1979–80	1,095
1980–81	1,083
1981–82	1,184
1982–83	1,293
1983–84	1,190
1984–85	1,279
1985–86	1,236
1986–87	1,270
1987–88	1,341
1988–89	1,315
1989–90	1,647
1990–91	2,031
1991–92	1,977
1992–93	2,015
1993–94	2,044

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Norris: During 1994, my Department spent £521,644 recruiting 182 staff to my Department and its executive agencies.

Lockerbie

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what basis financial assistance was given to the relations of British nationals in respect of proceedings arising from the Lockerbie air disaster.

Mr. Norris: My Department agreed to meet the costs of legal representation for the British relatives of victims of the Lockerbie disaster at the fatal accident inquiry into the disaster.

As the then Secretary of State explained to the House on 5 July 1990, this offer reflected the exceptional nature of the disaster—a crime perpetrated by international terrorists which resulted in the destruction of a large passenger aircraft in British airspace. There were therefore very special reasons for departing from the practice that relatives' costs are not met in fatal accident inquiries or inquests.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what the hourly rate of pay for auxiliary coastguards in each financial year since 1984–85;

(2) how many (a) full-time coastguards and (b) auxiliary coastguards, excluding rescue centre staff, were in post on 1 April 1984 and each year since;

(3) what was the total payment made to auxiliary coastguards for (a) all training, (b) training excluding rescue centres and (c) patrols in 1984–85 and each year since;

(4) what were the total budgets excluding rescue centres, for (a) each region, (b) each district and (c) each sector for (i) full-time coastguards and (ii) auxiliary coastguards in 1984–85 and each year since;

(5) what was the total number of paid hours for (i) patrol work and (ii) training, excluding rescue centres, in (a) each region, (b) each district and (c) each sector by auxiliary coastguards in 1984–85 and each financial year since then;

(6) how many (a) full-time coastguards and (b) auxiliary coastguards were in post in 1 April 1984 and each year since;

(7) what was the total number of unpaid hours worked by auxiliary coastguards for (a) training on coast rescues, (b) training in rescue centres and (c) patrols in each region, each district and each sector in 1984–85 and each year since;

(8) what was the total coastguard budget in each year from 1984–85 to date at November 1994 prices; and what is the planned budget for 1995–96.

(9) how many sectors in each coastguard district have exhausted their planned budget for the year for (a) auxiliary coastguard training for rescue centres, (b) auxiliary coastguard training on coast rescue and (c) patrols.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 26 January 1995]: These are operational matters for the Coastguard agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 27 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions as these questions deal with operational matters, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

PQ 609/94/95. No sectors have exhausted their planned budgets for (a) auxiliary coastguard training for rescue centres and (b) auxiliary coastguard training on coast rescue. Among the 91 sectors four sectors have exhausted their planned budgets for (c) patrols.

The information requested in PQ 611/94/95 is only available from 1990 and is detailed in the following table:

The information requested in PQs 603/94/95, 605/94/95, 612/94/95 and 613/94/95 is not available in the format requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

London Underground

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list for each London Underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 31 December 1994, the number of fire and smoke incidents, and the proportion that were (a) category A, (b) category B and (c) category C;

(2) if he will list for each London Underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 31 December 1994, the number and length of station closures (a) exceeding 20 minutes during usual period for passenger travel, (b) exceeding one hour during usual period for passenger travel, (c) exceeding one day and (d) exceeding one week that were attributable to (i) staff shortages or (ii) security alerts;

(3) if he will list for each London Underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 31 December 1994, the number and length of (a) attributable station closures, and (b) non-attributable station closures (i) exceeding 20 minutes during usual period for rush hour travel, (ii) exceeding one hour during usual period for passenger travel, (iii) exceeding one day, (iv) exceeding one week and (v) exceeding one month; and which stations closed during the period have yet to be re-opened;

(4) if he will list for each London Underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 31 December 1994, the number of incidents, including cancellations, which resulted in a headway of more than 20 minutes; and how many of these were (a) attributable and (b) non-attributable;

(5) if he will list for each London Underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 31 December 1994, the number of incidents, including cancellations, which resulted in a headway of more than 20 minutes, and the number of these attributable to (a) train breakdown, (b) signal failure, (c) track/points failure, (d) power failure, (e) derailment or collision, (f) adverse weather conditions (including leaves on the line) and (g) security alerts;

(6) what has been the number of (a) assaults and (b) robberies on each London Underground station in (i) 1993 and (ii) 1994;

(7) if he will list for each London Underground line and for each four-week period between 1 January and 31 December 1994, the number and percentage of escalators out of service;

(8) if he will list for each London Underground line the number of (a) crimes of violence, (b) robberies and (c) other offences for each four week period between 1 January and 31 December 1994.

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for London Underground.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set out for each of the next step agencies in his Department whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost of annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is responsible for three agencies: Her Majesty's Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office.

The agencies operate within the framework of demanding quality standards and tight controls of costs and other financial targets as set out in the White Paper, "The Civil Service: Continuity and Change", Cm 2627. Their expenditure is subject to audit by the Comptroller and Auditor General.

HM Land Registry and the Public Record Office were separate Government Departments in their own right before becoming executive agencies reporting to the Lord Chancellor. The Public Trust Office was, and remains, a self-contained and separately accommodated unit within the Lord Chancellor's Department. Agency status has not led to any additional expenditure on accommodation at the Public Trust Office. The office makes a separate bid for funding and has always had to plan to meet all its expenditure from fee income. The establishment of executive agencies has, therefore, had no impact on the overall expenditure of the Lord Chancellor's Department.

A record of the performance of individual agencies in improving efficiency and effectiveness in Government is summarised in "Next Steps Review 1994", Cm 2750.

As the right hon. Member's question concerns specific operational matters, on which the chief executives of the three agencies are best placed to provide answers, I have accordingly asked the chief executives to reply direct.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 23 January 1995:

Parliamentary Question: Expenditure by the Next Steps Agencies

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about Next Step issues. The answers to the various points are given below:

1. The Public Record Office is a separate government department under the Lord Chancellor and has had its own headquarters building for over 150 years.

2. No additional support staff were required when the office became an Executive Agency.

3. The only periodical journal that we published is our Readers Bulletin, at a cost of £4,000 per annum.

4. The Public Record Office has no executive cars.

5. The Public Record Office had a logo specially designed at a cost of £850.

6. The Public Record Office has no corporate clothing.

7. All office stationery is printed in-house. There is no extra cost for printing new corporate stationery.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 26 January 1995:

Parliamentary Question No. 95/181: Expenditure by Executive Agencies

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department to reply to your recent question concerning specific expenditure items by Executive Agencies.

HM Land Registry was established in 1862, and has continued since, as a self financing, separate government department directly accountable to the Lord Chancellor. Its move to Executive Agency status in July 1990 did not, as a consequence, involve it in any significant expenditure. I can answer your specific questions as follows:

(a) The Land Registry's Headquarters building was acquired in 1913 and paid for under the Land Registry (New Buildings) Act 1990 at no cost to the Exchequer;

(b) Its Headquarters staff has reduced since the launch of the Agency in 1990;

(c) The only periodical journal produced by the Registry is its internal staff magazine, introduced in 1986;

(d) The Registry has no executive cars;

(e) The corporate logo was introduced in 1989 following a staff competition at a cost of £800;

(f) The Registry does not have corporate clothing;

(g) The incorporation of the logo into corporate stationery was achieved at no extra cost.

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary, of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your parliamentary question, listed on 19 January 1995, regarding the cost of establishing Next Step Agencies.

The Public Trust Office has not acquired any additional accommodation as a result of becoming an Agency.

Four extra support posts have been created but the additional cost has been met from within the PTO's existing budget allocation from efficiency savings. The creation of these posts in areas such as corporate planning will further contribute to the efficiency of the Office.

The cost of designing and printing the Framework Document, Corporate and Business Plans in 1994 (the first year of Agency) was £10,980. The Corporate and Business Plans will be published annually together with an annual report. The numbers of these documents required for 1995 is currently being researched and the cost is not expected to exceed £5000.

The Public Trust Office does not have any executive cars or corporate clothing and has not changed its logo.

Existing stocks of stationery were used before fresh supplies were ordered with a New Agency heading. The cost of altering the headings was negligible and not separately costed.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the absenteeism rate for (a) the Public Record Office and (b) the Public Trust Office each year since 1991.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executives of the two agencies are best placed to provide an answer. I have accordingly asked the chief executives to reply direct.

Letter from Julia Lomas to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 23 January 1995:

Absenteeism at the Public Trust Office

The Parliamentary Secretary for the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to part (b) of your question listed on 19 January which referred to the "absenteeism rate for the Public Trust Office each year since 1991".

The most recent figures available are as follows:

Year	Number of sick days taken	Staff in post	Average sick days per person
1993	10,443	571	18.29
1994	8,930	561	15.92

Note:
Prior to 1993 separate statistics for the Public Trust Office were not maintained.

Letter from Duncan Simpson to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 25 January 1995:

Parliamentary Question: Absenteeism Rate in the Public Record Office since 1991.

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about absenteeism rates in the Public Record Office since 1991.

The Public Record Office has interpreted the data using the 'lost time rate' calculation, which is the standard calculation used in public and private sector organisations for measuring sick absence.

Lost time rate is calculated as follows:

$$\frac{\text{Number of working days in period} \times 100\%}{\text{Number of working days available}}$$

The figures for the Public Record Office are therefore:

Year	Percentage
1991	5.43
1992	5.04
1993	4.79
1994	4.78

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the absenteeism rate for (a) his Department and (b) Her Majesty's Land Registry in each year since 1991.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The average number of working days lost as a result of sick absence for each member of staff within (a) the Lord Chancellor's Department for the years since 1991 is as follows:

	Days lost
1991	10.4
1992	10.11
1993	11.8
1994	'

' No details available yet.

(b) HM Land Registry is a separate executive agency and this question has been passed to the chief executive for reply.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 26 January 1995:

Parliamentary Question No. 95/183: Absenteeism Rate in the Land Registry

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary for the Lord Chancellor's Department to reply to your recent question concerning the absenteeism rate in HM Land Registry since 1991. I can provide the following information:

	Per cent.
1991	5.2
1992	4.8
1993	4.5
1994	4.5

I do hope that this answers the point raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Civil Enforcement Agents

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will announce proposals for a review of the organisation and management of civil enforcement agents, following public consultation in 1992; and if he will make a statement on how these proposals will affect sheriffs.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The public consultation exercise in 1992 raised a wide range of difficult issues, to which the Lord Chancellor continues to give consideration. I am not in a position to say when an announcement will be made or how future proposals will affect sheriffs.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Details of the number of women employed in the years 1991–1994 at the relevant grades are set out in the table.

Number of women employed in the Lord Chancellor's Department for years 1991–1994 at selected grades

	1991	1992	1993	1994
Grade 3	0	0	0	1
Grade 7	45	51	64	78
EO	1,242	1,342	1,441	1,442
AO	3,454	3,608	3,741	3,644
AA	2,187	2,205	2,151	2,054

Note:
(i) The figures given are all at 1st April of each year, (ii) they include grade and grade equivalents and (iii) part-time staff are accounted for on a headcount basis.

Custody Statistics

Mr. Straw: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the number and percentage of defendants remanded in custody for either way offences who were dealt with within the 70-day limit laid down by the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limit) Regulations 1987; and what was the number and percentage of defendants remanded in custody for indictable offences who were dealt with within the 70-day limit between first appearance and committal laid down by the regulations for each year since the regulations came into force.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information about the number and percentage of defendants remanded in custody who were dealt with within the 70-day limit is not collected centrally in the form requested. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and effort.

HEALTH

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the members of the Medicines Control Agency, their professional employment, and the details of individual entries in their members' register of interests.

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency is an executive agency of the Department of Health. Its staff are civil servants and are therefore subject to the civil service requirements in relation to personal interests.

Septrin

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action she is taking in respect of the use of Septrin in the United Kingdom;

(2) what plans she has to remove Septrin from the market; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to remove Septrin from the market. There is no new safety issue with Septrin and recent data support the view that serious adverse effects associated with it are rare. Changing clinical practice, however, favours single rather than combination antibiotic therapy and the Medicines Control Agency is considering whether the licence for Septrin should reflect this.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support she will give to litigants against the Wellcome group in respect of claims for damage caused by Septrin; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is not the Department's policy to become involved in individual claims for compensation. This is a matter for individuals themselves to pursue with the companies concerned, if necessary through the courts.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons have been identified as blood donor carriers of hepatitis C under current screening methods; and what advice and counselling they receive.

Mr. Sackville: One in 2,000 donors were found to be positive for hepatitis C when screening was introduced in 1991. In the National Blood Service, any donor found to be positive for any infective agent is offered counselling by trained specialist medical staff. In the case of counselling for hepatitis C, national guidelines have been established and are in use at all transfusion centres.

Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the consultants, (b) the tasks for which they were employed and (c) the payments made to them from the budget of her Department in (i) 1992–93 and (ii) 1993–94.

Mr. Sackville: The Department spent £18,398,000 for 1992–93 and £15,933,037 for 1993–94 from running costs on consultancy. Information on national health service consultancy expenditure is not available centrally.

Details of the consultants employed by the Department and the tasks performed for 1992–93 were provided to the efficiency unit as part of its scrutiny on the Government's use of external consultants, copies of which will be placed in the Library. For reasons of confidentiality, and in order to achieve value for money in the future, we are unable to list the specific costs of the consultancies concerned and the amounts paid as this would breach contractual agreements and jeopardise future value for money. Information is not held for 1993–94 and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what Government funding is being provided and what other steps are being taken by the Government to enable pursuit of the research programme recommended in chapter 17 of the report of the national task force on myalgic encephalomyelitis published in September 1994.

Mr. Sackville: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC has been funding a study at the Institute of Psychiatry, the estimated cost of which is £91,000, to investigate chronic fatigue in general practitioners' attenders. Researchers at the institute are attempting to find ways to help sufferers of chronic fatigue cope with their disease and regain their health.

With a view to securing progress and promoting the development of a professional consensus, the chief medical officer has invited the conference of colleges to consider the national task force's report. The views of the conference of colleges will be of much assistance to the Department in helping to determine the best way forward. It is hoped that a response from the conference will be received by the spring.

Smoking

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the prevalence of cigarette smoking among (a) men over 16 years, (b) women over 16 years, (c) boys aged 11 to 15 years and (d) girls aged 11 to 15 years for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The figures in the tables are extracted from the "General Household Survey 1992" and "Smoking Amongst Secondary School Children in 1993", published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. Copies of these reports are available in the Library.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received on the subject of regulating cosmetic surgery.

Mr. Sackville: In addition to representations from the hon. Member and from the hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) we have received 17 letters from members of the public on this subject.

Blood Clots (Drugs)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if drugs designed to break up blood clots are available under the NHS to patients aged over 74 years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Yes.

Insulin Syringes (Charges)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals charge diabetics for insulin syringes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce legislation to allow the wider use of personal information extracted from the registers of births, deaths and marriages; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Government have no plans to legislate beyond the proposals they published in 1990 in their White Paper "Registration: proposals for change", Cm 939. These proposals include making records of births, deaths and marriages over 75 years old available to public inspection. The Government will introduce a Bill when parliamentary time allows.

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much her Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to her Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Sackville: During 1994, the Department and its executive agencies spent £620,870 recruiting 156 staff.

Anabolic Agents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments she has made of the effect on health of the use of anabolic agents.

Mr. Sackville: Anabolic steroids are used therapeutically for certain hormonal and blood disorders. Before a medicinal product may be licensed in this country, it is subject to stringent assessments to ensure that it meets acceptable standards of safety, quality and efficacy. Thereafter, the Medicines Control Agency and its advisory committees, such as the committee on safety of medicines, monitor the safety of all licensed medicines.

In addition, the Department of Health and Departments for Scotland and for Wales commissioned a report from the Centre for Research on Drugs and Drug Behaviour in 1993, "Anabolic Steroid Use in Great Britain: An Exploratory Investigation", copies of which are in the Library.

Physiotherapy

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has considered the evidence by the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy regarding damage done to patients by unregistered physiotherapists; and what she proposes in response.

Mr. Sackville: To practice within the national health service or local authorities, physiotherapists must be registered under the provisions of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960.

The Government are considering what action may be needed in the light of the profession's concern about the activities of unregistered practitioners.

Plague Vaccine

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the plague vaccine manufactured in the United States of America by Cutter Laboratories, Miles Inc, has been granted a licence in Britain.

Mr. Sackville: There are no granted licences in Britain for the plague vaccine manufactured in the United States of America by Cutter Laboratories, Miles Inc.

PRIME MINISTER

Mortgage Interest Payments

Mr. Coe: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the reduction in average mortgage interest payments since their peak.

The Prime Minister: The average mortgage interest payment has fallen by £140 per month, not per week as I inadvertently stated in my answer to the right hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 26 January 1995, Official Report, column 469.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of exports from other European Union countries comes to the United Kingdom (a) as a whole and (b) by each country, in descending order.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information is given in the table.

Visible exports to the United Kingdom as a share of total visible exports

Exports from	Per cent.

Lloyd's

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the legislation governing the activities and regulation of Lloyd's of London.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The principal legislation governing the activities of Lloyd's of London is:

(a) the Lloyd's Act 1982 (together with those provisions of the Lloyd's Acts 1871, 1911 and 1951 which remain in force) and bye-laws made thereunder;

(b) certain provisions of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 (as amended), in particular Part IV (special classes of insurers);

(c) the Insurance (Lloyd's) Regulations 1983 (as amended), and some provisions of the Insurance Companies Regulations 1994, the Insurance Companies (Third Insurance Directives) Regulations 1994 and the Insurance Companies (Amendment) Regulations 1994;

(d) Insurance Accounts Directive (Miscellaneous Insurance Undertakings) Regulations 1993.

That legislation gives effect to EC directives on the consolidation of laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to direct insurance other than life assurance—directive 73/239/EEC, 88/357/EEC and 92/49/EEC—and the corresponding directives relating to direct life assurance—directives 79/267/EEC, 90/619/EEC and 92/96); and the EC directive on the annual accounts and consolidated accounts of insurance undertakings 91/674/EEC.

Other, more general, legislation also affects those operating in the Lloyd's market in a manner comparable to the way in which it affects other individuals or undertakings, including legislation governing the terms and conditions of contracts of insurance—for example the Marine Insurance Act 1906.

Domestic Gas Appliances

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 January concerning supply of spare parts for domestic gas appliances, what assessment he has made, and by what means, of the consequences of his plans for the dis-aggregation of British Gas on the current availability of spare parts for licensed appliances and on the time such appliances cannot be used by consumers for reasons of public safety.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The servicing of domestic gas appliances is a competitive market, in which British Gas service business competes with some 48,000 registered engineers. This part of British Gas operations is therefore not subject to economic regulation and it is for the management of British Gas to choose the most economical and effective means for the supply and distribution of spare parts in order to meet customers' needs.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to issue the proposed discussion document on the implementation of the chemical weapons convention in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Taylor: A discussion document on the implications of the chemical weapons convention for industry will be issued on 31 January; copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Latin America (Firearms Sales)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information his Department has in respect of, and in what ways it is supporting, trade missions to Latin American countries in January and February; what is the involvement of such trade missions in the sale or arrangement for sale of items classified under section 5 (1) (b) of the Firearms Act 1968; and if he will list the items which are so classified.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 26 January 1995]: A trade mission organised by the Caribbean trade advisory group of the British Overseas Trade Board will visit Cuba in early February. None of the planned members of the mission is involved in the sale or arrangement for sale of items classified under section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968.

Nigeria (Military Equipment)

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences his Department has issued for the export of non-lethal military equipment to Nigeria since December 1993.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 20 January 1995]: Thirty export licences have been issued for such military equipment since 1 January 1994.

United Artists (Cable Licence)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the licence issued by his Department to United Artists authorising it to lay cable in Livingston, West Lothian.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 26 January 1995]: Licences issued under section 7 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 are placed in a public register in the Library at the Office of Telecommunications. I have, however, arranged for a copy of the licence for the Falkirk and Livingston cable franchise to be placed in the Library of the House.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on Departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 26 January 1995]: My Department considers using executive search agencies when it is believed that this represents a cost-effective way of extending the field of candidates for key posts.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total spent on each local authority area under (a) the city task forces, (b) the city grant and (c) the housing action trusts programmes in 1993–94.

Mr. Curry: Expenditure by local authority area on each of the programmes in 1993–94 is set out in the table.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in rank order the first round single regeneration budget bids showing where the local authorities fell in the index of deprivation at (a) local authority level, (b) by census enumeration districts and c) by the average score of the three worst wards.

Mr. Curry: The information is shown in the tables. In addition to the bids included in these tables, there were a further 73 successful and 87 unsuccessful bids which covered more than one local authority area. It is not possible to include these in the rankings.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his guidance for the second round of bidding on the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Curry: In the spring.

Recruitment

Nr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Sir Paul Beresford: During 1994 my Department spent £451,905 on recruiting staff to the Department and its executive agencies: 122 staff were recruited.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will come to a decision on the Local Government Commission's final recommendations for Lancashire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We are still considering the Local Government Commission's recommendations about the future structure of local government in Lancashire, and will announce a decision as soon as possible.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and, of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The Department and agencies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible did not exist in any comparable form before the 1992 election. The figures for 1993 and 1994 for these and other areas which fall within the Cabinet Office vote are as follows:

	CO/OPSS		CCTA		CS COLLEGE		CCC

Technology Foresight

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the panel reports of the technology foresight exercise will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The foresight sector panel reports will be published in the spring. These reports will provide a sectoral focus. An overarching report from the technology foresight steering group will be published. This will draw together the main themes arising from the exercise.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Attorney-General what was the absenteeism rate for (a) the Government Property Lawyers and (b) the Law Officer's departments in each year since 1991.

The Attorney-General: The information available for absences through sickness is:

	Numbers of staff employed	Numbers of days absences
a) Government Property Lawyers
1992[1]	—	—
1993	127	1,021.0
1994	128	1,225.0
b) Crown Prosecution Service

1993	27	46.0
1994	27	32.0

[1] Government Property Lawyers Agency was created on 1st April 1993.

[2] The figures for 1992 include staff of what is now Government Property Lawyers.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

The Attorney-General: The chief executive of the Government Property Lawyers has provided the following information. Of the matters raised by the hon. Member, only the following have resulted from the establishment of the agency:

Cost of specially designed logo	1,586
Cost of specially designed and printed stationery	464

EDUCATION

School Finances

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 641-42, on what date information requested by the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth on the balances held by schools in England was due in to her Department; what steps are being taken to obtain the information where it is late; and what requirement is made of local education authorities to give reasons if the information is late.

Mr. Robin Squire: Regulations made under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988 require local education authorities to publish their local management of schools outturn statements before 1 November following the end of the financial year to which the statement relates. In relation to statements for the year 1993–94, a letter was sent by the Department to all LEAs in October 1994 reminding them of the imminence of this deadline. In cases of significant delay, the LEAs in question have been further reminded as appropriate, and explanations obtained from them. The attention of LEAs has also been drawn to the powers of the Secretary of State under section 99 of the Education Act 1944.

In the table included in the answer given on 19 January to the hon. Member, the following figures should be substituted for those previously given:

LEA	Balance £000
Avon	12,093
Buckinghamshire	8,116
Dorset	7,200

Secondary Schools

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is (a) the number of places, (b) the number of pupils and (c) the percentage excess or shortage of places in (i) local education authority maintained and (ii) grant-maintained secondary schools in each local education authority in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table. Data on surplus places in the 286 grant-maintained schools in stage 1 authorities are not available. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on Friday 9 December 1994, Official Report, columns 410-14 which gave for each local education authority the total number of unfilled places in schools where the number of places is greater than the number of pupils.

Net surplus places in secondary schools by local authority area (excluding GM schools in stage 1 authorities—see note 1) January 1994

[1] Stage 1 LEAs which have one or more GM secondary schools

1. Stage 1 = less than 10% of pupils in the GM sector
2. The GM columns include schools which became grant-maintained on or before 1 April 1994.
3. A negative figure indicates a net shortage of places.

Expenditure (Books and Equipment)

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much per pupil was spent by each local education authority on books and equipment in 1993–94 prices in (a) 1979–80 and (b) 1993–94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table sets out per-pupil expenditure in 1993-94 prices by LEAs in England on books and equipment at LEA-maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in 1979–80 and 1992–93, the latest year for which figures are available. Equivalent information is not available for grant-maintained schools.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the estimated number of pupils in 1995–96 aged (a) five to 10 years and (b) 11 to 15 years in each local education authority and in total.

Mr. Robin Squire: The projected numbers for England for January 1996 are as follows:

	Age (at 31 August 1995) Five to 10[1]	11 to 15
Maintained primary and secondary schools[2]	3,583,000	2,691,000
Maintained special schools[2]	33,000	48,000

[1] Excluding rising fives, ie pupils whose fifth birthday falls between 1 September 1995 and 31 December 1995.

[2] Including grant maintained schools.

Projections at local education authority level are not available.

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much her Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to her Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Boswell: In 1994, the Department and its executive agency recruited 339 staff. We estimate the recruitment costs to the Department to have been approximately £210,000.

Projections at local education authority level are not available.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 720, on what date she was informed of the allegations made concerning the Student Loans Company; what was the nature of these allegations; at what date management consultants were invited to tender to carry out an investigation into the allegations; if she will identify those consultants who were invited to tender; which consultant submitted the lowest tender; on what date the contract was awarded; on what date the provisional findings were received; and if she will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend was informed of the most recent allegations of impropriety at the Student Loans Company on 5 October 1994. Tenders for the contract to carry out an investigation were invited from three organisations—Robson Rhodes, Ernst and Young and Coopers and Lybrand—on 10 October 1994.

The contract was awarded to Coopers and Lybrand on 12 October. The winning tender was not the lowest. The contract was awarded to the tenderer who was considered to offer the best value for money. Lowest cost alone is not necessarily the best indicator of this.

My right hon. Friend received a report of Coopers and Lybrand's provisional findings on 9 January 1995. The investigation into the allegations is not complete. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the nature of allegations which are still under investigation, nor to make public provisional findings. The full conclusions of the investigation will be reported to the Public Accounts Committee in the usual way.

Boxing Skills

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if she will give the names and locations of any other schools that have applied for, or will be participating in, the basic boxing skills training scheme similar to that given at Croxteth community school; when the scheme will be launched; and what will be the extent of Government funding;

(2) what funding has been made available to Croxteth community school to teach basic boxing skills.

Mr. Forth: The boxing skills training scheme at the Croxteth community school is privately sponsored and attracts support of £5,000 through the Government's sports match scheme. Information about similar schemes is not collected centrally.

SCOTLAND

Health Care International

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what offer of regional selective assistance has been made to the Abu Dhabi Investment Group in relation to its bid for the Health Care International hospital at Clydebank; on what this RSA assistance will be spent; if the offer is conditional on the original employment targets at the Health Care International being achieved; and what these targets are.

Mr. Stewart: No further offer of regional selective assistance has been made. If a new investor were prepared to take the project forward, it is possible that the balance of existing offer could be transferred. Such a transfer would be subject to appropriate conditions and would be based upon the project being taken forward as previously envisaged. If the offer were transferred, the unpaid balance of grant would be released by stages, in line with the achievement of job targets which would otherwise have applied to HCI. These targets envisaged the ultimate creation of 1,800 direct new jobs at Clydebank.

Gemini Housing Association

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what funds Scottish Homes has made available to Gemini Housing Association;

(2) which housing associations have been invited to make a bid to take over Scottish Homes's property in (a) Springburn, (b) the Royston area and (c) Dennistown;

(3) when the board of Scottish Homes decided that its officers and staff would form Gemini Housing Association;

(4) how many officers of Scottish Homes have been involved with the setting up of Gemini Housing Association;

(5) how many hours Scottish Homes's officials and staff have devoted to the running of Gemini Housing Association during 1994.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member with the relevant information.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he has decided on the compulsory competitive tendering timetables to apply in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Government are committed to ensuring that the benefits of local government reorganisation and compulsory competitive tendering are realised across Scotland. To achieve both aims, a flexible programme is required, linked closely to Scottish circumstances.

I therefore issued a consultation paper on compulsory competitive tendering and local government reorganisation last July. I have considered carefully the responses submitted and have decided on certain adjustments to the timetables proposed in the consultation paper.

For work subject to CCT under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, competition will be reintroduced with effect from 1 July 1997. By this date, contracts must be commenced. There will be no exemptions for construction contracts worth over £0.5 million.

For work subject to the Local Government Act 1988, competition will be reintroduced and contracts will require to be let between July 1997 and July 1998.

The new manual services, security services and vehicle management will follow the same timetable as for the existing 1988 Act activities.

The new professional services will require to be let between April 1998 and April 1999. Authorities will have flexibility during that period to decide the areas of work that they wish to put out to competition first.

The timetable for housing management remains unchanged. However, the dates will now refer to when contracts are let rather than when the contracts commence. This is in line with the timetable for professional services.

WALES

Schools, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit (a) Penyffordd voluntary primary school and (b) Penyffordd county primary school, Clwyd; and if he will meet the governors of each school.

Mr. Richards: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have any plans at present to visit Penyffordd voluntary primary school or Penyfford county primary school. We will, however, bear these in mind when arranging our future programmes of school visits.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning his Department's allocation of money for schools in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The Department has received many representations on the issue of education funding in Clwyd in 1995–96 from school governors, head teachers, parents and others. My right hon. Friend does not set individual county education budgets. It is for each local authority to determine how much of its available resources to direct towards the services it provides, including education, in the light of its statutory responsibilities and its perception of local needs and priorities.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his new policy on school playing fields.

Mr. Richards: No. Neither my right hon. Friend nor I has announced a new policy on school playing fields.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the absenteeism rate for (a) the Welsh Office and (b) Cadw in each year since 1991.

Mr. Redwood: The average number of working days absent per member of staff was 9.82 in 1992 and 10.1 in 1993. Statistics on a comparable basis are not available for 1991.

Details for Cadw are not separately identified; they are included in the Welsh Office totals.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost, (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Members' Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Mr. Redwood: I apologise for not replying to the hon. Gentleman's question sooner.

Ministers in this Department sent out 900 official Christmas cards in 1994 costing (a) £755 to buy, and (b) £200 to post.

The disaggregated cost for staff time is not available.

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and, of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Redwood: The numbers of individuals were as follows:

As at 1 April	1991	1992	1993	1994
Total women	1,016	1,140.5	1,021	948
Grade 3	—	—	1	1
Grade 7	25	26	24	23

Company Sizes

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many companies in Wales employ (a) more than 200 persons; (b) fewer than 200 but more than 20 persons and (c) fewer than 20 persons; and what are the percentages represented by each of all companies.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not available for companies in Wales. However, a breakdown of census of employment data units, which are roughly equivalent to workplaces, is available and is shown in the table:

Size of units (Number of employees)	Number of units[1] in Wales (thousands)	Per cent. of total
1-24	52.5	88.4
25-199	6.3	10.6
200 and over	0.6	1.0
All sizes	59.4	100.0

Source: NOMIS.
[1] The figures relate only to data units with employees. Solo proprietors and HM forces are excluded. Also excluded are agricultural and horticultural holdings. Some workplaces may comprise several data units because of the way the information is collected eg. because of different pay arrangements, for weekly and monthly paid staff.

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Redwood: In 1994, my Department spent £121,000. Forty-one substantive staff were recruited, some from other Departments.

SMART Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the European Union on the criteria to be used and the control and compliance mechanisms in adjudicating applications for assistance under the SMART scheme.

Mr. Redwood: SMART is a nationwide competition whose guidelines are drawn up by the DTI as the lead Department. The European Commission was consulted and notified of the criteria used for running the competition and judging the entries. All SMART programmes receive EC approval prior to launch.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to strengthen the scientific, technological and engineering qualifications and know how available to his advisory panel on applications for assistance under the SMART scheme.

Mr. Redwood: I am satisfied that its combined professional qualifications and experience, and the additional expertise that it is able to call upon when necessary, suitably equip the appraisal team for the task of judging the SMART competition.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the scientific and engineering qualifications of his advisory panel on applications for assistance under the SMART scheme; when he last assessed the quality of the science and engineering qualifications required to make appropriate assessment of such applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The members of the appraisal team together possess the following qualifications: BSc, PhD, DipSH, ONC(Eng), IEng, MIMechE, AMIEE. Each also has direct experience of having worked in industry.

In addition, the panel is able, as necessary, to consult specialist advisers within other Government Departments, the research establishments and the Patent Office, thus affording them access to expertise of worldwide repute.

NHS Trusts Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the appointment of a chairman and the board for the (a) Dental Hospital trust, Cardiff and (b) Cardiff Community and Priority Services trust.

Mr. Redwood: Interviews for the post of chairman of both trusts will be held shortly, and I shall make an announcement as soon as possible thereafter. I hope to announce the names of non-executive directors by 31 March.

Cultural Organisations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library copies of the reports from (a) his Department, (b) S4C and (c) the Association for Business Sponsorship in the Arts in Wales into the funding of cultural organisations in Wales via matching grants.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has not prepared any reports into his matter. Any reports relating to S4C or the Association of Business Sponsorship in the Arts in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning past expenditure on out-sourcing computer systems and relevant infrastructure expenditure on dedicated land lines which required but did not receive (a) board approval, (b) advertisement in the contracts supplement of the Official Journal of the European Union and (c) his Department's approval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have written to the chairman of the WDA expressing my concern about the breaches of the rules on the procurement of information systems. The chairman shares that concern and the agency has taken steps to ensure that such breaches do not recur. The chief executive of the agency has reported on these matters to the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee and has taken disciplinary action.

My Department is discussing with the agency what further action may be necessary.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 717, if he will give the equivalent out-turn figures for 1993–94 and the anticipated out-turn figures for 1994–95 for the management running costs of each of the non-departmental public bodies he sponsors.

Mr. Redwood: The figures are set out in the table:

[1] The definition of running costs for the Sports Council for Wales has been revised, effective from 1994–95.

Konver Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the eligibility of (a) the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff and (b) the Cardiff area as a whole for designation under the Konver scheme.

Mr. Redwood: Assessment of the Atomic Weapons Establishment, and its impact on the wider Cardiff area, has shown that the area and the establishment will not be eligible for Konver support.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have had their claims for invalidity benefit withdrawn in Liverpool each quarter during the last five years for the reason for being found fit for work within limits; what is the average weekly loss of income incurred by a claimant who has invalidity benefit withdrawn.

Mr. Hague: The information requested on the numbers who have had their invalidity benefit withdrawn is not available.

The average weekly amount of invalidity benefit in payment at 3 April 1993, the latest date for which information is available, was £79.34.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the consequential effect will be to claimants of the proposed changes from invalidity benefit to incapacity benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Existing invalidity benefit recipients will be protected. Incapacity benefit will be paid at the same rates as the preceding invalidity benefit. The rates will continue to be uprated annually with the exception of the earning-related addition, which will be frozen at the rate in payment at the point of change.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total annual amount paid to those people in receipt of invalidity benefit; and if he will break the figures down in percentage terms for payments to (a) single claimants, (b) additions for spouses or partners, (c) additions for children or dependants and (d) additional component element, and age additions.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1993–94 the total amount paid to people in receipt of invalidity benefit was £6,967 million. Data are not collected on the breakdown of expenditure between each of the components of invalidity benefit. Estimates of the breakdown are in the table:

Breakdown of invalidity benefit expenditure at 1993–94 prices

	£ million	Per cent.
Personal benefit	4,610	66
Adult dependency increase	780	11
Child dependency increase	120	1.7
Invalidity allowance (net)	210	3
Additional Pension	1,200	17
Graduated benefit	40	0.6

Note: 1. Estimates rounded to the nearest £10 million. Totals may not sum due to rounding.

2. The invalidity allowance figure is the net amount paid. Invalidity allowance is extinguished by additional pension and /or guaranteed minimum pension entitlement.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings are expected to arise from the change from invalidity benefit to incapacity benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Total estimated savings from the incapacity benefit changes are:

1995-96: £410 million

1996-97: £1,185 million

1997-98: £1,720 million

Note: Estimates rounded to nearest £5 million, expressed in cash terms.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants who lose their entitlement to invalidity benefit will be entitled to income support.

Mr. Hague: On average, in 1995–96 we estimate that about 45 per cent. of claimants excluded by the new medical test will be entitled to income support.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what resources he has made available to the Social Security Benefit Agency and the Independent Tribunal Service to cope with appeals arising out of the change from invalidity benefit to incapacity benefit.

Mr. Hague: The total amount provided to the Benefits Agency to deal with incapacity benefits in the first year is £37 million. This includes resources to deal with appeals. The amount provided for the independent tribunal service for incapacity benefit appeals in the first year is £8.17 million.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the current invalidity benefit claimants will be exempt from the new test for incapacity benefit, by virtue of (a) age, (b) receipt of disability living allowance care allowance—higher rate—and (c) prescribed list of severe medical conditions.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 9 December 1994, Official Report, columns 385–86.

CSA

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much revenue has been collected by the Child Support Agency as fees in the first half of 1994–95; how much in the way of fees is outstanding; and how many actions have been taken by the CSA to enforce outstanding fees.

Mr. Burt: Administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 27 January 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the collection and enforcement of fees due to the Child Support Agency.

During the period April 1994 to September 1994 the Agency collected in excess of £1 million in fees. At the end of November 1994, the total for the year to date was £1.45 million and the amount of outstanding fees due to the Agency, including fees charged in 1993/94 was £11.6 million.

The Agency has sought or is seeking Court action for the recovery of outstanding fees in approximately 1,350 cases.

I hope that this is of help.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the total sum expended by his Department on incentive payments to those opting into personal pensions.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The most recent published, audited figure on the cost to the national insurance fund of incentive payments for those opting out of SERPS into appropriate personal pensions for the period 1988 to 1993 is £2.4 billion, up to the end of 1992–93.

The Government Actuary's report on the contributions uprating order for 1994–95 estimated to total additional cost for 1993–94 and 1994–95 as £0.7 billion.

Fraud

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evaluation he has made of the experience of the Australian Government in the detection and eradication of fraud by benefit claimants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: As part of the six nations social security interchange scheme, a senior official from the security, fraud and control division of the Australian Department of Social Security has been seconded to this Department since 1993. He has been assisting in the development of the security strategy, modelled on the equivalent Australian fraud control plan.

A small team from Australia is currently working with the Information Technology Services Agency and the Benefits Agency as part of the security strategy.

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Invalidity and Disablement Allowance

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the current claimants in receipt of invalidity or severe disablement allowance are (a) single, (b) in receipt of additional payments for their spouses or partners, (c) in receipt of an additional earnings-related element and (d) in receipt of additional payments in relation to age bands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: There is no information on the number of invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance recipients who are single.

The available information is in the table.

The number of Invalidity Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance recipients in Great Britain on the 3 April 1993 (latest date for which information available)

Benefit	Number of recipients
Invalidity Benefit	1,580,000
Adult dependency increase	457,000
Additional pension	1,384,000
Invalidity allowance[1]	584,000

Family Credit

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much family credit expressed (a) in overall cash terms and (b) as a percentage of total expenditure on family credit, has been given to families with (i) one child, (ii) two children, (iii) three children, (iv) four children and (v) five or more children in each of the past five years.

Mr. Roger Evans: The precise information is not available. Information derived on a pro-rata basis is set out in the tables:

EMPLOYMENT

Jobcentres

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by region the location of every jobcentre in Scotland stating in each case if the jobcentre runs job clubs.

Miss. Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 27 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the location of every Jobcentre in Scotland by region, stating in each case if the Jobcentre runs Jobclubs.

In Scotland, Jobclubs are run both directly by the Employment Service (ES) and on behalf of the ES by external contractors. The following table shows the location of Jobcentres by Regional and Island Council Authorities and those which run Jobclubs.

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1994, the Employment Department group recruited 1,630 permanent staff. It is not possible to identify the cost separately from general expenditure on human resource management.

Staff Safety

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been carried out into the feasibility of safety screens for Employment Service staff dealing with the jobseeker's allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 27 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about what research has been carried out into the feasibility of safety screens for Employment Service (ES) staff who would administer the proposed Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA).

The ES is currently considering what safety measures will be appropriate as and when the proposed JSA is introduced.

A generic risk assessment has concluded that most JSA processes can be handled in an open plan environment. Local risk assessments will be carried out in all of our local offices.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. McCartney : To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many assaults have been committed on staff in the Employment Service and Department of Employment in each year since 1979 (a) nationally, (b) by region and (c) by individual office; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdercombe: I am able to supply statistics for the period 1989 to September 1994. No earlier statistics are available. I am sorry that details at individual office level could be obtained only at disproportionate cost to the taxpayer.

Employment Service 1989—September 1994 reported assaults (all types)

Region	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	[1]1994
Yorkshire and Humberside	46	79	112	81	126	104

East Midlands	93	118	79	103	99	148
West Midlands	50	135	98	208	115	114
Total	1,209	1,390	1,234	1,389	1,445	1,288

This table includes statistics of all reported assaults. These include actual physical assaults, attempted physical assaults and verbal abuse. Of the 7,955 incidents reported during the period, 1,065 were actual assaults, 1,197 were attempted assaults and 5,693 were incidents of verbal abuse. Most of the actual assaults do not result in an injury and only a small proportion of injuries require any kind of medical treatment.

Employment Department	nil	nil	nil	nil

All parts of the Department regard any assault as serious. Those parts of the group that experience assaults are keenly aware of the issues and take appropriate steps either to eliminate the risk or to reduce it, so far as is reasonably practicable. Such steps would include providing information on the risks, appropriate training and the issue of protective equipment such as attack alarms and mobile telephones.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his most recent assessment of the privatisation of the skills training agency.

Mr. Paice: The privatisation was completed in 1990 in line with the objectives set for it. The purchasers of skill centres have been responsible for the business since then.

Training

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Government will provide training, rehabilitation and assistance from the Employment Service to provide for those taken off invalidity benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: People whose claims to invalidity benefit are disallowed and who register with the Employment Service have immediate access to a full range of provision to help them return to work. This help includes referral to training programmes run by training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies as well as the advice, assessment and guidance, and where necessary specialist services for people with disabilities, which are available directly from the ES. These arrangements will continue and be expanded following the introduction, from April 1995, of incapacity benefit.

DEFENCE

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Freeman: The number of women employed by my Department and its agencies over the past four years at the specified grade levels is set out below.

Civilian women

	1 April 1991	1 April 1992	1 April 1993	1 April 1994

[1] Non-Industrial staff only, including grade equivalents.

Electro-shock Devices

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the payment arrangements for military, security and police equipment supplied by United Kingdom companies for the Al-Yamamah contract with special reference to electronic batons.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 17 January Official Report, column 452.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Freeman: These are matters for the chief executives of my Department's executive agencies. I have therefore asked them to reply.

Letter from Mike Dymond to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 26 January 1995:

1. As part of his co-ordinated reply to your question concerning the operation and costs of Next Steps Agencies, Minister of State (DP) has asked me to provide you with the details for the Defence Accounts Agency.

2. The Agency was launched under the title of its predecessor organisation (Director General Defence Accounts) on 1 April 1991 and was restyled the Defence Accounts Agency on 1 July 1993.

3. We occupy the same buildings as we did before becoming an Agency. No new buildings have been acquired.

4. Staff numbers have been reduced steadily since the Agency's launch, from 2,184 on 1 April 1991 to an expected 1,808 on 31 March 1995. No additional staff have been required as a result of agency status.

5. We continue to publish a monthly staff newsletter (Snapshot) which was originally introduced by the Director General Defence Accounts in September 1989 as a means of improving communication within the organisation.

6. The Agency has no executive cars.

7. The badge which we use as our logo is an amended version of that granted by the College of Heralds to the Director General Defence Accounts in 1980. The amendment, to reflect the Agency's change of title in July 1993, was made at a cost of £500.

8. The Agency has no corporate clothing.

9. The Agency does have a small stock of its own letterheaded paper. The letterhead was designed in-house; the cost of printing was £2,016.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 23 January 1995:

PO NO. 5744G Dated 20 January 1995

Minister of State (DP) has asked me to reply to your question about Next Steps Agencies and how this relates to my Agency.

Taking the individual parts of your question in the order put to me:

DASA has not acquired its own headquarters building.

No additional support staff were employed since becoming an Agency. All work associated with our status was absorbed by existing staff at a time when DASA was reducing its staff numbers by 10%.

DASA publishes an Annual Report and Accounts. The main cost of this has been borne centrally by MoD. We estimate this cost to be about £15,000.

We have no fleet cars.

DASA's logo was designed and produced by our own staff at negligible cost.

We have no corporate clothing.

Since becoming an Agency in 1992 we have spent a total £3,028 on corporate stationery.

Letter from A. C. Sleigh to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 23 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your question on perquisites and other expenditure by Next Steps Agencies.

This Agency has not acquired any additional land or buildings since it was launched as an Agency on 1 July 1992. The number of support staff has reduced by 14 since that date. The fleet of passenger vehicles has been reduced from 5 to 1, the annual operating cost being approximately £11,000. The design cost of the Agency logo was £2,000 and the cost of corporate stationery is £1.20 per 1000 sheets of paper.

This Agency does not publish periodical journals, neither does it have corporate clothing.

Letter from Keith Ellender to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your written question to the Secretary of State for Defence on additional costs incurred, as they affect my Agency.

I can tell you that:-

a: No of HQ building has been acquired;

b. No additional support staff have been required;

c. No periodical journals are published;

d. No cars have been acquired;

e. No special logo has been designed;

f. No corporate clothing has been acquired;

g. No specially designed and printed corporate stationery has been purchased. New stationery to reflect the change of status was ordered through Ministry of Defence, Common Service channel, at negligible cost.

Letter from J. R. Drew to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 27 January 1995:

I am responding as Chief Executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO) to your Parliamentary Question about Next Steps Defence agencies.

ABRO was launched on 1 April 1993 and consists of 9 workshops and 11 contract repair offices in various locations around the United Kingdom with a Headquarters in Andover, Hampshire. The Headquarters occupies exactly the same MOD building as the organisation which preceded it—Command Army Static Workshops.

The increased delegations afforded to the Agency have necessitated an increase in support staff of 22.5 since launch date.

In 1994 the Agency published its first Annual Report and Accounts at a cost of £33,746 inc. VAT. The Corporate Plan for 1994 was also published at a cost of £22,105 inc. VAT. These were given wide public and parliamentary distribution and copies are enclosed for you.

ABRO has no fleet of executive cars. As Chief Executive I retain the use of the Army MT pool car for official business to which I was earlier entitled. This vehicle is also available to the rest of the Headquarters staff and is used extensively by them. Most of the satellite workshops also have a car available but, again, it is used in a "pool" role rather than as dedicated Executive Car.

ABRO does have its own logo which was designed in-house prior to launch, at no additional cost.

There is no corporate clothing currently in use within the Agency. However the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency (DCTA) have undertaken to supply overalls for our workforce which will incorporate the ABRO logo on the back. This will be in place of the Army coveralls currently supplied by DCTA and will involve no additional cost.

ABRO still uses normal MOD channels for its day to day stationery requirements however we are currently in the process of ordering a three year supply of specially designed and printed business cards for about 100 of our Headquarters staff at a cost of some £1400. We have many dealings with private companies and contractors for which these cards will prove invaluable.

Letter from Richard Kirby to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

PQ ON NEXT STEPS AGENCIES

Your Ordinary Written question, tabled in Parliament on Thursday 19 January, sought specific information concerning the operation and expenditure of agencies.

I am responding as the Chief Executive of the Defence Clothing & Textile Agency—a Tri Service organisation which was granted Defence Agency status on 22 November 1994. For ease of reference, I have tabled my responses in the attached Annex and I trust they meet with your requirements.

Annex:

A. Questions and Responses to the PQ.

Questions and responses to the PQ from the Hon. G. Kaufman MP which relate to the defence clothing and textiles agency (DCTA)

1. Q: Have they acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rent?

A: No acquisition has been made. Continuing use is being made of existing service facilities.

2. Q: How many support staff they have acquired which were not required when their operations were within his Department?

A: None, staff numbers are reducing in accordance with Defence Cost Studies and efficiency programmes.

3. Q: How many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost?

A: None that are new—existing Corporate and Business plans are available and will continue to be produced.

4. Q: How many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost?

A: None that are special. Ministry of Defence Central Motor Transport services are used where appropriate.

5. Q: How many have specially designed logos and at what cost?

A: One DCTA logo, as depicted on my covering letter with no cash expenditure as it was designed in-house.

6. Q: How many have corporate clothing and at what cost?

A: There is no discrete corporate clothing within the DCTA excepting normal service uniforms for Service personnel.

7. Q: What is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery?

A: No additional costs have arisen.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 27 January 1995:

QUESTION 27, ORDER PAPER 19 JANUARY 1995

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if he will set out for each of the Next Steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down.

2. The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (CBDE) became a Defence Agency on 1 April 1991 at which time the opportunity was taken to change the Establishment name from the Chemical Defence Establishment in order to fully reflect the range of work carried out. As such there was no need to change the Establishment logo apart from modifying "CDE" to "CBDE".

3. CBDE did not need to acquire additional or new headquarters buildings nor did it have to produce specially designed and printed corporate stationery. It does not have corporate clothing or a fleet of executive or single executive cars.

4. CBDE does not publish periodical journals as such but as an Executive Agency is required by the Treasury to publish an Annual Report and Accounts which is available to the public through HMSO. We also publish much of our work in scientific and technical journals.

5. Only one additional Higher Executive Officer was employed to deal with the additional delegations afforded to the Director General contained in the Framework Document.

Letter from Andrew Roach to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 23 January 1995:

I have been advised of your Parliamentary Question regarding Agencies, made on 17 January and my reply is set out below.

The Defence Animal Centre (DAC) is a single military unit and very few infrastructural changes have been made in order to facilitate the move to Agency status. In particular:

no additional HQ buildings have been acquired (in fact the number of buildings has reduced as a result of colocation of sites)

no additional support staff have been employed

no periodical journals have been published

I have a military staff car which is also used for other purposes and is not an "Agency extra" the DAC logo was designed by one of my staff (at no cost)

we do not have corporate clothing other than military uniform

we do not have corporate stationary

I hope that this answers your question satisfactorily. Please contact me if you require any further information. This reply has been sent initially to the MOD Framework Team.

Letter from Tweedie M. Brown to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your questions about the cost of various Defence Agency activities. In respect of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency the information is as follows:

Purchase/Lease of HQ Buildings: None—Existing buildings retained.

Support Staff: 4.

But this would be offset within MOD from whom we took over the work.

Periodical/Journals: None.

Cars: None.

Logo: Design produced in house. Reproduction costs £1,000.

Clothing: Protective clothing with Corporate symbol—£1,500.

Corporate Stationery: Produced in house. Cost not separately identifiable.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to you on the operational and managerial issues regarding the Defence Research Agency (DRA) as part of the overall response to your question concerning costs of Next Steps Agencies.

No extra costs were incurred in providing a headquarters building when the DRA was formed as I and my staff were able to move into offices already available at our existing site at Farnborough previously occupied by the Royal Aerospace Establishment senior management which was being superseded by the Agency.

Part of the change in establishing the Agency in 1991 involved amalgamating four separate establishments to form the DRA and disbanding the previous headquarters operation in London. We were able to reduce significantly the number of support staff in this process but, since we no longer have records of support from the previous establishments, I cannot give precise details.

My two Managing Directors and I currently retain three cars for official business at a total annual running cost of £4,500. When not required all three vehicles are available for use by other senior staff in a pool system. The previous arrangements involved each of the four Directors of establishments having their own cars plus at least one car for the London headquarters.

The DRA currently has one in-house journal, the DRA News, which has an annual printing cost of £86k. This replaced three pre DRA journals (RAE News, ARE News and RARDE News).

Corporate clothing is worn by police and guards, DRA reception staff and messengers at all our sites. This is not fundamentally different from clothing worn by MOD messengers and similar staff. Costs are not held centrally and it would involve disproportionate effort to ascertain exactly what they are across the organisation.

The DRA has its own logo to assist with developing and maintaining a corporate trading image which was designed as part of an in-house competition. The prize of a bottle of champagne was the only design cost involved!

The DRA corporate stationery was mainly designed by our in-house staff at little extra cost and, although exact figures are not held centrally, I estimate the current annual printing cost is around £40k. Of course stationery used to be printed for all establishments separately at rather greater cost.

I hope you find this information useful.

Letter from G. H. Wilson to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your PQ 5744G.

HQ Building. We have occupied the same building since 1909.

Support Staff. We have achieved a net reduction in staff.

Journals. Our only externally published document is the annual report and accounts. For 1993/94 this was £1671.

Cars. We have no executive cars.

Logos. Our logo has remained substantially the same since 1892. There have been no design costs since then.

Clothing. We do not have corporate clothing. The cost to the Department of school clothing has reduced since acquiring Agency status.

Stationery. We have no specially designed stationery. Our letterheads which have remained unchanged for several years are produced in-house.

Letter from M. R. Pack to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 27 January 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION - PQ S744G

You recently asked The Secretary of State for Defence several questions relating to Next Steps Agencies within the Ministry of Defence. I am replying on behalf of the Hydrographic Office.

The Hydrographic Office occupies the same buildings that it did prior to its becoming a Defence Agency in 1990. The most recent of these buildings was built 1968–69.

No additional support staff have been employed since the HO became an Agency in 1990.

The Hydrographic Office does not publish a journal but in common with all Agencies is required to publish an Annual Report and Accounts. Our last report, for the financial year 1993/94, was published in July 1994 and laid in the House on 21 July 1994 (HC 482). The Report and Accounts were printed in-house. The costs are estimated to be in the region of £3,300.

The Hydrographic Office one car for the use of staff on official business. The full cost amounts to approximately £27,000 a year.

No extra costs have been incurred on specially designed logos, corporate clothing and specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Letter from A. W. Pollard to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your question in the House on 17 January 1995 concerning setting up costs of Next Steps Agencies. You will be aware that the Logistic Information Systems Agency (LISA) is one of the newest within the Ministry of Defence having been launched on 21 November 1994.

LISA inherits the organisation, accommodation, resources and commitments of the Directorate of Logistic Information Systems (Army) which it replaced. This resulted in a smoother transition and less upheaval to our activities and staff than can sometimes be the case (where, for example, collocation accompanies a move to agency status).

Costs associated with LISA were kept to a minimum and met within current budget. Where possible, in-house resources were used in preference to contractors.

Answers to your specific questions are as follows in respect of LISA:

a. Acquisition of Headquarters Buildings. No extra buildings were required.

b. Additional Support Staff Required. LISA is committed to meeting the Options for Change and other manpower reductions to which its predecessor Directorate was working. While the Agency does call for some different skills these have generally been met by re-classifying existing posts and commencing a programme of re-training with costs being met within existing training funds.

c. Periodic Journals. I have no current plans to introduce a periodic journal. The cost of publishing the necessary Framework Document, Corporate Plan and Key Targets was £7,750.

d. Executive Cars. All executive travel is met by Departmental transport. I have no current plans for fleet or single executive cars.

e. Logo. LISA's logo appears on this letterhead. Its cost was kept to the minimum commensurate with the importance of establishing a corporate identity which our staff could share and our customers recognise. It was designed in-house by the Department's Common Services (Graphics) staff. £2,000 of civil service overtime was incurred for this and the graphic design of the documents in sub-paragraph c above. The cost was met from my budget.

f. Corporate Clothing. I have no current plans to introduce corporate clothing.

g. Corporate Stationery. Expenditure on corporate stationery is no greater than that normally required by Departments and Branches. Stocks of the predecessor Directorate's stationery were deliberately run down in anticipation of the transition to Agency status.

I hope that the above information answers your questions. Please contact me if you require any more detail.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

The Defence Secretary has asked me to reply in respect of the Meteorological Office to the questions you recently asked about Next Steps agencies.

In brief:

the translation of the Meteorological Office to agency status did not require us to acquire a new HQ building some 22 extra staff were needed to support the changed organisation but overall staff numbers have fallen by 113 since Vesting Day no new journals have been produced. The Meteorological Office publishes only one periodical, 'Outlook', a customer magazine, at a cost of £40,000 no additional cars have been provided. I make use of a car and driver as part of RAF MT support, at an estimated cost of £24,000 the Meteorological did not change its logo when it became an agency

no corporate clothing was introduced no corporate stationery was specially designed or printed; the Meteorological Office continued to use its existing logo.

I hope this gives you the information you need.

Letter from M. Wilson to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 27 January 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION ON NEXT STEPS AGENCIES

I am replying in respect of the Military Survey Defence Agency to your recent question reference PQ5744G on additional costs arising from our status as a Next Steps agency.

Taken in the order of your question, the answers are:

a. Headquarters Building The Military Survey headquarters is accommodated in the building occupied prior to agency launch. No expenditure on land or buildings has been incurred as a result of agency status.

b. Support Staff

The need to produce agency accounts has resulted in the establishment of two additional Management Accountant posts: 1 Senior Executive Officer and 1 Executive Officer with 2 supporting Administrative Officers. However, agency requirements aside, it is likely that the Management Accountancy posts would be needed in the future to support Treasury's resource accounting and budgeting initiatives.

c. Journals

A quarterly publication is produced to inform staff on policy and internal developments affecting Military Survey, but not specifically in the agency context. Whilst some copies are distributed outside Military Survey, it is intended principally as a house magazine. Editorial and publication costs are as follows:

Staff: £15,200 per annum

Production: £8,800 per annum

d. Transport

As a 2-star serving officer, the Director General has access to a Grade 1 staff car. This entitlement is not related to his capacity as an agency chief executive.

e. Logo

Military Survey acquired its logo some 50 years ago. No money has been spent on a corporate image since agency launch.

f. Corporate Clothing

None.

g. Corporate Stationery

Military Survey uses standard MOD-style letter headings. No special stationery has been designed.

Please let me know if you require further information. I am copying this letter to Minister (Defence Procurement).

Letter from Captain W. Graham to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

The response to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning questions on specific costings. Our responses are itemised below:

a. The NARO has not created a Headquarters building.

b. Two additional staff have duties directly attributable to Agency functions.

c. All Annual Reports and Accounts are produced at a cost of £8,000 per annum. A Corporate Plan and Framework Document were produced when the Agency was launched, at a cost of £9,000 each.

d. No executive vehicle has been acquired as a consequence of the NARO's existence.

e. The NARO logo was designed using in-house Agency resources at no additional cost.

f. A NARO logo has been added to workforce overalls at a cost of £941.

g. NARO headed stationery has replaced MOD stationery at no additional cost.

Letter from Brian Raine to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION

I have been asked to reply to your Question on various matters concerning the Agency.

Queen Victoria School has not acquired any additional headquarters buildings since the introduction of Agency status. We have recruited one full time and one part time support staff to manage additional agency responsibilities.

The only periodical journal published is the annual School magazine at no cost to public funds.

The school has no executive cars, specially designed logos, corporate clothing or specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

I hope this answers your Questions satisfactorily, but if there is anything on which you wish me to elaborate, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Letter from R. H. Kyle to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 27 January 1995:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he would set out for each of the Next Steps Agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual costs; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery. As Chief Executive of the RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency, I have been asked to reply with regard to my Agency.

The RAF Maintenance Group Defence Agency has not acquired a new HQ building since achieving Agency status in 1991. The Agency's Headquarters staff still occupy offices in their parent Command's Headquarters building at Headquarters Logistics Command, RAF Brampton, Cambridgeshire. However, the space the Group occupies has reduced since the Agency formed in 1991.

Staff numbers were not increased as a result of adopting Agency status. Indeed, the overall number of HQ staff has been reduced significantly since launch and further reductions are planned as part of a rationalisation programme following the formation of Logistics Command. Any new posts that might be considered to exist solely because of Agency tasks and status were created by reorganising existing posts and activities.

The Agency does not publish a periodic journal, but it does publish its Annual Report and Accounts. Copies of this document are used for internal and external publicity purposes, as well as to meet the statutory reporting and accounting requirements. The cost to the Department for the printing of the 1993/94 Report was £12,673, including HMSO's management and handling charges.

The Maintenance Group's requirement for executive cars has not been affected by Agency status. If anything, the actual requirement has decreased in line with the decrease in the number of executive staff.

The Agency has not incurred any additional expense for headed stationery or specially designed logos as a result of attaining Agency status. Neither has the Agency adopted any form of corporate clothing.

Since its formation as a Defence Agency, the Maintenance Group has consistently achieved its Key Management Targets. Detailed reports against these targets are contained in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts, the latest copy of which I have enclosed with this letter.

Letter from Peter Ayee to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

NEXT STEPS AGENCYS

I WRITE, AS CHIEF EXECUTIVE OF THE ROYAL AIR FORCE SIGNALS ENGINEERING ESTABLISHMENT (RAFSEE), WHICH WAS LAUNCHED AS A NEXT STEPS DEFENCE AGENCY ON 22 NOVEMBER 1994, IN RESPONSE TO YOUR WRITTEN QUESTION OF 19 JANUARY 1995 TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR DEFENCE.

RAFSEE, WHICH REMAINS PART OF THE LOGISTICS COMMAND OF THE ROYAL AIR FORCE, IS BASED AT RAF HENLOW AND HAS A DETACHED GROUP AT RAF WYTON. THE AGENCY OCCUPIES THE SAME BUILDINGS THAT IT DID BEFORE LAUNCH AND HAS NOT ACQUIRED ANY ADDITIONAL STAFF, VEHICLES OR CORPORATE CLOTHING. MOREOVER, IT HAS NOT SO FAR PUBLISHED ANY JOURNALS, CREATED A LOGO OR HAD ANY STATIONERY SPECIFICALLY DESIGNED OR PRINTED FOR THE DEFENCE AGENCY.

Letter from John May to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 27 January 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION NO. PQ5744G—TRAINING GROUP DEFENCE AGENCY REPLY

I WRITE IN REPLY TO YOUR QUESTION OF THURSDAY 19 JANUARY, IN WHICH YOU SOUGHT INFORMATION ABOUT CONSEQUENTIAL COSTS OF NEXT STEPS AGENCIES.

I AM ABLE TO TELL YOU THAT THE LAUNCH OF TRAINING GROUP DEFENCE AGENCY HAS NOT BEEN ACCOMPANIED BY UNWARRANTABLE OR UNNECESSARY EXPENDITURE IN ANY OF THE FIELDS COVERED BY YOUR QUESTION. THE AGENCY'S HEADQUARTERS DOES NOT HAVE ITS OWN BUILDING OR EXECUTIVE CARS; IT SHARES THE BUILDINGS AND POOL OF CARS ESTABLISHED FOR HEADQUARTERS ROYAL AIR FORCE PERSONNEL & TRAINING COMMAND, OF WHICH IT IS AN INTEGRAL PART. THE AGENCY HAS NOT INTRODUCED ANY CORPORATE CLOTHING OR ANY SPECIALLY DESIGNED STATIONERY AND HAS NO PLANS TO DO SO; SIMILARLY, THE AGENCY HAS NO PLANS TO ADD TO THE LIST OF JOURNALS IT HAS TRADITIONALLY PUBLISHED FROM TIME TO TIME AS A ROYAL AIR FORCE GROUP.

THE AGENCY HAS NOT ACQUIRED ANY SUPPORT STAFF BEYOND THE SPECIALISTS REQUIRED TO OPERATE THE MANAGEMENT AND FINANCIAL REGIME REQUIRED BY THE NEXT STEPS INITIATIVE; THE POSTS IN QUESTION WERE ESTABLISHED BEFORE THE AGENCY WAS VESTED ON 1 APRIL 1994.

THE AGENCY SOMETIMES MAKES USE OF A SIMPLE LOGO THAT WAS DEVELOPED IN-HOUSE AT NO EXTRA COST TO THE AGENCY'S BUDGET. THIS ARTWORK WAS REQUIRED TO IDENTIFY THE AGENCY'S CORPORATE DOCUMENTATION THAT WAS LODGED IN THE LIBRARIES OF THE HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT AT THE TIME OF VESTING, AND WILL SIMILARLY IDENTIFY FUTURE ANNUAL REPORTS AND ACCOUNTS.

I AM COPYING THIS LETTER TO THE AGENCY'S OWNER, THE AIR OFFICER COMMANDING IN CHIEF HEADQUARTERS PERSONNEL AND TRAINING COMMAND.

Letter from Ian Mitchelson to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 27 January 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION NEXT STEPS AGENCIES

Service Children's Schools (North West Europe) was formed as a Defence Agency in April 1991 within the Ministry of Defence to provide an educational service to dependent children residing with MOD personnel in North West Europe. The Agency's Headquarters is collocated with among other formations Headquarters United Kingdom Support Command (Germany) and Headquarters 2 Group Royal Air Force at Rheindahlen and shares their accommodation. As part of the civilian component, which supports our Forces in Germany, the arrangements for the Agency's accommodation is covered by the Status of Forces Agreement which provides the basis for the stationing of Sending States Forces in Germany. Under this Agreement buildings are owned by the German Government and made available for use of the British Forces without charge. Therefore the Agency occupies accommodation under the same arrangements as that prior to its acquisition of Agency status.

Prior to its formation, some 28 support staff (ie non-professional, non-educational staff), were employed directly in support of the provision of education to service children in Service Children's Schools (Germany), the forerunner of the Agency. These were employed at the Headquarters at Rheindahlen and in two Area Headquarters Offices.

In addition, Service Children's Schools received a significant degree of support (i.e. Financial, Budgetary, Contractual, Personnel, Legal, Property Management etc) from a multitude of sources both within BAOR and more widely from the Department. The organisation also received much administrative and professional support from the Service Children's Education Authority based in the United Kingdom.

On formation at the outset of FY 1991/1992, the Agency's support staff increased to 36, in direct relation to the additional responsibilities that accompanied the change in status. Corresponding and no doubt greater savings in staff will have been made by those areas of the Department that were relinquishing their duties in respect of the new Agency.

In the period since the formation of the Agency, the support staff has increased in size to a current figure of 41. This has occurred partly as further responsibilities have been delegated to the Agency, but mainly in response to the demands placed upon SCS(NWE), by the need to manage the Agency's response to Drawdown, (ie, the reduction in Troop deployment in North West Europe and the consequent closure of schools). Some 40 schools have been closed over the period since September 1992.

With the conclusion of the Drawdown process later this year, the Agency has planned for FY 1995/1996 a rationalisation programme, to reduce the level of its support staff. This will include, for example, the closure of the two Area Education Offices and the loss of the associated staff. Whilst plans have yet to be finalised, it is expected that the Agency's support staff will reduce in number to about 36, the number with which it was originally formed. Further efficiency improvements may well prove possible as part of the Department's and Agency's continuing drive for value for money.

SCS(NWE) produce one in-house journal for the benefit of parents and staff 3 times per year. It is compiled and edited in-house and published by HMSO at an annual cost of £7000.00 pa.

The Agency does not have any cars on its books at all. In order to meet travel needs for individual journeys the Agency does have access to a pool of cars operated by the Army in Germany on a self-drive basis. This arrangement also applies to the Chief Executive.

The Agency does have a logo, again this was designed in-house at no additional cost. The Agency does use its logo and letterhead on paper which is produced locally alongside all the other headed stationery used by UKSC(G) and HQ 2 Gp RAF (as was the case in the pre-Agency days) at no additional cost compared to other like stationery; however a notional cost can be provided if this would be helpful. I attach an example of the headed letters in use.

The Agency does not have any corporate clothing apart from discretionary ties which may be obtained by staff as a private transaction.

Al-Yamamah Fund

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what types of equipment have been funded from the Al-Yamamah fund.

Mr. Freeman: Equipment supplied under the Al-Yamamah programme includes Tornado and Hawk aircraft and naval minesweepers, along with associated equipment, support and infrastructure. Further orders for Tornado and training aircraft have been announced since January 1993.

Bullying

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance is given to senior armed forces personnel regarding investigation of allegations of bullying.

Mr. Soames: The armed forces take a very serious view of bullying and senior armed forces personnel are aware that all allegations of bullying should be referred promptly for formal investigation. Guidance in the form of policy letters has been issued by the Royal Air Force and the Royal Navy to remind all personnel of the policy on bullying. The Royal Air Force also produced orders specifically covering bullying to be read and signed annually by officers. The Royal Air Force's policy on bullying and initiation ceremonies is also repeated in quarterly standing orders, which all Air Force personnel are required to read. In 1993, the Army published a discipline and standards paper, which included instructions to counter bullying.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1991 no disciplinary action has been taken against soldiers who went absent without leave when on their return it was established that the absence was because of bullying.

Mr. Soames: This information is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary to State for Defence what guidance is given to all levels of armed forces personnel regarding procedures for reporting incidents of bullying.

Mr. Soames: Information about making complaints under the redress of complaints procedure provided for in the Service Discipline Acts is given to all new recruits on joining. Advice on making complaints about bullying is also included in the leaflet "The Armed Forces. Your Rights and Responsibilities" given to new recruits. Details of the redress of complaints procedures are also set out in Queen's regulations, which are available in every ship and service establishment. Advice on making complaints about bullying is also repeated in policy letters and other documents.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many courts martial there have been in each of the last five years; in how many of these the charge was related to some form of bullying; and in how many there was a guilty verdict.

Mr. Soames: The number of courts martial recorded in the last five years is as follows:

1990: 1,030
1991: 900
1992: 887
1993: 857
1994: 813

Bullying is not an offence under the Services Discipline Acts, but is dealt with under charges such as conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline, ill-treatment of subordinates, common assault and actual bodily harm. To identify the cases relating to bullying among all courts martial records for the last five years would entail disproportionate cost.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department in preventing bullying and brutality in the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: The armed forces take a very serious view of bullying. It has been made clear throughout the services that bullying will not be tolerated and various measures have been taken by the services to counter bullying.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serious individual cases of bullying have been referred to his Department each year since 1990.

Mr. Soames: My Department regards all cases of bullying as serious and service personnel are aware that all complaints of bullying will be vigorously investigated and the perpetrators punished. Details of the seriousness of individual cases are not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Yachts

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when and at what cost his Department purchased yachts from a Swedish company; whether the proposed purchase was announced in his Department's "Contracts Bulletin"; what consideration was given to the purchase of British-built yachts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The yachts in question were bought by the British Kiel Yacht Club in Germany, from its private funds; no costs were incurred by my Department.

Mull of Kintyre Cairn

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on whom the cost fell for the cairn on the Mull of Kintyre at the site of the recent crash of a helicopter transporting personnel from Northern Ireland.

Mr. Soames: The building of the cairn was a local community initiative. The cairn stones were laid by members of the rescue services and subsequently cemented together to create a permanent fixture. I understand that local lighthouse employees paid for the brass plaque, which was mounted on the cairn

David Hart

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 451, (1) what formal undertakings will be made of Mr. David Hart in respect of his work as special adviser in the next phase of the privatisation of the married quarters estate;

(2) if any of the independent advisers used in the development of plans for the next phase of the privatisation of the married quarters estate will be permitted to purchase properties included in that sale.

Mr. Soames: The undertakings required of independent advisers on the future of the married quarters estate will be designed to ensure that there is no conflict of interests between that role and possible business interests. No independent adviser assisting in consideration of the way ahead will be permitted to have a financial stake in the outcome of the transaction.

Married Quarters Estate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those individuals or companies who have shown an interest in the purchase of the married quarters estate in any future privatisation.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is commercially confidential.

Land Mines

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy concerning the export of land mines which possess a self-destruct mechanism.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom has declared an indefinite moratorium on the export from the UK of all anti-personnel land mines which do not have self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanisms. We are also in the forefront of efforts to establish international measures to regulate the transfer of anti-personnel land mines. Any application for an export licence for a land mine which did possess a self-destruct mechanism would be assessed carefully in the light of these and other factors.

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy concerning the export of components which can be used in the manufacture of land mines.

Mr. Freeman: Any application for an export licence for specially designed land mine components would be subject to strict controls, and would be considered case by case in the light of the indefinite moratorium which the United Kingdom has declared on the export from the UK of anti-personnel land mines which do not have self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanisms, and other established criteria.

Cazalet Report

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if his Department has instructed those named in Sir Peter Cazalet's report into perks for officers not to speak publicly about the report;

(2) if his Department has instructed those officers named in Sir Peter Cazalet's report to consult legal advisers about their position.

Mr. Soames: Sir Peter Cazalet's report on the requirement for representational entertainment is expected to be submitted to my Department in February. Ministers are separately currently considering KPMG Peat Marwick's report into the circumstances surrounding expenditure on the official service residence known as Haymes Garth. Before that report was finalised, those named in it were shown, in confidence, draft extracts to enable them to comment on the passages that dealt with their involvement. They were not instructed to seek legal advice.

Haymes Garth

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what limit was placed on expenditure for fixtures and fittings at Haymes Garth; and who granted permission for this money to be spent.

Mr. Soames: An allocation of £60,000 for carpets, curtains and interior decoration was included in a budget agreed by RAF support command for work on Haymes Garth in January 1993.

Former Yugoslavia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has provided military intelligence to the international tribunal for the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Defence debriefing team has provided unevaluated information via the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the tribunal on matters relating to alleged war crimes activity in the former Yugoslavia.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions his Department has taken to assist the international tribunal for the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia

Mr Soames: We continue to assist the efforts of the tribunal. This assistance has included passing to the tribunal information acquired by the defence debriefing team on alleged human rights violations and war crimes committed in Bosnia, and arranging interviews with British military personnel who have returned from theatre for the purposes of collecting eyewitness statements.

Anti-personnel Mines

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions his Department has had with representatives of the United Nations concerning the banning of the export of anti-personnel mines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No such discussions have taken place, although there has been a considerable amount of discussion between the United Kingdom and other states concerning the export of anti-personnel land mines, in the context of the review of the UN weaponry convention and other initiatives.

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Freeman: A total of 9,261 permanent and temporary UK-based civilian staff were recruited by my Department and its executive agencies during the calendar year 1994. Of this total, 5,400 were non-industrial and 3,861 industrial staff. Information on the total cost of recruitment is not held centrally and could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

Naval Staffing

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current staffing levels for his Department's Guard Service of HMS Caledonia; what changes are proposed; how far the proposal to reduce Rosyth to a naval support establishment took account of these costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: At present, 54 Ministry of Defence guard service personnel are in the Rosyth area, of whom five are deployed at HMS Caledonia. The total number is planned to reduce to 38 when Rosyth becomes a royal naval support establishment, 15 of whom will be deployed at the HMS Caledonia site. All manpower costs were included in the investment appraisal, on which the decision was based.

Southwick House

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations concerning the use of the riding school at Southwick house naval establishment; if people who are not employed in the armed forces are permitted to use the riding school; what groups of people are permitted to use the riding school; how many people use the riding school each year; and what is the total cost of the establishment.

Mr. Soames: The naval riding centre evolved from the HMS Dryad saddle club, which was started when the Navy moved to Southwick house in 1942. Although it is constituted primarily to provide equitation facilities for the Royal Navy and the Royal Marines, the regulations allow the facilities to be made available to service dependants, the local community, including disabled groups, schools, colleges and youth schemes; on average the centre is used by 100 people per day. The club is self-financing and there are no costs to public funds.

Records (Police Access)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 548, on how many occasions in each of the past five years the civilian police have requested access to the records of service personnel; and on how many occasions this access has been denied.

Mr. Soames: My Department does not maintain a central record of the number of requests from the civilian police for access to the records of service personnel.

Gulf War

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department was in possession of plague vaccine manufactured in the United States of America by Cutter Laboratories, Miles Inc; and whether this vaccine was administered to British members of the armed forces during the Gulf war.

Mr. Soames: Details relating to biological warfare medical counter measures available to British forces remain classified.

Alcohol Abuse

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent initiatives he has taken to address the problems of alcohol abuse in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The armed forces have on-going programmes to combat the problems of alcohol abuse. All service personnel are warned of the dangers of the misuse of alcohol and are made aware of the punishments which may be awarded for alcohol-related offences. A comprehensive system of education and treatment, together with deterrent administrative and disciplinary action, has been developed. A series of alcohol education programmes, making use of pamphlets, films and lectures, have been produced to make all personnel aware of the dangers of abuse. The services' policies on alcohol abuse are kept under constant review.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces serving in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force have been disciplined in each of the past five years for alcohol-related offences.

Mr. Soames: The numbers of service personnel convicted of alcohol-related driving offences of drunkenness between 1988 and 1992, the latest years for which figures are available, are as follows:

	Royal Navy	Royal Marines	Army	Royal Air Force
1988	248	26	1,476	609
1989	300	52	1,362	525
1990	260	40	1,340	682
1991	226	35	1,093	544
1992	200	34	1,012	445

Chemical Weapons

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement about the existence of chemical weapons in the sea surrounding the British Isles following the end of the second world war;

(2) how many chemical weapons remain deposited in the sea surrounding the British Isles; what types of weapons are involved; what chemicals were contained in these weapons; in what locations they are; when the chemical weapons were first deposited in the sea; when the weapons deposited were last inspected; what evidence there is of chemical leakage; and what steps he is taking to ascertain the circumstances of their disposal.

Mr. Soames: Between 1945 and 1949, the United Kingdom disposed of approximately 120,000 tonnes of chemical weapons, munitions, bombs and shells, mainly filled with mustard and phosgene gas, by deep-sea dumping; an additional 25,000 tons of residual United Kingdom munition stocks and ex-German world war two aerial bombs, containing the nerve agent Tabun, were sea dumped in the Atlantic between 1955 and 1957. Dump sites were located between 50 and 100 miles west of Hebrides, 80 miles north-west of Northern Ireland, 250 miles south-west of Lands End in the western approaches and in Beauforts dyke in the north channel. Sea dumping was considered to be the safest and most practical disposal method at the time. The majority of munitions were sealed within redundant cargo vessels which were then scuttled. No subsequent monitoring of the dump sites has been undertaken in view of the depth. Current scientific evidence indicates that such CW dump sites present no significant risk to human health or to the marine environment.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to conduct a defence diversificatior study for the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff; and if he will consult (a) the Welsh Development Agency, (b) South Glamorgan county council, (c) Cardiff city council and (d) Hunting-Brae Ltd. in this respect.

Mr. Freeman: Hunting-BRAE Ltd. will continue to seek suitable non-defence work which can be carried out at AWE Cardiff during the period up to 1997 alongside the Trident system. Once the work on Trident components is concluded, no other defence work can be directed to AWE Cardiff. My Department will be happy to consider any proposals for the use of the facility, including proposals from the bodies listed in the question.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will issue instructions to the management of the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff, that it should utilise the remaining period of its activity to pursue diversification of the rare earth metals engineering expertise at the plant into civilian uses.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 26 January 1995, Official Report, column 293.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the possible alternative uses for the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff.

Mr. Freeman: Once the work on Trident components is completed, no other defence work can be given to AWE Cardiff. My Department is prepared to consider any proposals for alternative future uses of the site.

Indonesia (Hawk Aircraft)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the sale of Hawk aircraft to Indonesia.

Mr. Freeman: It is Government policy to support the sale of British defence equipment overseas wherever this is compatible with our political, strategic and security interests, and does not conflict with our international obligations. In the case of the Hawk sales to Indonesia, an important factor in our consideration was the assurances that we received from the Indonesian Government that the aircraft will not be used for purposes of internal security.

Equipment (Exports)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) at what interest rate defence equipment was sold to Jordan under the British-Jordanian defence sales agreement; and what was the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development consensus interest rate at the relevant time;

(2) what payments were made towards the financing of the contracts for defence equipment sold to Jordan under the terms of the British-Jordanian defence sales agreement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 25 January 1995]: The details of the financial arrangements applied to the 1985 Jordan defence package remain confidential.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomats (Expulsion)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many diplomats officially accredited to missions in London and of what nationality have been expelled from the United Kingdom in each year since 1965.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 18 January Official Report, column 498, which detailed the number and nationality of expelled accredited diplomats between 1979 and 1995.

The information requested was not centrally recorded before 1972, but the number of diplomats officially accredited to missions in London who were expelled between 1972 and 1978 is as follows:

1972: Yemen 1
1973: Cuba 1
1974: nil
1975: nil
1976: nil
1977: nil
1978: Iraq 7

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom diplomats officially credited to missions in foreign countries have been expelled from (a) Libya, (b) the former Soviet Union, (c) Czechoslavakia, (d) Bulgaria, (e) Cuba, (f) Vietnam, (g) Iraq, (h) Iran, (i) South Africa, (j) Sudan and (k) Iran since 1979; and on what dates and for what stated reasons.

Mr. Goodlad: It will take some time to gather this information. I will write to the hon. Gentleman when it has been compiled.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the Foreign Office expels diplomats officially accredited to missions in London.

Mr. Baldry: The rules governing the expulsion, or requests for withdrawal, of diplomats officially accredited to missions in London are set out in paragraph 69 of the 1985 White Paper on diplomatic immunities and privileges, Cmnd 9497, dated April 1985.

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Goodlad: My Department and its executive agencies, including the aid and diplomatic wings, spent £887,175.85 externally in 1994 on recruitment, and recruited 295 members of staff. In addition, 92 people transferred to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as a result of inter-departmental trawls; the cost of these is included in the above figure.

Indonesia

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of East Timorese killed by the Indonesian Army since its occupation.

Mr. Goodlad: There is no reliable source of information about the number of people killed in East Timor.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Hawk aircraft manufactured in the United Kingdom and supplied to Indonesia are used for counter-insurgency purposes.

Mr. Goodlad: The Hawk aircraft supplied to Indonesia in the 1980s are trainer aircraft. We have no evidence that they have been used for counter-insurgency purposes.

East Timor

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the violence in Dili in East Timor in 1991.

Mr. Goodlad: Along with our EU partners, we strongly condemned the violence in Dili in 1991. We received reports of what happened from various sources, including a report of the Indonesian national commission of inquiry. These differed widely in their accounts of the numbers killed or missing. The United Nations special rapporteur on extra-judicial, summary or arbitrary executions has recently produced a new report which will be considered by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights at its next session.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of whether Hawk aircraft have been used against civilians in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: We have no evidence to support allegations that Hawk aircraft have been used against civilians in East Timor.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what circumstances other Community countries could apply conservation measures similar to those granted to Portugal and Spain under article V-I (a) of the Fisheries Council agreement.

Mr. Jack: The agreement reached by the Fisheries Council in December 1994 provides that the Council will incorporate into Council regulation 3094/86, dealing with technical conservation measures, a ban on fishing for tuna species with drift nets or purse seine nets in certain Spanish and Portuguese waters; some of these measures previously operated on an annual basis.

This agreement is in accordance with the provision of article 4 of the basic common fisheries policy, Council regulation No. 3760/92. The Commission can propose new technical conservation measures for Council decision at its own initiative or in the light of member states' requests.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the amount of aid paid to fishing in each of the other EEC fishing nations in the form of (a) building grants, (b) fuel or operating support, (c) market support and (d) unemployment support when not fishing; and for each form of support, what representations he has made to the Commission or to the Government concerned to get the subsidy ended.

Mr. Jack: Under European Union law, member states are permitted to pay certain types of aid to the fishing industry, provided these are approved by the Commission in its sectoral plans. These may include vessel modernisation and construction grants, aid for fishing port facilities and for the processing and marketing of fishery products. It is the Commission's responsibility to ensure that no unauthorised payments are made. Details of the amounts paid by individual member states are not notified directly to us, but we will always follow up any allegations of illegal support.

Mr. Allason: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how may Spanish-owned ships in Britain's fishing fleet applied for United Kingdom decommissioning grants in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: Under the Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning) Scheme 1993 we received seven applications for grant in respect of vessels upon which Spanish nationals held at least a 25 per cent. interest; only one was successful.

Following the introduction of the Merchant Shipping (Registration of Shipping) Regulations 1993—SI 1993 No. 3138—the registrar general of shipping and seamen no longer collects details of shareholdings in United Kingdom companies owning British-registered fishing vessels.

Farm and Conservation Grants

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he sought advice from the National Rivers Authority, the Countryside Council for Wales and the Nature Conservation Council on the effects of ending the farm and conservation grants.

Mrs. Browning: Far from ending the farm and conservation grant scheme, grants for conservation measures are still available, although the land improvement and waste handling grants were withdrawn at the end of 1994. We did not seek advice on the closure of the plan side of the farm and conservation grant scheme as the scheme legislation provided for this part of the scheme to close on 31 December 1994. Neither did we seek advice on the withdrawal of grants for waste handling facilities. We hold regular meetings with the National Rivers Authority and with English Nature. These meetings include discussions on a wide range of issues. Meetings with the Countryside Council for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Harvesting Restrictions

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 545, if he will make it his policy to waive the harvesting restriction to prevent food going to waste.

Mr. Jack: No. However, we will examine the rules for planting crops on set-aside land for harvest in the next cropping year to ensure farmers do not have to choose between receiving set-aside payments and harvesting edible crops.

Cormorants

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of cormorants in England and Wales during each of the years 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94; how many licences to shoot cormorants in the interests of the protection of inland fisheries were issued by his Department in each of those years; and how many birds are known to have been shot under these licences.

Mrs. Browning: No figures are readily available of the number of cormorants in England and Wales during each of the last three years. However, a report by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology estimates that the population of cormorants over-wintering in Britain has been increasing at a rate of 4 per cent. per year and currently stands at approximately 20,000 birds. Research on the population and distribution of cormorants is a part of the research and development programme currently being discussed by this Department and the Department of the Environment.

Details of the number of licences granted by this Department in England and the number of birds shot under licence are as follows:

Year	Number of licences issued	Number of cormorants shot under licence
1991	3	18
1992	4	13
1993	20	72
1994	30	[1]28

[1] Some licences extend into 1995. The figure given is for the number of birds shot up to 31 December 1994.

Animal Exports

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what independent legal advice he has now received concerning the export of veal calves from the United Kingdom to other EU member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have made it clear that I shall set out the Government's view of the legal position, and I hope to be able to do so in the near future.

Vessel Decommissioning

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what impact on Britain's multi-annual guidance programme he expects to achieve with the addition of £28 million to his vessel decommissioning programme.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 January 1995]: As I explained in my reply on 25 January, Official Report, column 217, it is not possible to say in advance how many vessels will be decommissioned as a result of the additional funding. On the basis of experience with previous schemes, however, I would expect the results to make significant further contributions towards meeting the targets for capacity reduction in our multi-annual guidance programme.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Howard: In November 1991, 11,247 members of staff in the Home Office were women. Of these, three were at grade 3 level, 131 were at grade 7 level, 2,052 were at executive officer level, and 5,094 were at administrative officer level and 3,072 were at administrative assistant level.

In October 1992, 12,366 members of staff were women. Of these, six were at grade 3 level, 117 were at grade 7 level, 2,363 were at executive officer level, 5,709 were at administrative officer level and 3,210 were at administrative assistant level.[1]

In September 1993, 13,035 members of staff were women. Of these, seven were at grade 3 level, 141 were at grade 7 level, 2,427 were at executive officer level, 5,834 were at administrative officer level and 3,355 were at administrative assistant level.[2]

In September 1994, 13,417 members of staff in the Department were women. Of these, six were at grade 3 level, 179 were at grade 7, 2,749 were at executive officer level, 5,928 were at administrative officer level and 3,195 were at administrative assistant level.

[1] The figures for grades 3 and 7 level are as at June 1992.

[2] The figures for grades 3 and 7 are as at March 1993.

Police Exhibition

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of exhibitors and country delegations that attended the police scientific development Branch conference-exhibition held recently at Bramshill college, organised by the Association of Police and Public Security Suppliers.

Mr. Maclean: The police scientific development branch equipment exhibition at the Police Staff college, Bramshill, in October 1994 attracted some 130 exhibitors, a list of which has been placed in the Library.

The exhibition was attended by visitors from police agencies in Denmark, France, the Netherlands, Norway, South Africa and Sweden.

Mobile Phone Thefts

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mobile phones have been reported stolen in each month for the past two years; what measures he is taking to apprehend the criminals involved; and what steps he intends to take to make illegal the reprogramming of mobile phones.

Mr. Maclean: From information collected centrally, it is not possible separately to identify offences of thefts of mobile phones. The investigation of criminal offences and the allocation and deployment of resources are operational policing matters and, as such, the responsibility of the chief officer of the force concerned. A number of forces have established specialist squads to tackle the problem of mobile phone theft.

The Government have no plans, at present, to make the reprogramming of mobile phones a criminal offence.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 528, if he will explain the delay in the publication of Statistics of "Scientific Procedures Performed on Living Animals","Great Britain", 1993; and what measures he is taking to ensure that it does not recur.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The delay in the publication of the annual Command Paper was caused by problems with the computer systems upon which the collection of data for this publication is dependent, and by a need to investigate possible omissions in the data. With these statistics, completeness is more important than timeliness. I am pleased to say that the problems have been resolved satisfactorily. Arrangements for handling the annual returns issued to persons licenses to perform scientific procedures have been modified to ensure more timely publication in future years.

Sexual Offences (Children)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British citizens have been prosecuted for sexual offences involving children outside the United Kingdom for each year since records have been kept.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of British citizens prosecuted abroad is not collected centrally by my Department.

Electric Shock Equipment

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 535, what were the terms of the authority granted to Royal Ordnance under section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968, with particular reference to the stocking of or trading in any form of electro-shock equipment and to what extent Royal Ordnance has dealt in such equipment in the last 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: The specific authority referred to allows Royal Ordnance to possess, purchase, acquire, sell and transfer no more than 100 weapons to which sections 5(1)(a), 5(1)(ab) or 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968 apply, in the course of their business as registered firearms dealers. The authority makes no reference to electric shock equipment. I have no information about dealings by them in such equipment.

Right of Settlement

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how may immigrants were granted the right of settlement in British during (a) 1993 and (b) 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information, which is for 1993 and the first six months of 1994, was published in table 1.1 of Home Office statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom, First and Second Quarters 1994", issue 25/94, a copy of which is in the Library.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Advertisements

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what factors lead to the description of advertisements in public places, newspapers or periodicals as being placed on behalf of a Minister of the Crown rather than on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Within the framework of collective responsibility, there is no practical distinction between publicity described as being issued by a single Minister or Her Majesty's Government. The terminology used may properly reflect the content and context of the advertising.

TREASURY

Oil Fuel Excise Duty

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what types of oil fuel are subject to a reduced or rebated rate of excise duty; what are the rates on rebated fuel; what are the unrebated rates; and what are the most common uses for the rebated fuels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are two classes of oil: light oil and heavy oil.

The full, unrebated, rate of duty on light oil is 36.14p per litre. This is levied on leaded motor spirit.

These are two types of rebated light oil: unleaded motor spirit which is rebated to a rate of 31.32p per litre is used in cars, taxis, light goods vans, and motor cycles; and furnace fuel which is rebated to a rate of 1.66p per litre is burned by approved furnace operators.

The full, unrebated, rate of duty on heavy oil is 31.32p per litre. This is levied on diesel road fuel and kerosene when used as a road fuel.

There are four types of rebated heavy oil:

Kerosene which is fully rebated is used for heating and lighting in the domestic, industrial, and agricultural sectors, and as aviation turbine fuel to power jet aircraft;

Gas oil which is rebated to a rate of 2.14p per litre is used as a heating fuel, as power for heavy industrial and marine diesel engines, and can be used instead of diesel road fuel in certain off road situations, for example, in agricultural or construction plant;

Fuel oil which is rebated to a rate of 1.66p per litre is used mainly as a power source in electricity generation and in manufacturing industries;

Other heavy oil which, by chemical analysis, falls outside the preceding categories is fully rebated and is used in grease making, road building, and as lubricating oil.

Wessex Regional Health Authority

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to be able to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen to the Financial Secretary regarding the Wessex regional health authority dated 9 December 1994.

Sir George Young: This letter has been passed to the Minister for Health for answer. I understand that my hon. Friend intends to issue a reply to the hon. Member shortly.

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by the Department or agency.

Mr. Nelson: For the calendar year 1994 the information requested is:

	Course description
For HM Treasury:
Title:	Finance programme for generalists
Objective:	To enable and prepare non-specialists—in finance—to work more effectively in the specialist finance areas of Treasury
Organisation:	Management Development Associates Ltd.
Responsibility of participants:	Senior managers
Evaluation:	Evaluation forms from course participants from which written reports produced
Title:	Management training programme—four separate courses
Objective:	For good management skills to be perceived as integral for performance effectiveness
Organisation:	Sundridge Park
Responsibility of participants:	Senior managers
Evaluation:	Evaluation forms from course participants from which written reports produced
Title:	Economics for generalists
Objectives:	To enable officials with general responsibilities to work more effectively with specialist economists
Organisation:	London business school
Responsibility of participants:	Senior managers
Evaluation:	Evaluation forms from course participants from which written reports produced
Title:	Equal opportunities seminars
Objective:	To increase the understanding of equal opportunities with Treasury

	Course description
Organisation:	Pearn Kandola
Responsibility of participants:	All staff
Evaluation:	Evaluation forms from course participants and post-course evaluation workshops
For the Royal Mint:
Title:	Commercial systems analysis
Objective:	To increase the understanding of new computer systems and how they can be applied
Organisation:	W S Atkins Management Consultants
Responsibility of participants:	First-line supervisors
Evaluation:	Evaluation forms from course participants and feedback to departmental manager
Title:	Operators training course
Objective:	To become fully conversant with new equipment supplied and familiarise operators with the operator input to System 21
Organisation:	Davy International Ltd.
Responsibility of participants:	Shop floor operators and shift managers
Evaluation:	Evaluation forms from course participants and shop floor feedback
Title:	System 21 integrated training
Objective:	Familiarisation operation and maintain the ability of the system
Organisation:	Davy International Ltd.
Responsibility of participants:	Plant electricians/technicians
Evaluation:	Evaluation forms from course participants and feedback to departmental managers
Title:	1st year off-the-job Apprentice training
Objective:	To gain initial skills/qualifications as part of the engineering apprenticeship
Organisation:	Pontypridd technical college
Responsibility of participants:	1st year engineering apprentices
Evaluation:	Achievement of NVQS and evaluation by EnTRA assessor
Title:	Total quality facilitator training
Objective:	To provide training for newly appointed facilitators as part of a total quality programme
Organisation:	Coopers and Lybrand
Responsibility of participants:	Cross-section from first line
Evaluation:	Evaluation forms from course participants and feedback to quality manager
For the Central Statistical Office:
Title:	Leadership and management programme
Objective:	To improve the leadership and management skills of CSO staff
Organisation:	Centre for Action learning
Responsibility of participants:	All staff
Evaluation:	Questionnaire
Title:	Aspects of hardware communication
Objective:	To train staff in aspects of information systems
Organisation:	Networks
Responsibility of participants:	Information systems staff
Evaluation:	Questionnaire
For Paymaster:
Title:	Customer care/Telephone skills/Letter writing
Objective:	To give the pensions staff the necessary skills to deal with both pensioners and customers in various media
Organisation:	West Sussex Training Association
Responsibility of participants:	All staff up to higher executive officer grade in pensions sections
Evaluation:	Questionnaire
For the Valuation office:	None

Providing the actual costs paid in each case could be unfairly advantageous to possible future competitors. However, the total cost of the above training is £113,718 for the Treasury and £239,734 for the agencies.

Profit-related Pay Schemes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the annual cost to the Exchequer of the tax reliefs afforded to profit-related pay schemes; and what margins of error should be attributed to such estimates.

Sir George Young: An estimate of the cost of income tax relief for profit-related pay schemes is published in table 1.6 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1994", a copy of which is in the Library.

Bonus Payments

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual cost to the Exchequer of (a) bonus payments to employees paid gross of tax, in terms of the interest opportunity cost to the Exchequer and (b) bonus payments paid by employers in such a way as to temporarily or permanently avoid paying employers' national insurance contributions on such payments.

Sir George Young: In the Finance Act 1994 and subsequent regulations, the Government introduced measures to counter the avoidance of pay as you earn and national insurance contributions. These measures are expected to end the deferral of about £300 million in PAYE tax and the avoidance of about £75 million of NICs.

These costs relate to all forms of remuneration paid to employees by their employers. Employers are not required to identify bonus payments separately from other payments, and figures on bonus payments could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Since these measures were introduced, the Secretary of State for Social Security has announced further measures to combat other NIC avoidance devices.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the absenteeism rate for (a) his Department, (b) the Central Statistical Office, (c) the office of the Paymaster and (d) the Royal Mint in each year since 1991.

Mr. Nelson: The table gives the average number of days sickness absence per member of staff:

	1991	1992	1993	1994
HMT	7.5	6.9	7.1	9.2
CSO	9.8	9.2	8.9	[1]9.9
Paymaster	10.6	10.6	10.4	13.7
Royal Mint[2]	5.9	5.3	5.7	8.4

[1] Provisional figure
[2] Non-industrial staff only

Mortgages

Ms Gordon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to assist self-employed workers who are part of the new flexible work force to overcome difficulties they experience in obtaining a mortgage when purchasing a home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The lending policies of mortgage providers are matters for their own commercial judgment, though it is clear that lenders remain keen to do business with those who can sustain the costs of home ownership in the longer term. Lenders have a responsibility to ensure that mortgages are adequately secured, and that borrowers are in a position to meet the repayments.

VAT (Private Health Care)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would be raised if VAT was charged at 17.5 per cent. on private health care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Treasury publication "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs" suggests that the exemption from the standard rate of VAT of health services—a category which includes private health care—costs £300 million in a full year. These figures make no allowance for behavioural responses.

Building Society Takeovers

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for reviewing the Building Societies Act 1986 so that all long-term investors are treated equitably when a building society is subject to a takeover bid.

Mr. Nelson: I have been engaged in a comprehensive review of the Building Societies Act 1986. I intend to announce the outcome shortly.

Credit Cards

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue he estimates would be raised by placing a £10 tax on the possession of each credit card.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 January 1995]: A £10 tax on the 25 million existing credit cards would yield £250 million on the assumption of no behavioural change.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates his Department has made as to the effects on credit card usage of the imposition of a £10 tax on credit cards.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 January 1995]: No such estimates are available.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if his Department has considered charge cards and credit cards to be similar for tax purposes;

(2) what differences between credit cards and charge cards have implications for the imposition of a tax on each.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 January 1995]: There is no taxation of either charge cards or credit cards.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will issue a consultation paper on the taxing of credit cards in the coming year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 January 1995]: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which organisations he has consulted in respect of taxes on credit cards.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 January 1995]: None.

Commercial Lobbying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) on how many occasions in the last four months he or any of his Ministers have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements;

(2) on how many occasions in the last four months of which he has knowledge any civil servants in his Department have been approached by commercial lobbying organisations on behalf of their clients at informal or unofficial engagements.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 25 January 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 25 January 1995, Official Report, column 116, by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 27 January 1995]: The table shows the number of permanent or fixed-term appointments to HM Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer's executive agencies during 1994, together with the cost of recruitment arrangements.

ENVIRONMENT

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Sir Paul Beresford: There are five next steps agencies within the Department of the Environment:

The Building Research Establishment

The Buying Agency

The Planning Inspectorate

The Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre

The Securities Facilities Executive

Responsibility for the subject matter of the question has been delegated to the chief executive of each agency. I have asked each of them to reply to the right hon. Member in respect of their own agency.

The Secretary of State for the Environment is also responsible for Ordnance Survey, a separate Department and next steps agency. I have also asked its chief executive to reply to the right hon. Member.

Letter from R. G. Courtney to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

I have been asked by the Secretary of State for the Environment to reply to this PQ in respect of the Building Research Establishment.

The relevant information is:

BRE's headquarters are unchanged since becoming an Executive Agency.

Devolution of personnel, finance and estates responsibilities from DOE and PSA has led to the creation of four additional posts at Grade 7 and above; overall, however, support staff numbers have fallen by 30.

The BRE Annual Review has not changed in style. The cost of preparing the 1994 Review was £49k (including staff costs).

BRE's use of cars is unchanged; the annual cost of its two cars in 1993/4 was £14.6k.

The BRE logo has not changed.

BRE does no provide corporate clothing.

BRE's stationery was redesigned in 1994 at a cost of £3.36k because the previous stationery referred to a site that was closed.

Letter from S. P. Sage to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked me to reply to your Question about various items of expenditure incurred by The Buying Agency (TBA), one of DOE's executive agencies. The details are as follows:

TBA remains in the same premises it occupied prior to agency status in 1991.

TBA staff numbers have varied only slightly since becoming an agency. In 1991 they averaged 105; in 1995 they will average 110.

We publish newsletters to TBA's 10,000 customers and suppliers three times a year. In 1994 the cost was £20,000. The newsletters provide an update on goods and services available through TBA.

We operate 13 lease cars for our network of national and regional account managers. In 1994 the cost was £75,000.

Following its launch as an agency TBA modified the logo used by its parent, The Crown Suppliers. There was no development cost.

Each member of staff has a TBA tie (men) or scarf (ladies). The cost for design and printing these was about £1,000.

On becoming an agency TBA modified its stationery in line with its logo. Again there was no development cost.

Letter from C. Shepley to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

1. The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to this Parliamentary Question insofar as it relates to the Planning Inspectorate Executive Agency.

2. In the Planning Inspectorate we have incurred no expenditure on most of the items you refer to. Specifically, we have not acquired our own buildings; we do not publish a journal; we do not have executive cars; and we do not have a specially designed logo, corporate clothing or corporate stationery as a result of changing to Agency status.

3. The question of support staff is more difficult to answer with precision because a number of functions have been transferred to us by the Department and some of the requirements relating to those functions have since changed. Wherever possible we have carried out these functions with fewer staff than had previously been deployed by the Department for the same tasks. For example our typing unit consists of 8 staff in Bristol and replaced previous arrangements which utilised significantly more staff located away from our Headquarters building. In total we have taken on 31 staff for such tasks—mainly in the typing, personnel and finance areas. This has provided us with more immediate higher quality support services, with increased accountability for the actions they take. Over the period from the launch of the Agency in April 1992 staff numbers in comparable terms have fallen from 649 to 585 despite the arrival of the additional staff.

Letter from Marcus C. Buck to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply on behalf of The Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre (QEIICC) to the range of questions you have asked of Next Steps Agencies in Question 866.

(I) The QEIICC Executive Agency occupies the conference centre building at the discretion of the Secretary of State for the Environment. Since 1993–94 it has paid an annual rent of £6.4 million.

(II) Being a purpose-built conference centre, the QEIICC's operations did not exist prior to the completion of the building in 1986. No staff figures exist within the QEIICC prior to its launch as an Executive Agency in 1989. However the number has reduced from 68 in July 1990 to 64 in January 1995.

(III) The QEIICC is required to produce an Annual Report and Accounts each year. The most recent—that for 1993–94—cost £11,000.

(IV) The QEIICC has no executive cars.

(V) The QEIICC's logo was designed in-house at no cost.

(VI) Approximately half of the QEIICC's staff (those working on events) wear uniforms. The 1994–95 annual budget for uniforms is £6,000.

(VII) The QEIICC's 1994–95 annual budget for corporate stationery is £22,000. This covers letter-headed and continuation paper, envelopes delegate writing pads and pencils, business cards, job application forms, performance assessment forms, three-part invoices, cheques and remittance advice.

Letter from John King to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

You have asked the Secretary of State for Environment for information about the Next Steps Agencies in his Department. My reply deals exclusively with the Security Facilities Executive (SAFE). The information which you have asked for is given below:

SAFE does not have its own headquarters building. It shares its HQ accommodation with other Government Departments.

A similar number of support staff are employed in the Agency compared with when it was part of DOE.

No periodical journals are published by the Agency.

The Agency does not have any executive cars for senior staff.

Our new logo was designed to coincide with the launch of the Agency, and is used on brochures, presentation packs tender documents and corporate stationery. The cost of the new logo cannot be separately identified.

The Agency does not have corporate clothing. However, drivers from the Government Car Service, the InterDespatch Service and Custody guards have always had their own uniforms. The only change has been that the drivers now wear ties incorporating the Agency logo.

The cost of designing new stationery for the Agency was £13,855 plus VAT. This included all general and financial stationery used in dealing with our customers. The cost of the initial print run was £8,054 plus VAT.

Letter from David Rhind to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 23 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked to reply to your question about the additional costs attributable to the establishment of Ordnance Survey as an Executive Agency.

Ordnance Survey has always been and remains a department in its own right and the move to operation on Next Steps Agency lines did not of itself incur new or additional costs. The answers to the specific parts of your question are as follows:

Ordnance Survey occupies the same headquarters building that it occupied prior to becoming an Executive Agency;

no additional support staff were required;

Ordnance Survey continues to publish an Annual Report (with Trading Accounts) and a Corporate Plan; no fleets of executive cars or single executive cars have been purchased;

the Ordnance Survey logo has not changed since becoming an Executive Agency;

Ordnance Survey does not use corporate clothing;

stationery costs have not varied as a result of the change to Executive Agency status.

I hope the foregoing provides all the information you need.

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet the creditors of the Merseyside development corporation; if he will provide for their claims for compensation from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: Any matters which might arise between the MDC and any creditors it may have would be for the parties concerned.

Housing, West Midlands

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations underlay the proposal in the draft Government regional planning guidance for the west midlands that the 20-year housing needs assessment should be reviewed in June; what account this took of (a) population projections and (b) shortage of land; and if he will make it his policy to introduce a quinquennial review of land needs.

Sir Paul Beresford: The draft regional planning guidance for the west midlands proposes that the Forum of Local Authorities should review the housing figures by June, in order to take into account new household projections, which are to be published shortly. The housing figures in the draft guidance were based on the figures submitted by the Forum of Local Authorities, which took account of household projections and the current land availability. Regional planning guidance is expected to be revised on average every five years, providing an opportunity for the review of land needs.

Fuels

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effects on the environment of the use of (a) petrol, (b) diesel and (c) oxygenated petrol.

Mr. Atkins: Petrol and diesel have known environmental benefits and disbenefits for both global and local environments, but the environmental case for oxygenated petrol is not yet clear. Government will continue to keep these under review, and participate fully in the setting of standards for vehicle emissions and fuel formulation at a European level, in particular in the light of the forthcoming report from the European tripartite initiative on future engine and fuel technologies.

Disabled People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the Departments and agencies for which he has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document "Focus on Ability".

Sir Paul Beresford: The following information covers non-industrial staff in my Department, excluding Property Services Agency Services:

Registered disabled staff	Non-registered disabled staff	Combined percentage of total
70	68	2.0

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by his Department or agency.

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not held centrally and could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Construction Contracts

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to implement the recommendations of the Latham report with particular reference to a construction contract Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to report and legislate on the recommendations of the Latham report.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will chair a meeting of the standing strategic group for the construction industry on 7 February, at which the recommendations of the review implementation forum for taking forward the proposals in the Latham report will be discussed. We have made it clear that we are prepared in principle to legislate on these proposals subject to agreement on the need for and form of such legislation.

Opencast Coal Sites

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many suggested opencast coal sites are registered in the national land bank;

(2) if he will publish the names and the locations of opencast coal sites registered in the national land bank.

Sir Paul Beresford: This Department does not hold a register of opencast coal or proposed opencast coal sites.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the opencast coal sites working as at 3 January giving details of locations.

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not held centrally.

Business Rates

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance he can offer to any business which is facing economic difficulties because of high increases in business rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The 1995 revaluation of all non-domestic property takes effect on 1 April. Transitional relief will ensure that rate bills will not rise because of the revaluation by more than 10 per cent. a year after allowing for inflation. Maximum increases for properties with a rateable value less than £10,000—£15,000 in Greater London—will be 7.5 per cent. after allowing for inflation. The Government have pledged some £500 million towards the cost of the relief for England in 1995–96.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the impact the increased valuation of non-domestic properties will have on business in Yorkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We estimate that without transitional relief, the average increase in rates bills in 1995–96 as a result of the 1995 revaluation for North Yorkshire, South Yorkshire and West Yorkshire taken together would have been 36 per cent. Transitional arrangements will limit these increases to 7.5 per cent., after allowing for inflation, for property with a rateable value below £10,000. Property with a rateable value above these thresholds will have increases limited to 10 per cent. after allowing for inflation. The average increase in rate bills in Yorkshire after transitional relief is 9 per cent. This relief is worth £185 million.

Business Rates

Mr. William O'Brien : To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average increase in valuations being received by businesses in the Normanton constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information for the Normanton parliamentary constituency is not available. However, the average increase in rates bills for 1995-96, after transitional relief, in the Wakefield metropolitan district is 10 per cent. Without transitional relief the average increase would have been 32 per cent. The relief is worth £11 million to ratepayers in Wakefield.

Agenda 21

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring he is undertaking of the progress by local authorities in the implementation of Agenda 21; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities' implementation of Agenda 21—the report from the UN Conference on Environment and Development—is carried out individually and through their national "local Agenda 21 initiative". Monitoring this is a matter for local government. I have regular discussions about progress, however, with local government representatives in the central and local government environment forum.

Leasehold

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 111, if he will make it his policy to introduce modifications to part 2 of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993, to remedy shortcomings identified in the interim report of the leasehold enfranchisement advisory service.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I consider it far too soon since the enactment of the 1993 Act to be considering major revisions to the enfranchisement rights which it contained. With the help of the leasehold enfranchisement advisory service, we will, of course, continue to keep these provisions under review.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the outcome of consultation on the local government finance settlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am today laying before the House the Local Government Finance Report (England) 1995–96, the Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (England) 1995–96 and the Special Grant Report (No. 12). These reports establish the amounts of revenue support grant and non-domestic rates to be paid to local authorities in 1995–96, and the basis of their distribution; specify the amounts which are to be used as the basis of comparison for measuring increases in certain local authorities' budgets in 1995–96 for the purpose of capping, and provide for a special grant to be paid to certain authorities for 1995–96. Two hundred authorities made written representations and Ministers met 90 delegations from local councils.

I shall be sending copies of these reports to all authorities as soon as possible, together with a table showing each authority's standard spending assessment and its entitlement to RSG, NDR and special grant. I have also placed copies of the reports and the table in the Library and the Vote Office.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what reserves are currently held by each county council;

(2) what reserves were held by each county council at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The latest available estimate of the level of reserves as at 1 April 1994 are given. These estimates are subject to amendment as authorities finalise their accounts. Compatible data on the use of balances in 1994–95 which would be needed to derive an estimate of the level of reserves at 1 April 1995 are not yet available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total proposed expenditure in each local authority area by (a) urban development corporations, (b) English Partnerships and (c) inner-city tasks forces for 1995–96.

Mr. Curry: Planned gross expenditure in 1995–96 by each urban development corporation is set out in table A. Where the urban development area crosses local authority boundaries, each local authority is listed.

Planned expenditure by English Partnerships in 1995–96 is expected to be £263.2 million including the use of receipts.

The national allocation for task forces in 1995–96 is £13.0 million and the local authority areas where task force expenditure is expected are set out in table B. Budgets for individual task forces have not yet been decided, but those task forces which remain open for the whole financial year will each receive a budget of about £1 million. For task forces which have closed, expenditure will be limited to commitments made before closure.

PRIME MINISTER

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has now made of an unclassified document emanating from the air intelligence agency department of the United States air force, sent to him by the hon. Member for Linlithgow, asserting that Ali Akbar Mohrashemi paid cash and gold to terrorist organisations to carry out terrorist activities, and to destroy Pan Am flight 103 in retaliation for the United States shoot-down of the Iranian airbus.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 26 January 1994, Official Report, columns 299-300.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library his correspondence with Mr. English of Chard, Somerset, in relation to Libya and Lockerbie.

The Prime Minister: It is not my normal practice to do so.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister is responsible for deregulation in each Government Department.

The Prime Minister: The deregulation initiative is headed by the right hon. Michael Heseltine, President of the Board of Trade. Ministers are appointed in each of the regulatory Department's to be responsible for deregulation issues. They are:

Department	Minister
Her Majesty's Treasury (Revenue and Customs)	Right Hon. Sir George Young MP Financial Secretary
Department of Transport	John Watts MP Minister of State
Scottish Office	Allan Stewart MP Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State
Welsh Office	Roderick Richards MP Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State
Home Office	Michael Forsyth MP Minister of State
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	Earl Howe Parliamentary Secretary
Department of Trade and Industry	Jonathan Evans MP Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State
Department of Health	Hon. Tom Sackville MP Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State
Department of Employment	Hon. Philip Oppenheim MP Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State
Department of Social Security	James Arbuthnot Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State
Department of Environment	Right Hon. Viscount Ullswater Minister of State
Northern Ireland Office	Baroness Denton of Wakefield Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State
Ministry of Defence	Righ Hon. Roger Freeman Minister of State
Department for Education	Eric Forth MP Minister of State
Office of Public Service and Science	Robert Hughes MP Parliamentary Secretary
Lord Chancellor's Department	John Taylor MP Parliamentary Secretary
Department of National Heritage	Iain Sproat MP Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State

Correspondence

Ms Gordon: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to reply to the letters of inquiry sent to him six months ago by Mr. R. Nimmo of 202 Morville street, London E3.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Employment replied on my behalf on 28 July 1994, a copy of which has recently been sent to Mr. Nimmo.

Common Currency

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Prime Minister what is his current attitude towards the introduction of the hard ecu as a common currency within the EU.

The Prime Minister: Although the United Kingdom advocated the hard ecu during the Maastricht treaty negotiations, it was eventually agreed that the route set out in the treaty would avoid the problems of the control of the money supply that a parallel currency would inevitably involve. We therefore agreed to a three-stage process in which responsibility for our monetary policy will remain firmly in national hands unless and until Parliament agrees that we should seek to join a single currency.

World Summit for Social Development

Miss Lestor: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to attend the world summit for social development in Copenhagen in March; and if he will list those who will be representing Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: I will make a decision on attendance nearer the date.

EU Fraud

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to persuade the French Government to include the issue of the eradication of fraud in their objectives for their EU presidency.

The Prime Minister: At the Essen European Council, I made a number of proposals on the subject of fraud, waste and mismanagement which were agreed by the Council. I refer the hon. Member to my statement to the House on 12 December, Official Report, columns 613-30.

The French presidency has made clear that it intends to pursue these measures vigorously. This was endorsed by the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers at its meeting on 16 January when the presidency work programme was discussed.

The reports from member states, commissioned at Essen, on the measures member states are implementing domestically to combat waste and the misuse of Community resources will be examined under the French presidency.

The French presidency fully shares our views on fraud, as the French Prime Minister made clear to me at our Chartres meeting last December.

Chequers (Entertainment)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the (a) dates of (b) nature of and (c) individuals present at each occasion at Chequers in the period from 2 December 1994 to 20 January 1995 which has involved the provision of food, drink and other forms of reception or entertainment paid for out of public funds.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 January 1995]: There was one such occasion on 13 January 1995. This was a meeting of Ministers reviewing British foreign policy. It is not my normal practice to provide a list of individuals present on such occasions.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Wellcome-Glaxo Merger

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to the long-term effect on research and development of the proposed takeover of Wellcome by Glaxo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The relevant competition authorities will be considering the proposed merger in due course. Therefore, it is not appropriate for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to comment.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the absenteeism rate for (a) his Department, (b) the Accounts Services Agency, (c) Companies House, (d) the Insolvency Service, (e) the Laboratory of the Government Chemist, (f) the NEL, (g) the National Physical Laboratory, (h) the National Weights and Measures Agency, (i) the Patent Office and (j) the Radiocommunications Agency in each year since 1991.

Mr. Heseltine: The average number of days sick leave per employee for the Department and its agencies is shown in the table.

	1991	1992	1993	1994
Department excluding Agencies listed below	8.1	8.1	10.3	9.5
Accounts Service Agency[1]	—	—	13.9	13.0
Companies House	10.9	13.4	17.4	16.8
Insolvency Service	7.8	8.9	11.4	10.8
Laboratory of the Government Chemist	5.4	7.0	7.9	6.6
NEL	6.0	5.5	6.6	10.6
National Physical Laboratory	5.4	7.3	7.6	6.4

Radiocommunications Agency	8.2	9.1	11.5	8.8
Total	7.9	8.6	11.0	10.3

Northern Electricity

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by how much domestic electricity prices for Northern Electric customers have changed since 1991 in relation to the UK average.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Using the normal assumption that the average domestic household buys 3,300 kWh of electricity per year, Northern Electric's standard tariff rose by 1.9 per cent. between 1991 and 1994. If allowance is made for inflation, as measured by the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator, this represents a fall of 7.4 per cent. in real terms. For customers on Northern Electric's Economy 7 tariff, the price of electricity rose by 2.4 per cent. in current price terms and fell by 7 per cent. in real terms (assuming consumption of 6,600 kWh per year—3,000 day units and 3,600 night units). VAT has been excluded from the above figures. This tax (8 per cent.) was imposed from 1 April 1994, but an unspecified number of consumers paid in advance and will not have paid any VAT during 1994.

For all regional electricity companies in England and Wales, the corresponding average change over this three-year period for standard tariff customers was –0.9 per cent., (9.9 per cent. in real terms), and for Economy 7 tariff customers it was +0.9 per cent., (–8.4 per cent. in real terms).

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of the takeover of Northern Electric by Trafalgar House on the sale of the National Grid Company.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is awaiting the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading on the proposed takeover by Trafalgar House of Northern Electric.

Company Accounts

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies have had penalties imposed upon them by Companies House for the late submission of accounts in each of the past five years; and what has been the total amount of such penalties in each of these years.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to Companies House under its chief executive, Mr. Durham. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Durham to Dr. Tony Wright, dated 30 January 1995:

Jonathan Evans, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs, has asked me as Registrar and Chief Executive of Companies House Executive Agency, to reply to the following Parliamentary Question which you tabled:

How many companies have had penalties imposed upon them by Companies House for the late submission of accounts in each of the past five years; and what has been the total amount of such penalties in each of these years.

The late filing penalty system was introduced on 1 July 1992. Details of the number of penalties levied and the sums involved are set out in the table below.

Late filing penalties raised: Great Britain
Financial years 1992–3; 1993–4; 1994–5

	Number	Value (£ million)
1992–93 (July-March)	79,928	12.5
1993–94 (April-March)	84,384	20.8
1994–95 (April-December)	55,053	13.8

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many statutory instruments requiring affirmative resolution he expects will be brought before the House in the current Session; and how many of these he expects to be considered by (a) Standing Committees or (b) on the Floor of the House.

Mr. Newton: The information is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

European Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Lord President of the Council what communication he has received from the President of the European Parliament concerning its resolution of 10 February adopting the proposal for a constitution for the European Union, as proposed by its Committee on Institutional Affairs; and what action he has taken consequent on any requests therein.

Mr. Newton: The European Parliament did not adopt the draft constitution prepared by the Committee on Institutional Affairs, but only took note of it. I have received no communication from the President of the European Parliament concerning the resolution of 10 February 1994.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Register of Available Personnel

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many prospective candidates seeking employment in the United Kingdom's overseas aid programme had their details held on the Overseas Development Administrations's register of available personnel for each year since 1979; how many of them were appointed; and how many of them were removed from the register after two years.

Mr. Baldry: The historical information about the register of available personnel, which has only existed since 1987, is not available. Information about recent years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Consultants

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which are the four main consultancies and recruitment agencies supplying personnel to the United Kingdom's overseas aid programme since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: Individuals employed under the aid programme are normally recruited directly by the Overseas Development Administration. No records are kept which distinguish between contracts with consultancy firms relating solely to the supply of expertise to the aid programme and those which also cover the supply of other services.

Aid, Africa

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decisions have been made in the past six months by the European Commission about the provision and destination of aid within Africa.

Mr. Baldry: Tables providing details of EC projects approved between July and December 1994 which benefit sub-Saharan Africa under (i) the European development fund, (ii) European Community food and humanitarian aid and (iii) the special programme for South Africa, have been placed in the Library of the House.

In October 1994, a framework agreement creating the first bilateral treaty relationship between the EC and South Africa was signed. In November 1994, the Development Council agreed a programme of 67 mecu—about £53 million—to rehabilitate social and production structures in Rwanda.

Arun Project, Nepal

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what topics were discussed at the recent informal briefing with members of the inspection panel of the World bank; and what conclusions were drawn by the United Kingdom executive director;

(2) if he will instruct the United Kingdom executive director of the World bank to support the preliminary recommendations of the inspection panel of the World bank on the Arun III project.

Mr. Baldry: There has been a preliminary exchange of views on the inspection panel's report on a request for an inspection of the Arun III hydroelectric project in Nepal. Executive directors decided to defer further action pending receipt of the views of the newly elected Government of Nepal, and also pending a review by the panel of its report in the light of additional information to be supplied by bank management.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has about the current position of the Government of Nepal on approval of the Arun III project.

Mr. Baldry: We understand the newly elected Government have expressed broad support for the project, but wish to take stock before reaching a firm view on whether to proceed.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the board of the World bank will consider the full appraisal report of the Arun III project.

Mr. Baldry: No date has been set.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what organisations he will consult before deciding the British Government's policy in the World bank on the Arun III project;

(2) what organisations will be consulted by the board of the World bank before it reaches a final decision on the Arun III project;

(3) what organisations he will consult before deciding the British Government's policy on implementing the recommendations of the inspection panel of the World bank on the Arun III project;

(4) what organisations will be consulted by the board of the World bank before it reaches a final decision on implementing the recommendations of the bank's inspection panel on the Arun III.

Mr. Baldry: The board as such does not normally consult outside organisations, but will want to be assured that the borrower and the bank have consulted fully, in accordance with bank policies and procedures. Individual members of the board will have their own arrangements for consultation. We have received views from a number of organisations, notably the Intermediate Technology Development Group, on the proposed project and have encouraged the bank to consult widely with informed groups, particularly those active in Nepal. We shall take account of these views when considering the proposed project and in relation to the report of the inspection panel.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the minimum projected rate of return on the Arun III project which would be required for the United Kingdom to support this project.

Mr. Baldry: As a minimum, we would expect the economic rate of return to exceed the opportunity cost of capital of 10 per cent. used for this project.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current policy towards the Arun III project in Nepal.

Mr. Baldry: The Arun project raises complex economic, environmental, social and institutional issues. Debate on these issues is continuing, especially given the new Government's desire to take stock of the project; and the independent inspection panel's report.

World Bank Inspection Panel

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the initial work of the inspection panel of the World bank.

Mr. Baldry: The inspection panel became operational only in August 1994, and to date has received only one request for inspection. It is too soon to draw conclusions about its effectiveness.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom executive director of the World bank attended the recent informal briefing with members of the inspection panel of the World bank.

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

Somali Refugee Camp

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits have been made to refugee camps containing Somali people and in which countries; and what view Her Majesty's Government have formed of the conditions there.

Mr. Baldry: United Kingdom officials visited Somali refugee camps in Kenya in September 1994 and in Ethiopia in December 1994. The condition of refugees in Kenya is generally stable; that of Somali refugees in Ethiopia is more variable, with some groups remaining vulnerable to food and medical shortages. We have provided over £11 million since 1991 to help refugees in Kenya and Ethiopia, most of whom are Somalis.

TRANSPORT

Nuclear Waste Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek an urgent meeting with the EU Transport Commissioner to discuss the safety arrangements under Council directive 92/3Euratom of 3 February 1992 on the supervision and control of shipments of radioactive waste into and out of the European Community, as they apply to the imminent shipment of radioactive waste from La Hague in France.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

No. Council directive 92/3/Euratom sets out provisions for the authorisation of shipments of radioactive waste, into and out of the European Union and between member states, by the competent authorities of the country of origin. Authorisation of the shipment referred to is a matter for the French competent authority.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Channel Islands in regard to the forthcoming sea shipment of high-level nuclear waste from La Hague in France to Japan.

Mr. Norris: None.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December, Official Report, column 880, which posts were filled as a result of the employment of executive search agencies; which executive search companies were involved in this exercise; and what were the values of the individual contracts involved.

Mr. Norris: The two posts filled with the help of executive search agencies were:

1. The Highways Agency chief executive. Korn Ferry International assisted in carrying out the search and selection: the cost was £23,500.

2. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency chief executive. Saxon Bampfylde International plc carried out the search and administration; the cost was £31,800.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what jurisdiction local authorities have over noise made by aircraft while on the ground.

Mr. Norris: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 24 January, Official Report, column 110, by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside.

Civil Servants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the departments and agencies for which he has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document "Focus on Ability".

Mr. Norris: As of 1 July 1994, 181 Department of Transport staff were known to be registered as disabled. This is 1.4 per cent. of the total staff—12,929. In addition, 134 DOT members of staff have responded to questionnaires and declared themselves to have a disability which is not registered. This is 1 per cent. of the total staff.

Coventry Airport

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 98, what local authorities, including parish councils, have contacted him about noise and nuisance at Coventry airport in the last 12 months; how many of the complaints relate to (a) day and (b) night flights; how many complaints there were in each of the previous five years; and if he will divide them into complaints about (i) day and (ii) night flights and list the local authorities involved.

Mr. Norris: Of the 14 representations mentioned in my answer of 24 January, 11 related to noise generally at Coventry airport, of which four also made specific reference to night flights. The remaining three representations concerned night flights alone.

The number of complaints received in each year since 1992 is as follows:

	Total complaints	General noise	Day flights	Night flights
1992	3	1	1	2
1993	5	3	0	3
1994	14	11	0	7

Some complaints covered more than one topic. Information for earlier years can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

In addition, since January 1990 my Department has had one contact from a local authority about noise and nuisance at Coventry airport. This took the form of a meeting in July 1994 between the Minister for Aviation and Shipping and a delegation from Warwick district council led by my hon. Friend himself. At this meeting the subject of aircraft noise at Coventry airport was discussed generally, but with a particular focus on ground noise and night flights.

Lobbying Organisations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of all those who were received by him, his fellow Ministers or senior officials in the past six months, indicating which ones were representatives of lobbying organisations.

Dr. Mawhinney: No; it is not our practice to do so.

Coaches

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have died in coaches crashing in the right-hand lane of carriageways with more than two lanes, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available.

Stafford's Railway Bridge

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what additional safety measures have been undertaken in the past 12 months on the Stafford's railway bridge in Exeter.

Mr. Watts: Railtrack has informed me that, between November 1993 and February 1994, additional bracings were installed between the piers and the upstream side of the main girders of the Stafford's railway bridge to increase its lateral stability. I understand that the work undertaken allows the bridge to remain open longer during periods when the River Exe is in flood.

Mayday Call (Olympic Airways)

Mr. MacKinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what circumstances caused the Mayday call of Olympic Airways Boeing 737 Flight 265 from Athens on 17 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Olympic Airways Flight OA265 on 17 January 1995 was inbound from Athens to London Heathrow at a time air traffic control was advising all aircraft of 40-minute delays in landing. When given the delay, OA265, then holding in a "stack" at flight level 180, requested an earlier approach, stating engine de-icing problems. Air traffic control advised that a priority approach could be given only if the aircraft declared an emergency.

The pilot promptly made a "mayday" call, which is a distress emergency call to signify that an aircraft is threatened by grave and imminent danger and requests immediate assistance. This is for the captain to judge. However, there seems some doubt about the seriousness of the situation in this case: for example, there is no evidence that one engine had been shut down, as was reported in the press.

ATC offered the captain an immediate diversion to Gatwick airport, which he declined. Accordingly, the aircraft was then cleared for a direct approach to Heathrow airport, which instigated full emergency procedures. The aircraft landed safely and a subsequent examination apparently revealed no damage or technical malfunction.

The Civil Aviation Authority's safety data units received notification of the incident as an ATC occurrence report. Details of the incident have been passed to its flight operations policy department for consideration of any possible subsequent action by the authority.

Heathrow

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the districts of Greater London over which aircraft normally fly while making their final descent into Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The London Boroughs normally overflown are: Wandsworth, Richmond, Hammersmith and Fulham, Spelthorne, Hillingdon and Hounslow. In addition, aircraft skirt the southernmost boundary of Kensington and Chelsea.

Mr.Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department now has as to the statistical analysis for a major crash on Greater London by an aircraft using Heathrow airport; and when such an incident last occurred.

Mr. Norris: The statistical analysis available to the Department is derived from worldwide accident data and is not specific to individual airports. The last major crash of an aircraft using Heathrow airport occurred near Staines in 1972.

Aircraft (City Approaches)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport at which cities in Europe and north America, other than Greater London, airliners routinely fly over more than 15 miles of the city during an airliner's final approach to landing at the normal airport destination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available.

Oxygenated Petrol

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has carried out into oxygenated petrol; what plans for research into the environmental suitability of oxygenated petrol he has; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 26 January 1995, Official Report, column 367.

Fishing Vessels (Medical Supplies)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from fishermen's organisations about regulations governing the carriage of medical supplies on fishing vessels.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 26 January 1995]: Ministers have received 28 representations from fishermen's organisations via hon. Members about the regulations governing the carriage of medical supplies on fishing vessels. Of these, 22 have come from the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations, one from the Leigh and Southend Joint Fishermen's Association and one from the Fleetwood Fishermen's Association. Direct representations to the Department have also been received from the NFFO, the Scottish Fishermen's Federation and the Southern Sea Fishermen's Council.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Birth Control

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what specialist provision exists in Northern Ireland to offer contraception advice and counselling to young people; and what plans he has to extend these provisions following the findings of the recent study of the director of public health into the eastern health and social services board on abortions and contraception.

Mr. Moss: Family planning services are available to young people in Northern Ireland through family planning clinics, general medical practitioners and voluntary agencies. The provision of these services is a matter for health and social services boards to determine in the light of local needs and priorities. I understand that the Eastern health and social services board proposes to target family planning services on areas of social deprivation and high teenage pregnancy.

Atmospheric Pollution

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to change existing policy on atmospheric pollution in Northern Ireland following the recent Eastern health and social services report on the link between atmospheric pollution and the incidence of lung cancer.

Mr. Moss: In his fifth annual report, the director of public health for the Eastern health and social services suggested that a link may exist between atmospheric pollution and the incidence of lung cancer in certain parts of Northern Ireland, particularly in the Belfast area and that atmospheric pollution may be one of several environmental factors linked to the causation of disease. It presented no specific evidence however to show that such a link exists.

The Government have made a firm commitment to ensure that statutory air quality standards set to protect public health are achieved and maintained throughout Northern Ireland. They also have an on-going programme of major initiatives designed to improve air quality and inform the public when conditions are such that those at greatest risk are made aware of the situation.

Last week, a joint statement was issued by the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment setting out proposals for a new air quality management strategy for the United Kingdom taking account of the nine most significant pollutants. Northern Ireland has been consulted and will be fully involved in the evaluation and implementation of initiatives flowing from the strategy.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judiciary (Secret Societies)

44. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to require members of the judiciary to declare membership of secret societies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has no such plans.

Transsexuals (Marriage)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what plans he has to recognise British post-operative transsexuals who marry legally abroad as being married in their acquired gender; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if post-operative transsexuals who have married under New Zealand law will be recognised as married under British law; and if will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The position in the law of England and Wales is that a marriage to which parties are not respectively male and female is void. What sex a person has for this purpose is a question of fact, but the present legal position is that the biological criteria for determining sex are established at birth. The Government have no plans to change the law.

Custody

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many times the Official Solicitor recommended that the children that he is acting on behalf of are given into the custody of (a) the mother, (b) the father or (c) the local authority in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Automatic Party Status (Divorce Proceedings)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to give children automatic party status in divorce proceedings.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has no such proposals.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mutual Defence Agreement

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, columns 740–41, if there are any further amendments to the 1958 United States-United Kingdom mutual defence agreement, which are still in force at the present time, made prior to 1965.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 1958 US-UK mutual defence agreement was also amended in 1959.

Mrs. Shazia Noreen

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when is a decision to be taken by the United Kingdom post in Islamabad on the application of Mrs. Shazia Noreen, ref: IMM/C5048, to join her husband in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: I have asked the entry clearance officer in Islamabad to let me have a report on the application by Mrs. Shazia Noreen. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Rwanda

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to press through the appropriate United Nations authorities to establish whether the Rwandan nationals accused of the murder of their countrymen and countrywomen have been brought to justice.

Mr. Ethrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations to assist the Rwandan authorities to indict those who are responsible for the murder of Tutsis.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom was a co-sponsor of UN Security Council resolution 955 of 8 November 1994 which established an international criminal tribunal for Rwanda.

In addition, the UN has drawn up a plan to help reconstruct the Rwandan judicial system.

World Summit for Social Development

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what documents have been published by his Department in preparation for the world summit for social development in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We will be issuing an information brief on the world social summit in early February.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what follow-up mechanisms he favours in order to ensure that commitments given by member states at the world summit for social development are adhered to.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The summit documentation makes clear that follow-up at the national level will be the responsibility of national Governments. The UK is already addressing most of the issues that the summit will cover. We will note carefully any further action required and will seek to implement it through existing mechanisms.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the UN social summit in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A final decision on attendance at the summit will be made nearer the date.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will be representing his Department at the world summit for social development in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A final decision on attendance at the summit will be made nearer the date.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultation his Department has undertaken with non-governmental organisations regarding the draft plan of action for the world summit for social development.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information about the summit has been disseminated to over 200 contacts from a wide range of organisations in the United Kingdom. Of those who wish to be involved, some are in direct contact with the Government; others are in touch with a central contact point in UNED-UK, the United Kingdom branch of the United Nations environment and development non-governmental organisation, which we are funding specifically to disseminate information about the summit and to ensure any NGO with an interest in the summit's issues can make its voice heard. We welcome their interest and involvement and will remain in close touch with United Kingdom NGOs during the preparatory process and at Copenhagen itself.

Disabled People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the Departments and agencies for which he has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document, "Focus on Ability".

Mr. Goodlad: On 1 July 1994, the number of non-industrial civil servants employed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including the Overseas Development Administration and its agency, who were registered disabled was 52, representing 0.67 per cent. of the whole. Figures for the number and proportion of non-registered disabled staff are not available.

Mrs. Surraya Ashraf

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a solicitor, based in Bradford, visiting Pakistan asked officials at the United Kingdom post in Islamabad to review the refusal of an application by Mrs. Surraya Ashraf and her daughter Miss Noreen Akhtar, ref. GV100/24649, to enter the United Kingdom; when the request to review the application was agreed; what was the outcome of the review; when was that information sent to the solicitor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have asked the entry clearance officer to let me have a report on the applications by Mrs. Surraya Ashraf and her daughter, Miss Noreen Akhtar. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to be able to reply to the questions asked by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North on 18 July 1994, Official Report, column 28, on entry clearance applications and appeals.

Mr. Baldry: The answer to the hon. Member's question of 18 July 1994, was conveyed, in full, in a letter to him from me on 13 September. Arrangements were also made for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library.

Regrettably, the answer to the hon. Member's other question of 18 July has not been answered in full. I am therefore taking this opportunity to ask posts to update their final returns and will give the hon. Member the answer he seeks as soon as possible.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total number of applicants at the British embassy in Addis Ababa for permission to travel to Britain by nationality, waiting time for interviews and decisions for each of the past five years.

Mr. Baldry: I have asked the entry clearance officer in Addis Ababa to let me have a report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth office as soon as possible

Western Sahara

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken by his Department to further progress on the United Nations referendum on the future of the Western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As a member of the UN Security Council group of Friends of the Western Sahara, we have supported the efforts of the UN Secretary-General to bring about a resolution of the conflict in the Western Sahara. We have helped to broker various Security Council resolutions on the subject. Until September 1993, the United Kingdom contributed military personnel to the mission for a referendum in the Western Sahara.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which countries to which asylum seekers are forcibly returned British embassy officials meet them on arrival or monitor their return.

Mr. Baldry: None other than Vietnam where our embassy both meets on arrival and monitors repatriated Vietnamese migrants from Hong Kong who have been screened out as non-refugees.

Kurdistan

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings and discussions have been held with the PUK, KDP and Kurdish national parliament in recent months; and if he will make a statement on the internal conflict in Kurdistan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have sent messages to the leaders of the Iraqi Kurd political parties involved in the recent fighting urging them to reach an early and lasting settlement.

We understand that the parties have indicated a willingness to seek peace through the auspices of the Iraqi National Congress. We fully support those efforts, not least because the only beneficiary from violence in northern Iraq is Saddam Hussein.

Iran

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations on human rights issues have been made to the Government of Iran; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Union sponsored a strong human rights resolution on Iran which was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 23 December 1994. The Union also raised human rights issues in recent discussions with Iran.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the main functions of the chargé d'affaires in Tehran; and what proportion of his time is spent on visa applications.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our chargé d'affaires in Tehran, as head of mission, has a wide range of responsibilities which include political, representational, commercial and management functions. He supervises all embassy work including consular and visa matters.

East Timor

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made to the Indonesian Government concerning the action of their army in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: The European Union expressed concern in July and November 1994 about heightened tension in East Timor. The UN Secretary-General made an appeal on 9 January 1995 to East Timorese of all shades of opinion to exercise restraint. We look to the Indonesian Government to act similarly.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts at preventive diplomacy are being made by (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the UN, (c) the European Union and (d) the Organisation of African Unity, in respect of the internal security situation in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Baldry: We are very concerned at the recent deterioration in the security situation which had led to the abduction of a number of Sierra Leonean and foreign nationals, including six Britons. We are following developments closely and have reinforced our high commission in Freetown with experienced hostage negotiators. We are in touch with the Sierra Leone Government and our Commonwealth, EU and other partners in the region. We have also given strong encouragement to the UN Secretary-General's proposals to send a special representative. We hope it may be possible to bring about a peaceful solution in Sierra Leone and we are ready to contribute in any way we can to resolve the present difficulties.

Ivory Coast

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring of the safety of deportees from Britain is undertaken in the Ivory Coast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have no mechanism to monitor what happens to deportees from Britain returning to Cote d'Ivoire.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of the human rights situation in the Ivory Coast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to his question of 10 January 1995, Official Report, column 59.

Liberia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of the activities of the west African peacekeeping forces in Liberia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have received reports from many sources on west African peacekeeping activities in Liberia.

We continue to follow developments closely. We welcome and support the efforts of regional leaders and the United Nations to bring about a peaceful solution to the conflict in Liberia.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts Her Majesty's Government have had with representatives of different factions in Liberia in the past year.

Mr. Baldry: Our diplomatic missions in the region monitor developments in Liberia and have been contacted by representatives of most of the factions at some time.

EDUCATION

Emotionally Disturbed Children

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will outline his policy for dealing with emotionally disturbed children within the education system.

Mr. Forth: Children with emotional and behavioural difficulties, the term usually applied to children and young people whose symptoms lie between those associated with stressed but normal behaviour and those associated with psychiatric illness, have special educational needs. It is for schools and local education authorities to see that their needs are assessed and suitably met along with those of other children with learning difficulties. The code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs provides targeted advice and this is expanded in the joint Department for Education-Department of Health circular "The Education of Children with Emotional and Behavioural Difficulties", DFE ref: 9/94, both documents being available in the Library. They point up the vital importance of close collaboration between services. The Office for Standards in Education continue to monitor the quality of the education provided for this group of children.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many institutions there are who deal with the education of emotionally disturbed children; and how many there were in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Forth: Time series data are not available centrally, but recent returns from schools suggest that about 380 maintained and non-maintained special schools and independent schools would describe themselves as making special provision for children with emotional and behavioural difficulties. In addition, all mainstream schools are required to identify and where appropriate make suitable provision for individual pupils who fall within this category, following the guidance in the code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. Further provision is made within pupil referral units in most local education authorities.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children from the borough of Rotherham receive assisted places at independent schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information about the local education authority area from which assisted pupils originate is not collected centrally. There are no schools participating in the scheme within the borough of Rotherham.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many assisted places have been awarded in the current academic year to pupils attending former direct grant schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Figures are not yet available for the current academic year. In academic year 1993–94, 17,445 such pupils held assisted places.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of pupils with assisted places comes from households where the parents are in full-time salaried or waged employment paying pay-as-you-earn tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information concerning the occupations and tax position of parents in the assisted places scheme is not collected centrally.

Disabled People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the departments and agencies for which she has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document, "Focus on Ability".

Mr. Forth: The number of registered disabled people employed by the Department and the Teachers Pensions Agency is 60, representing 2.9 per cent. of the total. Figures for the number of all disabled people employed by the Department and the Teachers Pensions Agency are not currently available.

Special Needs

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children were statemented in each year from 1965 to 1980 inclusive.

Mr. Forth: The arrangements for issuing statements of special educational needs were introduced under the Education Act 1981. In England, the number of pupils newly assessed as requiring special educational treatment in calendar years 1977 to 1980 inclusive were 23,210; 22,972; 21,570 and 22,243 respectively. Information for England is not available for earlier years.

Standard Spending Assessment, Devon

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the percentage change between the proposed education standard spending assessment for 1995–96 and the comparable figure for 1994–95 for Devon county council.

Mr. Robin Squire: The proposed education standard spending assessment for 1995–96 for Devon is 2.2 per cent. higher than the comparable figure for 1994–95.

Direct Grant Schools

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many former direct grant schools are now independent schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: There are 120 registered independent schools which were formerly direct grant grammar schools.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the estimated cost of the development of computer systems for the fast-track applications system introduced by the Student Loans Company;

(2) what remuneration has been received by the assessor of the Student Loans Company in each year of the existence of the position;

(3) what was the expenditure by the Student Loans Company on computer systems development in each of the last two financial years for which figures are available; and to what specific purposes this expenditure was directed.

Mr. Boswell: These matters are for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the acting chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Student Loans

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students in London she expects to be in receipt of the new rate of loan for those who could conveniently live at home in 1995–96.

Mr. Boswell: The new rate of loan will apply from the academic year 1995–96 to students studying in London and living away from home whose grant is limited to the "parental home" rate of grant because their local education authority judges that they could conveniently live at home. Information is not collected centrally about the number of students in respect of whom LEAs have exercised this discretion.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each year since January 1991 for the grant-maintained secondary school sector (a) the number of full-time equivalent pupils, (b) full-time equivalent qualified teachers and (c) the pupil-to-teacher ratio.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the table.

Pupil: teacher ratios in grant-maintained secondary schools in England 1991–94 Position in January each year

	Full-time equivalent pupils	Full-time equivalent qualified teachers	Pupil teacher ratio
1991	36,400	2,390	15:3
1992	105,800	6,690	15:8
1993	221,400	13,780	16:1
1994	485,300	29,800	16:3

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those grant-maintained schools in Liverpool that have received loans from the Funding Agency for Schools; and whether these loans have been repaid or renewed.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information relating to loans made to grant maintained schools is held by the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

Free School Meals

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what statutory or discretionary provision exists for the provision of free school meals to pupils under the age of 19 years whose parents are in receipt of income support in (a) incorporated colleges of further education and (b) incorporated sixth form colleges.

Mr. Forth: Provision of this nature is encompassed within discretionary awards and access funds which are administered by local education authorities and FE colleges respectively. The rate of grant payable to students and the method of assessment are for the authority to determine. FE colleges decide which students who are suffering hardship they will support from access funds.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of women employed in the Scottish Office, its executive agencies, excluding the Scottish Prison Service, and associated departments at 1 April in the years from 1991 to 1994 and those at grade 7, grade 3, executive officer, administrative officer and administrative assistant levels were as follows:

Grade equivalent	1991	1992	1993		1994
	(FTE)	(FTE)	(FTE)	(Headcount)	(FTE)	(Headcount)
Grade 3	2.0	3.5	3.5	4	3.5	4
Grade 7	55.5	61.5	73.0	80	74.0	87
Executive officer	521.5	472.5	482.5	500	471.5	499
Administrative officer	932.5	926.0	883.5	943	848.0	924
Administrative assistant	859.0	830.0	829.0	880	817.5	862
Total women	2,689.5	2,623.5	2,627.0	2,792	2,595.0	2,774

Arable Aid Payments

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares of land established as grassland or soft or bush fruit during the years 1987 to 1991 which were initially ineligible for arable aid payments were subsequently deemed eligible by the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department after farmers had submitted completed HCAP 009.114 forms.

Sir Hector Monro: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lockerbie

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Crown Office was first informed by the United States authorities of the possible involvement of Ayatollah Mohtashami in the Lockerbie bombing as suggested in the US Air Force Intelligence Agency de-classified documents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Crown Office was aware of allegations of involvement of the former Iranian Interior Minister in the Lockerbie bombing at an early stage of the investigation. The allegations were examined by the competent authorities but no evidence has so far been found to substantiate them.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence the United States legal authorities gave to the Crown Office to support the indictment of Libyan suspects in connection with the Lockerbie bombing; when the evidence was received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Lockerbie investigation was carried out in close co-operation with the United States authorities. Criminal proceedings are pending and it would be improper to give details of evidence in the case.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the Crown Office first learned of the existence of the de-classified US Air Force Intelligence Agency files which refer to the bombing of the Pan Am 103 at Lockerbie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Crown Office first learned of the existence of this report from a press enquiry on 23 January 1995.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the Crown Office received a copy of the de-classified United States Air Force Intelligence Agency files which refer to the bombing of the Pan Am 103 at Lockerbie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Crown Office received a copy of the report on 24 January 1995.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the Crown Office was first informed of the contents of the de-classified United States Air Force intelligence Agency files which refer to the bombing of the Pan Am 103 at Lockerbie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Crown Office was first informed of the contents of the report on 23 January 1995 but was already well aware of allegations which are set out in that document.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the dates of the meetings which have been held between the Crown Office and the United States Air Force Intelligence Agency to discuss the contents of United States Air Force Intelligence Agency de-classified files which refer to the bombing of the Pan Am 103 at Lockerbie, the names of the individuals present and in what capacity they attended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No such meetings have been held.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the dates of the telephone discussions which have been held between the Crown Office and the United States Air Force Intelligence Agency to discuss the contents of United States Air Force Intelligence Agency de-classified files which refer to the bombing of the Pan Am 103 at Lockerbie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No such discussions have taken place.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of delegations involving United States law officers and representatives of US Air Force Intelligence Agency to the United Kingdom to discuss the investigation into the Lockerbie bombing, the meetings they attended and the matters discussed.

Mr. Lang: No delegations involving United States Air Force Intelligence Agency representatives have taken part in discussions in the United Kingdom concerning the investigation into the Lockerbie bombing. United States law enforcement officers, based in the United States and in the United Kingdom, have met Scottish police and prosecution authorities frequently during the Lockerbie investigation and a liaison officer of the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation was based at Lockerbie during much of the most active period of the Lockerbie investigation. The discussions of such officers were confidential.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of trips involving representatives of the Crown Office to the United States of America as part of the investigation into the Lockerbie bombing, the meetings they attended and the matters discussed.

Mr. Lang: Representatives of the Crown Office have visited the United States on a number of occasions for confidential discussions concerning the Lockerbie investigation, which was carried out in close co-operation with the United States authorities. It would be inappropriate to give details of these meetings and discussions.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment the Crown Office has made of the relevance of the de-classified US Air Force Intelligence Agency documents for the investigation into the Lockerbie bombing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The report quotes an untried source relying on "second and third party information" as stating that the former Iranian Interior Minister paid $10 million to have the Lockerbie bombing carried out. It contains no evidence to substantiate a story which was already well known and has not so far been otherwise substantiated. It has, accordingly, no present relevance to the investigation.

Instruments of Torture

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assurances are sought from United Kingdom companies active in the manufacture, marketing and supply of (a) electro-shock weapons and (b) instruments of torture that such assistance as is given to them will not be used to facilitate trade in and support the marketing of electro-shock weapons.

Mr. Stewart: In considering applications for licenses for the export of such equipment the DTI, together with advisers in other Government Departments, take special care and consider very carefully the political and military implications of allowing consignments to go overseas. Particular attention is paid to proposed exports to countries with poor human rights records, where the equipment might be used for internal repression.

I understand that ICL Technical Plastics has now confirmed that its company's export records show that no such equipment was ever sold or export licenses sought or approved by the DTI.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on the manufacture, marketing and supply of (a) electro-shock weapons and (b) instruments of torture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My Department has received a small number of letters from members of the public on this matter.

ICL Technical Plastics

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions were held between his Department and ICL Technical Plastics in order to promote its products in the foreign market place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Trade International, the export arm of the Scottish Office and Scottish Enterprise, had some discussions in 1993 with the company about the marketing of a range of conventional riot gear which had been already sold to police forces within the United Kingdom. No mention of electro-shock weapons or similar products has ever been made to officials.

The Scottish Office has conducted extensive investigation and is satisfied that the allegations made against the Department by the Channel 4 "Dispatches" programme are unsubstantiated.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance was given to ICL Technical Plastics in Glasgow for sponsoring sales trips abroad; and what sum was involved.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Trade International, the export arm of the Scottish Office and Scottish Enterprise, has given no financial assistance to ICL Technical Plastics, Glasgow, either for sponsoring sales trips abroad or indeed for any other business activities.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all sites in Scotland where depleted uranium is stored in any form; what is the quantity stored in each case; and what measures are taken to protect the public from any potential dangers.

Sir Hector Monro: In Scotland, depleted uranium is stored on nuclear sites at UKAEA Dounreay and British Nuclear Fuels plc, Chapelcross.

Tonnages stored at these sites are:

Dounreay: 110 tonnes

Chapelcross: 5,000 tonnes

At these sites, similar controls are applied to depleted uranium as for all other nuclear materials.

From time to time the Ministry of Defence stores small quantities of depleted uranium at the test and evaluation establishment at Kirkcudbright. They are stored in accordance with current licensing regulations, arrangements are overseen by the Health and Safety Executive, and Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate is aware of them. It is also held at other munitions stores and depots, but it is not the Ministry of Defence's practice to disclose the quantities of or locations where, specific types of ammunition are stored. However, all such material is held in safe and secure facilities in accordance with the requirements for radioactive materials.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines are operated by his Department as regards the use of executive search agencies to fill vacancies within his Department and his Department's executive agencies; and in what circumstances his Department employs executive search agencies instead of relying fully on Departmental resources to fill vacant posts.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 January 1995]: Executive search agencies are used in cases where my Department and its agencies consider posts will be difficult to fill and where suitable candidates are probably currently in employment and therefore unlikely to apply simply on the basis of an advertisement in the press.

Students

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discretion exists under current Scottish Office Education Department regulations and guidelines to allow institutions to make payments from access funds to students who are eligible for, but have not applied for, a student loan.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1995]: The guidance issued to institutions indicates that if an eligible student has not taken out a loan, and there are no exceptional circumstances, it would be reasonable to conclude that his or her circumstances were not sufficiently difficult to warrant assistance from the access funds.

We therefore expect the provision of assistance from the access funds to such students, other than on a short-term immediate need basis, to be very much the exception.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many students applied for assistance from the access funds in Scotland for the academic year 1993–94; and how many received payments;

(2) what was the amount disbursed to students from access funds in respect of fees, books, equipment, accommodation, child care, or other needs for each higher and further education institution in Scotland for the academic year 1993–94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1995]: A full breakdown is not available since not all institutions have been able to provide the information requested. The table sets out the available information by institutional sector based on returns submitted to date.

Access funds 1993–94

	Higher education institutions	Further education colleges	Total
Number of students applying[1]	13,500	4,600	18,100
Number of students assisted[1]	8,600	3,800	12,400
Amounts disbursed[1]	£1.9 million	£0.7 million	£2.6 million
Amounts available to all institutions	£2.7 million	£1.1 million	£3.8 million

[1] No adjustments have been made for outstanding returns.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the percentage changes in the number of students applying for assistance from access funds between each year since the system began and the academic year 1993–94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1995]: The available information, based on returns received to date, is set out in the table.

Figures for 1993–94 are not comparable with earlier years due to inclusion of returns from Scottish universities which, prior to that session, received their access funds resources from the then Universities Funding Council.

	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Number of students applying	11,000	12,600	12,700	18,100
Percentage increase on previous year	—	14 per cent.	1 per cent.	42 per cent.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the results of the monitoring returns for Scotland and higher education institutions on the use of discretionary funds for 1993–94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1995]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to access funds.

The detailed information so far available for academic year 1993-94 is not sufficiently comprehensive to justify publication. We will consider how best to disseminate the information when we have a more complete picture.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy that no patients awaiting cardiac surgery in the Borders health board area will be put under pressure to accept referral to Health Care International in Clydebank unless they and their general practitioners are convinced that it is in the patients' best interests to do so;

(2) what consideration he or his ministerial colleagues have given to the waiting list initiative taken by the Borders health board in respect of the referral of Borders patients waiting for cardiac surgery to Health Care International in Clydebank; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what discussion was held between the NHS Executive in Scotland and the Borders health board before the recent initiative to refer Border patients awaiting cardiac surgery to HCI in Clydebank; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what assessment he has made of the standard of cardiac surgery in HCI in Clydebank relative to the range of treatment available at the Royal infirmary in Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 January 1995]: This is a matter for Borders health board. It is appropriate for NHS purchasers to buy services from independent hospitals, in order to reduce waiting times for patients. The NHS in Scotland Management Executive was aware of Borders health board's proposal to purchase cardiac surgery services from HCI.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Pucklechurch Remand Centre

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of whether security at the Pucklechurch remand centre is adequate for the custody of category A prisoners.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyles dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about security at Pucklechurch prison.

An assessment has been made of the security arrangements needed to hold a category A prisoner at Pucklechurch prison and appropriate arrangements have been put into effect.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted category A prisoners have escaped in each year since 1965.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Jack Straw, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about how many convicted category A prisoners have escaped in each year since 1965.

Category A was introduced in June 1967. The following table shows the number of convicted category A prisoners who escaped in each calendar year since then.

Year	Number of prisoners	Year	Number of prisoners
1967	0	1987	2
1968	1	1988	0
1969	0	1989	1
1970	1	1990	1
1971	0	1991	1
1972	4	1992	1
1973	1	1993	0
1974 and 1975	0	1994	6
1976	3	1995	2
1977–1986 (inclusive)	0	—	—

In addition, in 1980 there were three escapes, and in 1991 two escapes, by remand/unconvicted category A prisoners.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A, category B and category C prisoners have escaped from custody in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Hutton, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, to reply to your recent Question about how many Category A, B and C prisoners escaped from custody in each year since 1979.

The information is not available in exactly the form you request. Information about escapes of category A prisoners is in the following table:

Category A escapes

Type of establishment	20 June 1988–31 March 1989	1 April 1989–31 March 1990	1 April 1990–31 March 1991	1 April 1991–31 March 1992	1 April 1992–31 March 1993	1 April 1993–31 March 94	1 April 1994–9 January 95

Local	0	2	0	2	0	0	0
Total	0	2	0	4	2	0	8

Incidents of escape from custody of other than prisoners in category A are recorded according to the security category of the prison from which the prisoner escapes and not by the security category of the prisoner.

Information about these escapes has only been recorded centrally since 20 June 1988. During the period 20 June 1988 to 9 January 1995, the number of prisoners who escaped from dispersal prisons and category B and C prisons is as follows:

Type of Establishment	20 June 1988–31 March 1989	1 April 1989–31 March 1990	1 April 1990–31 March 1991	1 April 1991–31 March 1992	1 April 1992–31 March 1993	1 April 1993–31 March 1994	1 April 1994–31 March 1995
Dispersal	—	1	—	—	—	—	1
Category B	49	15	34	50	45	24	23
Category C	82	99	153	170	126	104	77
Closed Young Offender	10	29	37	75	58	50	23
Closed Female	—	—	1	10	7	1	5

Escorts (Female)	7	5	4	14	13	9	7
Total	243	255	336	459	387	296	187

The above information also includes escapes from closed young offender establishments and those escapes form closed female establishments during this period. Young offenders and female prisoners are not classified as Category B or C, but as suitable for either closed or open conditions.

Prisoners (Private Cash)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the weekly limit of private cash that a prison inmate in prisons in England and Wales is allowed to spend.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the weekly limit which prisoners are allowed to spend from private cash.

The private cash limit for convicted prisoners is expressed in annual rather than weekly terms. The basic national limit, set in 1987, is £115 and excludes phonecards and newspapers. Higher levels can be set by governors with their area managers' agreement and some establishments have separate allowances for items such as hobbies materials and food. There are no such limits applying in general to unconvicted prisoners.

In his statement to the House on 19 December 1994 about the Woodcock enquiry into events at Whitemoor, the Home Secretary announced that amounts of private cash that prisoners are permitted to spend will be reduced, and in time the use of unearned private cash will be eliminated altogether.

Prison Security

Mr. Cox : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what salary has been or will be paid to the person or persons who will advise his Department on United States prison security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the salary of prison security advisors from the United States.

No decisions have been taken on the appointment or remuneration of a prison security advisor from the United States. A former warden of a maximum security prison in the United States has been invited to discuss the contribution that he might make to the Prison Service.

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons have had their locks changed because of key compromises in the last three years; and what was the average cost for each such prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Margaret Hodge, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisons where locks have been changed because of key compromises in the last three years.

Since January 1992 there have been 28 key compromises resulting in a change of locks. This includes the recent compromise at Parkhurst prison.

The cost of replacing the locks varies according to the size of the prison and the class of locks. Typical costs are in the range of between £40,000 and £64,000.

Prisoners (Self-inflicted Injuries)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for the numbers of self-inflicted injuries in Her Majesty's prisons, according to prison category, in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this mater has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of self inflicted injuries during 1979, 1985 and the most recent available year.

In 1979 a total of 1,906 incidents of deliberate self injury were recorded. In 1984 reporting periods changed from calendar to financial years and therefore we do not have a specific figure for 1985. During the year 1985–86 a total of 1,567 incidents of deliberate self injury were recorded. The most recent available year 1993–94 had 4,187. Incidents of deliberate self injury are normally categorised as those with apparent suicidal intent and other less serious incidents. These are summarised in Table 1.

Table 1: Number of incidents of deliberate self injury

Year	Number of incidents of deliberate self injury: With apparent suicidal intent	Other less serious incidents	Total
1979	300	1,606	1,906
1985–86	256	1,311	1,567
1993–94	825	3,362	4,187

The significantly higher figures for 1993–94 result from the Prison Service introducing a revised strategy for caring for potentially suicidal prisoners in April 1994. This was designed to enable a high quality of care to be given to prisoners who are identified as being at possible risk of self-harm. It reflected a decision to move away from a primarily medical model of suicide prevention towards a more integrated approach which emphasises the responsibility of the whole of the prison community for the care of those in distress.

Included amongst the new procedures was a system for identifying those at risk of self-harm by the use of a new form (F2052SH), which was piloted in a number of establishments during 1993. The form acts as a basis for a team work, case-conference approach to dealing with those at risk. The new system encourages staff to consider the most appropriate location for potentially suicidal prisoners, be that within the Health Care Centre or on the residential unit, with appropriate levels of supervision and support in either case.

It is possible that the introduction of the new form together with the higher profile which the strategy affords to identification of and support for potentially suicidal prisoners has affected recording procedures. Staff may have become more disposed to ascribe suicidal intent or alternatively have become more attentive to signs of self-injurious behaviour.

Information on deliberate self injuries by prison type is not available for 1979 or 1985–86. Table 2 shows the breakdown for 1993–94.

Table 2: Number of incidents of deliberate self-harm by prison type for 1993–94

Prison type	Number of incidents	[1] per cent. of CNA
Category D Trainer	9	0.3
Category C Trainer	295	2.5
Category B Trainer	120	3.2
Dispersal	116	4.4
Young Offenders (Male)	907	12.0
Local	1,750	12.5
Female	990	66.4

Note:

[1] Percentage CNA refers to the number of incidents of deliberate self injury expressed as a percentage of certified normal accommodation (CNA).

Prison Officers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on the regular movement of prison officers who deal with category A prisoners in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the policy on the regular movement of prison officers who deal with category A prisoners.

Category A prisoners are located in prisons where the majority of prisoners are in lower security categories. Governors rotate staff as they perceive the need to do so.

In the case of category A prisoners located in Special Secure Units, the Woodcock enquiry into the escape from Whitemoor recommended that there should be a firm policy for the rotation of staff to reduce the threat of conditioning. The Home Secretary accepted all the Woodcock recommendations and intends to publish a detailed timetable for their implementation shortly.

Prisoners (Surveillance)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners who (a) are classified as a suicide risk and (b) are not so classified have 24-hour surveillance as of 3 January this year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners classified as a suicide risk and the number of prisoners under 24 hour surveillance.

During the period 3 - 18 January 1995 a total of 16 inmates spent periods of continuous observation in prisons in England and Wales. Of these, 15 had been identified at risk of suicide and one placed on observation on Headquarters instructions as a precautionary measure.

Mrs. Rosemary West

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who issued the instruction to keep open at all times the cell door of Mrs. Rosemary West, currently in custody at Pucklechurch remand centre, after the death of her husband on 2 January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about who issued the instruction to keep open at all times the cell door of Mrs. Rosemary West, currently in custody at Pucklechurch Remand Centre, after the death of her husband on 2 January.

After the death of Frederick West on 1 January 1995 at Birmingham prison, the Directory of Custody, Phillipa Drew, in consultation with me, took the decision to place Rosemary West under observation by two members of staff on a twenty four hour basis, to prevent her from self harm.

Mrs. West's cell door is not kept open at all times. Her door is unlocked at approximately 20:45 and is locked again at 07.30. Every effort is being made to make the observation of Mrs. West as unobtrusive as possible.

Electro-shock Equipment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the United Kingdom Prison Service has been equipped with, or trained with the use of, electro-shock devices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about whether the United Kingdom Prison Service has been equipped with, or trained in the use of, electro-shock devices.

I can confirm that the Prison Service in England and Wales is not equipped with electro-shock devices nor are prison officers trained in the use of such devices.

It is for the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland to provide details for their own services.

Prison Governors

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which prisons in England and Wales did not have a number one governor in post as of 16 January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about which prisons in England and Wales did not have a number one governor in post as of the 16 January.

Our planning arrangements ensure that the majority of governor-in-charge posts are handed over by the outgoing governor to the incoming governor. Where there is an interregnum, arrangements are made for the post to be temporarily covered by another senior governor grade, usually from the same establishment.

On 16 January, the following prisons did not have a permanent governing governor in post:

HMP Canterbury: appointment pending.

HMP Coldingley: appointment made and new governor takes up post on 30 January.

HMP Lindholme: appointment pending.

HMP Long Lartin: appointment made and new governor takes up post on 30 January.

HMP Shrewsbury: appointment pending.

The new governor of HMP Parkhurst took up post on 16 January, which in turn created a vacant post to be filled at HMP Albany.

Life Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women who are classified as foreign nationals are currently serving a life prison sentence in a prison in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, how many (a) men and (b) women who are classified as foreign nationals are currently serving a life prison sentence in a prison in England and Wales.

The latest available provisional information is for 30 November 1994. On that date there were 490 non-British citizens (474 males and 16 females) serving a life sentence in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales. This includes 56 male and 4 female nationals from the Irish Republic.

Leeds Prison

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 202, for the non-payment of which types of fine the 11 people in Leeds prison are jailed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Battle, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about fine defaulters at Leeds prison.

On 14 December there were 11 prisoners serving sentences for non-payment of fines imposed as follows:

Offence on warrant

assault on police burglary

traffic offence (4)

criminal damage (2)

reckless driving

theft

drunk driving

Prisoners (Hospital Treatment)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the provision of security coverage to prisoners receiving outside hospital treatment; and who is responsible for the payment of costs incurred.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about security coverage during visits to outside hospitals.

The level of security coverage to be provided is a matter for the governor in each case. Guidance is contained in section 10 of the Security Manual, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

The cost of escorts to hospitals, as with other kinds of escort, is met by the prison.

MI5 (Headquarters)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current annual cost per member of staff accommodated in the MI5 headquarters building at Millbank, London.

Mr. Howard: It is long-standing Government policy not to provide detailed information about the expenditure of the security and intelligence agencies.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the current version of the European Union's data protection directive contains provisions regarding personal data derived from DNA samples of the dead; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the current version of the European Union's data protection directive contains provision about access by the data subject to non-automated personal data; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether the current version of the European Union's data protection directive contains provision regarding the giving of consent by the data subject, in certain circumstances, to the use and disclosure of personal data; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if the current version of the European Union's data protection directive protects the individual by restricting the holding of sensitive personal data to those controllers authorised by the United Kingdom Parliament; and what plans he has to introduce such restrictions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The most recent version of the draft data protection directive is an unpublished working document.

This version contains no reference to DNA. It provides for similar rights of subject access to both computerised data and data in manual filing systems. It allows processing to be carried out if any one of a number of conditions is met. These conditions include the giving of consent by the data subject.

The present text will not necessarily require the United Kingdom Parliament to authorise individual controllers to process sensitive personal data. If the directive is adopted, the Government will consider how to implement it in due course.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning progress towards agreement on the European Union's data protection directive; if he will indicate those areas where the United Kingdom Government still have major concerns; if he expects to vote against parts of the directive at a forthcoming meeting of the Council of Ministers in February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Negotiations within Council on the draft data protection directive are likely to be concluded under the French presidency. The Government continue to have reservations about a number of aspects of the directive: their final position will be determined when negotiations within the Council are concluded.

Mr. John Marriott

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the salary paid to Mr. John Marriott when governor of Parkhurst prison; and what will be the salary paid to him in his new position.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 30 January 1995:

Mr. Marriott is Governor Grade 1 and was and is paid the salary for that grade within the range £46,986 and £48,025. His salary will not change as a result of taking up his new position.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what procedures his Department has put in place for monitoring the success of the new arrangements for the entry of overseas domestic workers;

(2) what safeguards he has put in place to ensure that employers of overseas domestic workers honour agreements made to their workers under the new agreements announced on 9 December, once they have entered the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I do not believe that detailed monitoring of the new arrangements is necessary, but I shall keep them under general review.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the new arrangements for the admission of overseas domestic workers announced on 9 December will clearly set out standards of employment which conform to United Kingdom labour laws.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The new arrangements include a requirement for the employer to provide a written statement, setting out the main terms and conditions of employment, a copy of which must be given to the domestic worker, who must confirm that he or she agrees to them. Contractual employment terms are generally matters for the parties concerned and are not regulated by United Kingdom legislation.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific guidelines as to what constitutes adequate maintenance and accommodation will be included in the new arrangements announced on 9 December, Official Report, columns 379–80 for the admission of overseas domestic workers

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Entry clearance officers already have guidance on the application of the maintenance and accommodation requirements of the immigration rules. Separate guidance has not been issued in relation to overseas domestic workers. A domestic worker must be provided with a separate bedroom.

National Lottery

Mr. Worthington : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the disbursement of national lottery funds to charities.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Twenty per cent. of available national lottery proceeds has been allocated for disbursement to eligible bodies by the National Lottery Charities Board. The board is an independent body, which will devise its own policies, practices and procedures, within the framework of the legislation. I understand that its present aim is to issue guidelines to applicants during the course of the year and to begin considering applications and making grants towards the end of the year.

The other national lottery distributing bodies are also able to make grants to charities in their respective subject areas.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects charities to receive funds from the National Lottery Charities Board.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: This is a matter for the National Lottery Charities Board. I understand however that it hopes to begin making grants towards the end of this year.

Livestock (Cruelty)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions his Department has brought forward for cruelty to livestock in each month since 19 January 1994; and how many of the defendants in these cases used lawyers paid for from legal aid.

Mr. Maclean: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and not the Home Department is involved in proceedings for cruelty to livestock. No data for 1994 will be available until autumn 1995. The table shows the number of prosecutions under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 and Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 by type of proceedings and month for 1993. Information held centrally does not identify the individual summoning body, nor the number of cases receiving legal aid by offence type.

[1] Cannot distinguish between offences involving livestock or other animals.

Note:

The statistics of court proceedings are based on returns made by the police to the Home Office and although these include offences where there has been no police involvement, such as those prosecutions instigated by government departments, private organisations and individuals, the reporting of these types of offence is known to be incomplete. Where proceedings involve more than one offence, the table records the principal offence.

Essex Police

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the cost of the use of video and still camera equipment by the Essex police at Brightlingsea in each month since October 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I understand from the chief constable of Essex that such equipment has only been used in Brightlingsea during January 1995. As at 27 January, the cost was estimated at £1,100 for video equipment and £280 for still cameras.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to end the policy of detaining asylum seekers in Britain pending decisions on their applications.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Court of Appeal is currently considering a case involving the power to detain certain people who have sought asylum and the court's judgment will be given very careful consideration once it is received. In the meantime, it is not proposed to change our current general practice which results in the detention of only a very small proportion of people who have sought asylum.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what international conventions govern the practice of restraining failed asylum seekers in flight, and withholding their documents and handing them to the authorities of their country of origin;

(2) what are the procedures when failed asylum seekers are returned under escort to (a) Angola, (b) Ghana, (c) Zaire, (d) Sierra Leone, (e) Sri Lanka, (f) Turkey and (g) Uganda;

(3) what are the procedures for returning refused asylum seekers under escort to their country of origin; and if the passenger together with his travel documents is handed over to the security services at the receiving airport;

(4) in what circumstances the tranquillising drug largactil or chlorpromazine is given in the forced removal of failed asylum seekers; who determines the dose; and who administers it.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The powers of the commander of an aircraft to authorise the use of restraints in flight flows from article 6 of the Tokyo convention 1963. I am not aware of any international convention governing the handling of travel documents in these circumstances. Escorted asylum seekers are normally invited to disembark at the country of destination in possession of their own documentation. The procedures for removing failed asylum seekers under escort are the same irrespective of the country of destination. The person would not normally be drawn to the attention of the authorities in the country of destination unless this was considered appropriate e.g. in relation to a criminal offence. The administration of medication is a matter for a medical practitioner to decide. Sedation is not used as a means to effect removal.

Employment Vetting

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he intends to publish his proposals on the disclosure of criminal records for employment vetting purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has for the introduction of conviction certificates for employment vetting purposes.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We plan to publish a White Paper outlining our proposals for new arrangements for the disclosure of criminal records in late spring. The White Paper may include the proposal that people should be able to apply for a certificate showing any convictions they may have which are unspent under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974. Employers could then ask to see such a certificate before making a firm job offer.

Police Grant

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to allocate the police grant in 1995–96.

Mr. Howard Further to his reply 1 December, Official Report, columns 844-45: I have today laid before the House the Police Grant Report (England and Wales) 1995–96. The report sets out the amount of police grant to be made available to individual police authorities in 1995–96. It should be read in conjunction with the Local Government Finance Report (England) 1995–96, the Limitation of Council Tax and Precepts (Relevant Notional Amounts) Report (England) 1995–96 and the Special Grant Report (No. 12), which was today laid before the House by my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, and, for Welsh police forces, with the information being given to the House this afternoon by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

I am placing in the Library and in the Vote Office copies of a table showing by police force area the total effect of these announcements as they relate to police funding in England and Wales.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Consultants

30. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what conclusions the Church Commissioners have drawn from their independent actuaries' consultants reports.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners have accepted their actuaries' advice that in their endeavours to meet the commitments placed upon them they have been over distributing their income and that contributions should be collected from Church members to finance the cost of pension benefits accruing in the future.

Schools (Acts of Worship)

31. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the right hon. member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners if (a) beneficed clergy, (b) other clergy, (c) bishops and (d) archbishops are to be asked to conduct acts of worship in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: This is not a matter for the Church Commissioners.

Churchgoers

32. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what assessment the Commission has made of the effect of changes in the average age of churchgoers on the finances of the Church of England.

Mr. Alison: None. The Central Board of Finance of the Church of England collects financial and membership information annually from the parishes, but does not hold data on the age profile of congregations.

Disestablishment

33. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what recent representations he has received about disestablishment.

Mr. Alison: None.

Investment (Arms Trade)

34. Mr. Cohen: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what is the Church Commissioners' policy in respect of investing in companies engaged in the arms trade.

Mr. Alison: The Commissioners do not invest in any company whose main activity is in armaments. They have followed this policy for many years and monitor their investments accordingly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Jobseekers Allowance

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the safety of Benefits Agency staff dealing with income support claims and the proposed jobseekers allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support and the benefit-related aspects of the proposed jobseeker's allowance is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 27 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the safety of Benefits Agency staff dealing with Income Support claims and the proposed Jobseeker's Allowance.

From April 1996, Jobseeker's Allowance will replace Income Support and Unemployment Benefit for those customers who are required to be available or register for employment. Other customers will still be able to claim Income Support but there are no proposals to have claims by them dealt with by Benefits Agency staff in Employment Service Jobcentres and there have been no representations about the safety of staff dealing with Income Support claims.

Claims to Jobseeker's Allowance will be dealt with, as far as is possible, in Employment Service Jobcentres. To date, representations have been received from the Benefits Agency Trade Union Side about the safety of Benefits Agency staff working in Employment Service Jobcentres. Discussions are taking place with the Trade Union Side following a generic risk assessment of the effects of handling the Jobseeker's Allowance in Employment Service Jobcentres. This will be followed by local risk assessments in each Employment Service Jobcentre. Benefits Agency Trade Unions will be consulted about the results of the risk assessment.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency (Assaults)

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many assaults have been committed on Benefits Agency staff dealing with income support claims in each year since 1979 (a) nationally, (b) by region and (c) by individual social security office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of Income Support is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Ian McCartney dated 27 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about assaults on Income Support staff in Benefits Agency Offices.

Statistics on assaults on Benefits Agency Staff dealing with Income Support are not readily available in the format requested. This is because when collating these statistics, no differentiation is made with regard to the type of benefit in question, other than at a national level. Information relating to regions and individual offices could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

National statistics on the total number of reported assaults related to Income Support claims and supplementary benefit, which preceded it, are reproduced on the attached schedule. Figures prior to 1992 relate to the Department of Health and Social Security and Department of Social Security. Those for 1992 and 1993 relate to the Benefits Agency only. Statistics for 1994 are not yet available.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to introduce proposals for the Child Support Agency which will enable a repayment or payments at once if an overpayment has been made to the Child Support Agency resulting from an error by the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: We have been considering the current provisions in the Child Support Act and regulations relating to overpaid maintenance and have concluded that some changes are necessary. We propose to amend regulation 10 of the Arrears, Interest and Adjustment of Maintenance Assessment Regulations to give the child support officer greater discretion in setting the amount by which current maintenance can be reduced when maintenance has been over paid. The amendment will be tabled in March for introduction in April.

However, some cases will still remain where such an adjustment will not be possible or where it will give an unreasonable result. For example, there may be no current maintenance liability which could be reduced to take account of an overpayment, or only a small reduction will be possible meaning the overpayment would be repaid over an unreasonably long period. We therefore propose to include in the forthcoming Child Support Bill a measure to enable the Child Support Agency to reimburse the absent parent in such circumstances.

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the national insurance number can be used for purposes unconnected with the tax and benefits system; what legislation would be necessary to legitimise any new purpose; what plans he has to make the number more widely available for such purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on Tuesday 29 November 1994, Official Report, column 627. The national insurance number can be used only for national insurance, tax and social security benefit-related purposes and we have no plans at present to introduce legislation to extend the use of the national insurance number.

Medical Appeals Consultants

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the total budget in each year since 1993 for training courses provided for medical consultants working with the medical appeals tribunals section of the Northern area of the independent tribunal service;

(2) if he will list for each year since 1993 and to the latest available date (a) all general training courses, their duration and numbers attending and (b) all specialist or medical training courses, their duration and numbers attending, which were provided for medical consultants working with the medical appeals tribunals section of the Northern area of the independent tribunal service;

(3) how many medical consultants are employed by the independent tribunal service in each region.

Mr. Hague: These are matters for the President of the independent tribunal service, his honour Judge Bassingthwaighte. I will ask him to write to the hon. Member.

Income Support

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants for income support have been refused owing to the habitual residence test per month since it was introduced; and of these how many were (a) British nationals and (b) non-British nationals.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Number of Income Support claimants recorded as having been refused benefit under the habitual residence test

1994	British nationals	Non-British nationals
August	237	758
September	372	2,028
October	454	2,724
November	585	2,741
December	439	2,234
Total	2,087	10,485

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the savings which will result from his proposals to (a) reduce the cap for income support for mortgage interest payments to £100,000 from April, (b) pay income support for mortgage interest only after nine months on benefit for new borrowers from October, (c) pay income support for mortgage interest only after two months on benefit for existing borrowers from October and (d) pay income support for mortgage interest at a standard rate to all claimants, (i) in 1995–96 and (ii) in a full year.

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated saving of reducing the cap on mortgage interest payments from £125,000 to £100,000 for new claims from April is £2 million for the year to April 1996. This estimate is based on the 1993 annual statistical enquiry, uprated to 1995–96 levels. The financial effects of the other changes will depend on the outcome of the consultation and the final detail of the scheme.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what considerations underlay his proposals to adopt a standard rate of mortgage interest payments for income support.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the current scheme, which calculates each penny of interest due and reflects every change in interest rates, is extremely complex. It has been the subject of criticism by both the chief adjudication officer and the National Audit Office. A standard rate will significantly ease this administrative burden as well as reducing the cost to the taxpayer.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is his intention that income support should continue to provide long-term assistance to borrowers to cover mortgage interest payments.

Mr. Roger Evans: Yes.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many existing claimants of invalidity benefit transferring to incapacity benefit he estimates will fail the new test of incapacity (a) at a threshold score of 15 or (b) if the threshold score were reduced to (i) 14, (ii) 13, (iii) 12, (iv) 11 and (v) 10;

(2) how many existing claimants of invalidity benefit transferring to incapacity benefit he estimates will fail the new test of incapacity (a) in total and (b) in the age bands (i) 55 to 57, ii) 50 to 54, (iii) 45 to 49 and (iv) 40 to 44 years;

(3) what is his estimate of the cost of (a) setting the threshold score for incapacity benefit at 15 and (b) lowering the threshold score for eligibility to incapacity benefit to (i) 14, (ii) 13, (iii) 12, (iv) 11 and (v) 10;

(4) how many new claimants of incapacity benefit he estimates will fail the new test of incapacity (a) at a threshold score of 15 or (b) if the threshold score were reduced to (i) 14, (ii) 13, (iii) 12, (iv) 11 and (v) 10;

(5) how many new applicants for incapacity benefit he estimates will fail the new test of incapacity (a) in total and (b) in the age bands (i) over 58, (ii) 55 to 57, (iii) 50 to 54 (iv) 45 to 49 and (v) 40 to 44 years.

Mr. Hague: We estimate that in the next two years 220,000 existing invalidity benefit claimants will cease to be entitled to incapacity benefit earlier than they would under the current system due to the application of the new all work test. Around 55,000 new claimants each year who would have been entitled to invalidity benefit will be found capable of work under the new test. No information is available on a breakdown of these totals by age.

The threshold for benefit in the new test has been set at 15. It has been derived from the development work and set at the point where it would be unreasonable to expect someone to work. It would not be appropriate to set it at any other level. Accordingly we do not have estimates of the number of claimants who would be found capable if a lower threshold score was adopted and the associated costs.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of passporting invalidity benefit recipients to incapacity benefit at the age of (a) 58, (b) 55 and (c) 50 years.

Mr. Hague: We estimate that the savings from applying the new all work test to exciting invalidity benefit recipients for the year 1995–96 is £140 million. This is on the basis that all claimants aged 58 and over who have been continuously in receipt of invalidity benefit since 1 December 1993 are exempt from the test as well as those who are terminally ill, those in receipt of the highest rate care component of disability living allowance and those suffering from certain specified severe and chronic illnesses. If all claimants aged 50 or over were exempt from the test on the same basis this amount would be reduced by £45 million. If all claimants aged 55 or over were exempt, the savings would be reduced by £15 million. In subsequent years the savings would be reduced by larger amounts.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in each category will have their entitlements reviewed in relation to the new incapacity benefit; and who will qualify for the new benefit, in both numerical and percentage terms.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 27 January 1995]: An estimated 1.8 million people will be receiving invalidity benefit by the time it is replaced by incapacity benefit on 13 April 1995. They will automatically qualify for the new benefit. Around half will be exempt from the new medical test of incapacity. Around 220,000 people are expected to be found capable of work in the first two years. We estimate that an additional 55,000 new claimants a year, who would have qualified for invalidity benefit under the current rules, will be found capable of work as a result of the new test.

Child Care

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the total credit made to the national insurance fund each year by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of (a) women and (b) men each year as a result of their child caring responsibilities.

Mr. Arbuthnot: No actual sums of money are credited to the national insurance fund in these circumstances. The state pension position of people with child caring responsibilities can be protected by home responsibilities protection which works by reducing the number of years of contributions otherwise needed for the basic pension.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing (Spanish Vessels)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ships in Britain's registered fishing fleet are Spanish owned.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Rupert Allason, dated 30 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question, originally tabled for reply by the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, about Spanish-owned vessels in the British-registered fishing fleet.

I have to explain that this information is not available. Following the coming into force on 21 March 1994 of the Merchant Shipping (Registration Ships) Regulations 1993, the only eligibility requirement for companies wishing to register fishing vessels on the UK register is that they be incorporated in a member State of the European Economic Area with a place of business in the United Kingdom. Therefore it is no longer necessary for the Register of Ships and Seamen to know the nationality of shareholders and thus the information you require is not collected.

HEALTH

Administrative Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) managerial staff and (b) administrative and clerical staff have been employed by (i) regional health authorities, (ii) district health authorities and (iii) family health services authorities in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: In the following figures, managers are defined as those staff directly employed on general and senior manager terms and administrative and clerical staff are those directly employed on A and C terms. At 30 September 1989, there were 360 managers and 8,630 administrative and clerical staff in regional health authority headquarters, there were 30 managers and 4,360 administrative and clerical staff in family health services authorities. At 30 September 1990, the figures were 1,010 and 8,080, and 640 and 4,350 respectively. At 30 September 1993, the figures were 1,400 and 5,330, and 1,060 and 4,800 respectively.

The increase in the number of managers is due largely to the reclassification of administrative and professional staff, including many senior nurses, as general and senior managers. In FHSAs, the increase is also due to new or greater managerial responsibilities of FHSAs for primary care development, general practitioner contracts, medical audit advisory groups, budgetary control, health promotion monitoring—immunisation targets and increased roles in community care.

Data for 1991 and 1992 cannot be provided because the figures were collected on an aggregate basis and it is not possible to identify staff in regional and district health authorities and FHSAs separately. Data for DHAs cannot be provided for 1989, 1990 and 1993 because the aggregate figures collected for those years do not identify staff in DHA headquarters separately.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many managers and administrators were employed by the national health service (a) in 1989 and (b) at present.

Mr. Malone: At 30 September 1989 and 30 September 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, there were respectively 121,450 and 152,660 whole-time equivalent directly employed staff engaged on general and senior manager and administrative and clerical terms in the NHS. The figures are not directly comparable. Many professional staff including many senior nurses, and other staff have been reclassified as general and senior managers. In addition, certain NHS functions, including finance, personnel and information, have been strengthened. Over a quarter of administrative staff work in direct support to clinicians, allowing clinicians to concentrate their skills and experience on direct patient care.

Smoking

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many smoking-related deaths she estimates would be avoided by every 1 per cent. cut in the prevalence of cigarette smoking among the population.

Mr. Sackville: Estimates of the effect of reducing smoking on the number of smoking-related deaths are complicated by the fact that smoking attributable diseases develop at differing rates over long periods. In broad terms, it can be estimated that a 1 per cent. cut in smoking prevalence in the population could be expected to reduce the number of smoking-related deaths by 2,000 to 3,000 deaths per year in the long term.

Negligence Claims

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the number of negligence claims which will be made against the national health service in each of the next five years; andwhat was the total cost of negligence damages against the NHS in each of the last three years.

Mr. Malone: We do not make estimates of the numbers of future medical negligence claims. Total costs for each of the last three years are estimated as £80 million in 1991–92, £100 million in 1992–93 and £125 million in 1993–94.

Dental Services

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she will take to ensure that patients presenting themselves for treatment at dental surgeries are made aware of the cost of the treatment before its commencement; and also made aware of whether this treatment is available under the NHS.

Mr. Malone: Dentists are required to provide patients with treatment plans which include details of costs of national health service treatment and any private treatment proposed. Dentists are also required to display in their surgeries information about NHS charges and about entitlement to exemption from and remission of such charges.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices in each health authority area in England are (a) providing national health service treatment to existing patients and (b) willing to provide NHS treatment to new patients; and what percentage of the population in each area is registered for NHS treatment.

Mr. Malone: Information about general dental service practitioners under contract to family health services authorities will be placed in the Library. Information about dentists willing to take new national health service patients is not available centrally. Patients may register with dentists in FHSAs other than in the area where they are resident. Information is not available centrally therefore on the percentage of population of any FHSA which is registered.

Meningitis, Dover

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the three recent cases of meningitis in the Dover area and the risk to health in the area.

Mr. Sackville: Three cases of meningococcal meningitis-septicaemia were diagnosed in the Dover area from 28 December to 9 January. Each case was reported to and investigated by the consultant in communicable disease control at East Kent health authority. Immediate detailed tracing action was carried out and all those people who were contacts were given prophylactic treatment. Further preventative treatment was arranged via the local general practitioners.

There is no evidence of increased reporting of cases and there is no evidence of an outbreak. There are no known links between these cases. It is not unusual for three cases to occur within a short period of time, especially during winter months.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging Scanner

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the operational use of the Stoke Mandeville magnetic resonance imaging scanner is (a) for patients and (b) commercial; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The magnetic resonance imaging scanner at the hospital is owned not by the national health service but by the Jimmy Savile Hospital trust fund. It is therefore up to the trust fund to determine its operational use.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase prescription charges (a) in this financial year or (b) in the financial year 1995–96.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. McLoughlin) on 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1144.

GP Charges

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the services for which general practitioners are able to make charges.

Mr. Malone: This information is contained in paragraph 38 of schedule 2 to the National Health Service (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992, copies of which are available in the Library.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to resolve the difference in the legal opinions obtained by her Department and the Data Protection Registrar as to whether the national health service number is protected by Crown copyright; if she will summarise her understanding of the registrar's position; if under current proposals other Government Departments will be able to use the national health service number for internal administration purposes not associated with health care; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Data Protection Registrar's position is that statutory control of access to and use of the new national health service number is appropriate. The Department remains of the view that unauthorised use can be pursued without resort to legislation: a view that would be tested in a case where evidence of actual abuse arose. There is no intention that the NHS number should be used by any Government Department for purposes not associated with health care.

National Register for Carers

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the representations she has received in support of the National Register for Carers; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I have recently received a few letters from hon. Members about literature sent to them by the National Register for Carers. I have received no other recent representations on this matter.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each regional health authority, the number of patients in receipt of long-term benzodiazepines for the latest year she has figures; and what were the figures (a) five and (b) 10 years ago.

Mr. Bowis: Benzodiazepines are prescribed by general practitioners or hospital doctors on the basis of their diagnosis of a patient's condition and for whatever period the doctor considers appropriate. We do not require this information to be submitted to the Department.

Redundant Hospitals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many redundant national health service hospitals following disposal have been returned to hospital or allied use by the new owners since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: No records are kept of the use put by purchasers of surplus national health service hospitals following sale.

Out-patients

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which NHS trusts over the past 12 months it has been reported that first-time out-patients' appointments have not been available within 13 weeks.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Hospital Transport

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which national health service trusts, over the past 12 months, it has been reported that patients have waited more than an hour after transport has been booked to take them home from hospital.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Blood

Mr Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to carry out examination of blood serum in order to detect hepatitis C (a) donors and (b) recipients, prior to current screening methods.

Mr. Sackville: I announced on 11 January a look-back exercise to trace, counsel and if necessary treat those who may have been inadvertently infected with hepatitis C through blood transfusions. A working party of experts is currently meeting to draw up guidance on the procedures for undertaking the look-back exercise, including procedures for testing of serum samples to detect hepatitis C in donors and receipients.

Testicular Cancer

Mr. Hincliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action and expenditure is undertaken to encourage me to self-examine for the onset of testicular cancer; and if she will will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Health Education Authority, which is funded by the Department of Health, provides information and advice about health direct to the public, and acts as a resource to health professions and others in the health education field. It has produced a booklet "Cancer: how to reduce your risks" which includes a section on testicular self-examination.

Skin Cancer

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) fatal or (b) non-fatal instances of skin cancer have been detected within the national health service, in each of the last 10 years; and what steps her Department is taking to combat this condition.

Mr. Sackville: The available information on cause of deaths is contained in Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publications available in the Library: Series MB1 cancer statistics—registrations, and series DH2 mortality statistics—death by cause. A commitment to halt the rising incidence of skin cancer is one of the key targets set out in "The Health of the Nation". The Department's strategy in this area includes a national public health campaign on skin cancer in partnership with the Health Education Authority and a programme of activity involving the national health service, commercial and professional bodies and other Government Departments to encourage healthy attitudes to exposure to sunlight.

Headlice

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to assist health authorities to combat outbreaks of headlice in children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Some health authorities have protocols for controlling this condition through co-operation between schools, school health service staff and parents. The voluntary organisation, Community Hygiene Concern, is also helping to raise awareness of the problem through its "Bug Busting" campaign. We will be making a contribution to the cost of this campaign for three years from 1995–96 and will also be referring to the work of CHC and other good practice in the national health service in guidance on child health care in the community which is currently in preparation.

Intensive Care Units

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the intensive care units which are currently facing closure in London.

Mr. Sackville: Provision of intensive treatment units is a matter for local health authorities in consultation with their hospitals.

GPs (Training)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she has plans to reform or abolish the post-graduate educational allowance for GPs; and if she will make a statement on post-graduate training for doctors;

(2) what steps she is taking to improve the standards of GP doctors training in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: We have no plans to abolish the postgraduate education allowance.

Ministers accepted in principle the improvements to postgraduate training for doctors recommended in the working group report on specialist medical training "Hospital Doctors: Training for the Future". Progress on implementation is outlined in EL(94)71 "Implementation of the Report of the Working Group on Specialist Medical Training" dated 22 September 1994; copies of which are available in the Library. Since then, substantial progress has been made with the medical profession through several working groups. The future arrangements for postgraduate training in general practice are likely to be significantly influenced by the recommendation of the general practice working group whose report will be published shortly for wide consultation.

GPs (Out-of-hours Cover)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department is doing into the effectiveness of local GP out-of-hours cover co-operatives and their cost-efficiency; if she has plans to reimburse in full GPs who join such local experiments; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Individual family health services authorities are responsible for monitoring the provision and standard of general medical services within their localities.

We are continuing to discuss the development of out-of-hours services with the profession, including appropriate reimbursement for providing those services.

Waiting Times

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the median and mean waiting times for urgent in-patient treatment over the last three years.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will implement a system which will routinely gather and analyse out-patient waiting time data in the National Health Service.

Mr. Malone: We have recently implemented a system to collect information on the waiting times for first out-patient appointments. This system records how long patients seen during a quarter had to wait. The first provisional results, for the quarter ending September 1994, were published on 18 January.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research she has conducted which compares the number and extent of injuries inflicted by mentally ill people on themselves against the level of injuries inflicted by mentally ill people on others; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what research she has conducted which compares the number and extent of injuries inflicted by mentally ill people on others against the level of injuries inflicted by all sectors of the population on others; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Department has funded the Royal College of Psychiatrists to undertake a confidential inquiry into homicides and suicides involving mentally ill people in contact with or recently discharged from specialist psychiatric services. A preliminary report on homicides was published last year and copies are available in the Library. A full report on homicides and suicides will be published later this year.

The Department is aware of independent research studies, from this country and the United States, which have looked at the relationship between mental illness and violent behaviour and violent offending. The findings of these studies have been taken into account in the development of policies for the care of mentally ill people.

Ambulance Travel Times

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time of travel from collection point to hospital by ambulance.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if (a) recent large-scale investment, (b) a proven community need and (c) substantial health care staff unemployment are criteria used by the Government to avert the closure of a hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The decision to close a hospital is initially for the local health authority after full local consultation. When a proposal to close a hospital is referred to Ministers following objection by a community health council, they will consider all relevant factors in reaching their decision.

Orthopaedic Clinics

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of English and Welsh orthopaedic clinics are booking patients over a year in advance; and what assessment she has made of the reasons for this.

Mr. Malone: Information requested in respect of England is not available centrally. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mrs. Roberta Gerardo

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the death of Roberta Gerardo.

Mr. Sackville: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

NHS Trusts (Sponsorship)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out the advice which she has given national health service trusts on the subject of sponsorship.

Mr. Sackville: Advice on commercial sponsorship of posts and of attendance by staff at relevant conferences, courses and other events is contained in HSG (93) 5, "Standards of business conduct for NHS staff". Further advice is contained in "Income Generation: A Guide to Local Initiative", issued under cover of HN (89) 9. Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

Social Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to allow the purchasing of social care by fundholding general practitioners in pilot schemes on total purchasing.

Mr. Malone: Fundholding general practitioners in the total purchasing pilot schemes will be able to purchase all hospital and community health services on behalf of their patients.

Asphyxia (Deaths)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the recorded numbers of deaths by (a) age and (b) gender by asphyxiation from chewing gum in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Children (Divorce Proceedings)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the workings of the Children Act 1989 in respect of children's rights during divorce proceedings.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

There are no plans to conduct such a review.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Listed Buildings, Leicester

7. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will carry out a review of listed buildings in the city of Leicester.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no plans for a comprehensive review. Several significant buildings in Leicester have recently been spot-listed, and I am always ready to consider the case for listing, particularly where buildings are under threat.

Disabled People

12. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress his Department is making towards full access for disabled people into sports venues.

Mr. Sproat: The Government are keen to ensure that people with disabilities are able to gain access to sports facilities in order to both watch and participate in sport. The Building Regulations 1991 already require all newly built and most extended public buildings to be accessible to people with disabilities. In addition, the Disability Discrimination Bill will introduce new rights of access for disabled people.

13. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with disability arts organisations about improving arts opportunities for the disabled.

Mr. Sproat: My Department is in regular contact with disability arts organisations.

23. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consideration he has given to the needs of disabled people in framing his proposals to restructure the Sports Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: Under the proposals I have announced, I shall expect the Sports Council, and its successors, to give full weight to the needs of sport for able-bodied people and people with disabilities.

Millennium Commission

20. Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the progress being made by the Millennium Commission in achieving its objectives.

Mr. Dorrell: I am delighted with the Millennium Commission's progress to date. The commission issued detailed guidance for applicants in November. Applications for funding for capital projects, large and small are now being invited, and the commission is consulting with experts on a festival for the year 2000 and a bursary scheme. A national competition for ideas for the festival will be launched in the spring.

Arts, Yorkshire

24. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last met the chairman of the Yorkshire and Humberside regional arts council to discuss the development of the arts in the Yorkshire region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I have had no such discussion with the chairman of Yorkshire and Humberside arts board. Development of the arts in the regions is primarily a matter for each of the 10 regional arts boards working with the Arts Council of England.

Information Super-highway

25. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about his Department's involvement in developments for an information super-highway.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of National Heritage is working with other Departments, such as the DTI, on a number of initiatives in this area. The Department is involved in the work on the Global Information Society; is interested in the areas of "electronic libraries" and "electronic museums and galleries"; and is reviewing developments as part of its responsibility for broadcasting and media. It is examining service information delivery over the Internet.

Fringe Theatre

26. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the planned level of spending on fringe theatre in London in 1995–96; and what is the figure for the current year.

Mr. Dorrell: This is a matter for the Arts Council and the London arts board. I understand that, in allocating money, these funding bodies do not distinguish "fringe theatre" from other forms of theatre.

Cross-media Ownership

27. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to announce the conclusions of his review of the rules on cross-media ownership.

Mr. Dorrell: An announcement will be made once the Government have reached a view on the way forward.

Archaeological Sites, Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will assist the Yorkshire Dales national park authorities to preserve the remnants of Victorian lead mines in the Yorkshire dales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action his Department is taking to preserve 19th century industrial archaeological remains; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will take action to preserve the Old Gang smelt mills in Swaledale, north Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Old Gang smelt mill, Melbecks has been protected as a scheduled ancient monument since September 1978. For a number of years the Yorkshire Dales national park authority has been carrying out recording and consolidation works to the structure supported by grants from English Heritage, so far totalling £36,932. It is one of five mills in the Yorkshire dales which are scheduled, the others being Grinton Lead smelt fuel house and flue, Marrick lead smelt mill, Surrender smelt mill and lead cupola, flue and chimney at Grassington. Grants for essential repairs have been made or remedial action has been taken by English Heritage to ensure proper repair in respect of all of these structures in the last 10 years.

The Royal Commission on the historical monuments of England, together with English Heritage and the county and national park authorities, have since 1989 undertaken a major survey of archaeological sites throughout the dales. English Heritage is also currently carrying out a national survey of the remains of the lead mining industry which will lead to proposals for scheduling and listing an appropriate sample of nationally important remains. This is one of a number of surveys of the physical remains of the late 18th, 19th and 20th century industrial processes undertaken as part of the monuments protection programme which aims to evaluate all known archaeological remains in England.

Tourism

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what initiatives he is taking to promote tourism in the rural areas.

Mr. Dorrell: Grant in aid to the English tourist board is used to support a range of development and marketing programmes including programmes which benefit tourism in rural areas. Many of these are delivered by the regional tourist boards, which receive substantial funding from the English tourist board. Examples in the Yorkshire and Humberside region include the walking holidays in the Wolds initiative and, in the North York Moors national park, the regional routes initiative.

Rural tourism also benefits from the promotional activities of the British Tourist Authority, since the beauty of the countryside is a key element of Britain's appeal to overseas visitors.

Regional Orchestras

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement concerning his policy on regional orchestras and their funding.

Mr. Dorrell: The Arts Council and the BBC are responsible for formulating policy on regional orchestras. They are collaborating on a joint review of orchestral provision. Both bodies are awaiting the response to a discussion document that has been the subject of public consultation.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce his decision on the 1995–96 local government revenue settlement.

Mr. Redwood: I have given careful consideration to the representations I have received on the provisional settlement proposals for local authorities and police authorities in Wales, which I announced on 29 November, Official Report, column 59, and 1 December, Official Report, column 815. The Minister with responsibilities for local government in Wales, my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones), has met representatives of Dyfed Powys and North Wales police authorities, and I chaired a meeting of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance, at which settlement matters were discussed.

Having taken account of all representations, I remain of the view that my proposals provide local authorities with an adequate level of funding for 1995–96, given the low level of inflation and opportunities for improving efficiency. Local authorities will need to assess their budget priorities carefully, but my plans ask no more of them than is being required of central Government and other public sector organisations.

I have considered carefully the representations that I have received about my provisional settlement proposals for police authorities. In the light of those representations, I have decided to provide an additional £15.1 million in funding for Welsh police forces. This will bring the total available for police services in 1995–96 to £315.8 million. Of this, £156 million will be paid by the Home Secretary as police grant and I will provide £159.8 million as standard spending assessments. My plans clearly demonstrate the Government's determination to support the police and tackle crime. They provide the new police authorities with a strong financial base which will enable them to continue to provide a high standard of service to the communities they serve.

To take account of the additional funding I am making available for policing, I have decided to set total standard spending at £2,782.1 million and aggregate external finance at £2,466.0 million for 1995–96. The settlement will increase the level of resources available to local and police authorities by over £87 million compared with 1994–95.

Aggregate external finance will comprise £1,718.3 million in revenue support grant, £520 million in distributable non-domestic rates, and £227.7 million in specific and supplementary grants. My decisions are subject to approval by the House.

The total standard spending I have announced for 1995–96 represents an increase of 3.2 per cent. on 1994–95, including £124.4 million for care in the community. My plans mean that 89 per cent. of total local and police authority revenue expenditure in Wales would be met by central Government, and should ensure a reasonable level of council tax for local taxpayers.

I trust that local authorities will continue to budget prudently and play their part in restraining public expenditure.

I propose to lay the Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1995–96 before the House, for its approval, later this week.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are on waiting lists for council houses in (a) Wales and (b) Alyn and Deeside; and what steps he is taking to provide housing for them.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available for Wales on a consistent basis. Authorities compile their waiting lists in different ways and some are moving towards common waiting lists with housing associations. In its housing strategy and operational plan, Alyn and Deeside district council recorded 2,140 applicants on its general waiting list and 739 tenants on its transfer waiting list as at 1 April 1994. These figures represent a reduction of 24 per cent. on the previous year's. Authorities are encouraged to use their enabling role to secure housing to meet local needs and to make best use of their stock by for example reducing voids and under-occupation.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many empty council houses there are in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of empty council houses in Wales is published in table 6.9 of Welsh Housing Statistics No. 14, 1994, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Empty council houses represent 1.1 per cent. of total council housing stock. I look for further improvement.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in (a) Wales and (b) Alyn and Deeside were provided with council house tenancies in 1994.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of local authority dwellings let to new tenants is published annually in table 6.8 of "Welsh Housing Statistics", No. 14, 1994. A copy of the publication is in the Library of the House.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of households in Wales who lost their home through repossession because of mortgage arrears in the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1994, county courts in Wales made 1,485 mortgage possession orders together with 2,253 suspended orders, whereby the mortgagors are given an opportunity to clear their debts. Information is not recorded centrally on the number of cases in which mortgage possession orders led to warrants to have defendants evicted.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students are enrolled at each college of further education in Wales.

Mr. Richards: The number of students at each college of further education in Wales in 1993–94, the latest available year, is set out in the table.

Students at publicly funded Further Education Institutions in Wales in 1993–94 [1]

Institution	[2]Student number

[2] Student numbers include students on both higher and further education courses and for all modes of attendance.

Local Authority Employees

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of (a) men and (b) women who are employed by county boroughs and district councils in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of people employed by local authorities in Wales is compiled by the Local Government Management Board. It is not immediately available in the form requested, but I will write to the hon. Member when the figures are available and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Home Renovation Grants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in (a) Wales and (b) Alyn and Deeside received home renovation grants in 1994.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The numbers of completed home renovation grants made in the first nine months of 1994 are given in the table.

	Mandatory renovation grants	Discretionary renovation grants
Wales	4,585	318
Alyn and Deeside	61	2

Information for the last three months of 1994 is not yet available.

Prescribing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the percentage figures for (a) brand name and (b) generic prescribing for (i) general practitioner fundholders and (ii) non-general practitioner fundholders in each family health service authority in Wales for each of the past three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1995, c. 379-80]: The figure for South Glamorgan Fundholders, for October 1993 should have read 53.53.

Sewage Discharge Outfalls

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list those sewage discharge outfalls on Welsh tidal estuaries and the coastline which have (a) primary treatment, (b) secondary treatment and (c) tertiary treatment;

(2) if he will list those sewage discharge outfalls on Welsh tidal estuaries and the coastline which are planned for upgrading to (a) secondary treatment and (b) tertiary treatment.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Quarries

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will examine the implications for local environmental protection in Wales of the effect upon mineral planning authorities of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 in respect of the working of minerals in surface quarries; what representations he has received on this subject (a) from members of the public and (b) from local authorities; and if he will make a statement on quarrying policy.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since 1 January 1994, my right hon. Friend has received, in relation to those provisions of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 relevant to interim development order permissions, one representation from a local authority about the operation of those provisions, and one representation from a local authority and 13 representations from members of the public in respect of IDO registrations and appeals. My right hon. Friend is considering the response to consultation proposals on the reform of old mineral permissions grated between 1948 and 1981.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools in Wales are grant-maintained; and what is this figure expressed as a percentage of Welsh local education authority schools.

Mr. Richards: Sixteen and 0.8 per cent. respectively.

Trade Delegations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many trade delegations are expected by his Department in the forthcoming six months; where they are visiting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Trade delegations into the United Kingdom are hosted by appropriate trade associations and it is for these organisations to decide on a delegation's itinerary in conjunction with the overseas organiser. The Welsh Office is not involved in this process.

Students (Council Tax)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that students sharing private sector accommodation with non-students are not held liable for the unpaid council tax of such non-students.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I do not propose to change the rules on residents' joint and several liability for the payment of council tax. It is for the members of a household to determine how the council tax bill should be paid.

Student Grants

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average grant paid to students in higher education at constant prices in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The average net maintenance grant, excluding any payment for fees paid by local education authorities in Wales to mandatory award holders in the academic years 1988–89 to 1992–93, the latest year available, is as follows. Since 1990–91, eligible students have been able to apply for a student loan to supplement their grant; loans have increased the resources available to students for their living costs.

Average maintenance grants in constant prices [1] to holders of mandatory awards:

Wales: 1988–89 to 1992–93

Academic year	£
1988–89	1,830
1989–90	1,850
1990–91	1,740
1991–92	1,690
1992–93	1,690

[1] Based on the September retail prices index, excluding mortgage interest payments, at the beginning of each academic year.

Mineral Planning Authorities

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consider amending section 22 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 in order to assist mineral planning authorities in the exercise of their duties.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Section 22 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 provides for the registration of interim development order permissions—granted between July 1943 and July 1948—and the submission of schemes of operating and restoration for approval by the mineral planning authority. These measures ensure that the extent and terms of IDO permissions are known and that active sites are operated up to modern standards. We have no plans to amend this section of the act.

NHS Waiting Lists

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will carry out a study to determine the influence that private practice in the same unit or specialty has on the waiting list and waiting time for treatment in the NHS.

Mr. Richards: I have no plans at present for such study.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will implement a system which will routinely gather and analyse out-patient waiting time data in the NHS.

Mr. Richards: This already exists. The NHS provides information on a quarterly basis about the number of people waiting more than six months and one year for a first out-patient appointment, and this is published regularly by the Welsh Office.

Consultants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the definition of reasonable as used in deciding how many half-days a consultant may take off for private practice if he or she is full time or maximum part time in the NHS.

Mr. Richards: NHS consultants are able to undertake private work as well as NHS work under their national terms and conditions of service. Whole-time consultants may not earn more than 10 per cent. of their gross NHS earnings from private work. Maximum part-time practitioners can carry on private practice but with a salary reduced to 10/11 of that of a whole-time consultant. Consultants employed on NHS trust contracts may have different provisions.

Cardiff Bay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the contribution agreed on 11 May 1989 by Associated British Ports towards the costs of infrastructure in Cardiff bay; and if he will list such payments as have been paid or are anticipated.

Mr. Redwood: None. A development agreement between the corporation and Associated British Ports was signed in March 1991. There is no agreement requiring ABP to make payments to CBDC in respect of infrastructure, but under the terms of the agreement the company is required to carry out development on its land. The chief executive of Cardiff Bay development corporation will write to the hon. Member giving details of the investments which have been made to date.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of his consultations with the Cardiff Bay development corporation into the promotion of Cardiff as a media centre.

Mr. Redwood: I made it clear to the corporation in February 1994 that promotion of Cardiff as a media centre should have a high priority.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Sir David Attenborough concerning the implications of reduced budget allocations to the Countryside Council for Wales on the ability of the Government to meet their international obligations under (a) the bio-diversity convention of the Rio treaty, (b) the habitats and species directive and (c) the European Union NATURA 2000 programme and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have not received any representations from Sir David Attenborough, although I understand he did refer to the matter in a recent speech.

South Glamorgan Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the full membership of office holders on the board of the South Glamorgan training and enterprise council; if he will show in which way they met his criteria for TEC board membership; and on what date he approved their (a) membership and (b) any offices held.

Mr. Redwood: The following are members of the board of directors of South Glamorgan training and enterprise council;

P Rich (Chair): Managing Director, Allied Steel and Wire Holdings, plc.

J P Sainsbury (V Chair): Partner, Pannell Kerr Forster

R Helliwell: Group Director, William Cowlin and Son

R W Peterson: Chairman, Peterson Partnership

M Davies: Managing Director, VIP Advertising Photography

J Mclean: General Manager, Marks and Spencer

R Forster: Managing Director, Biomet Ltd

P Sheldon: Chief Executive, South Glamorgan TEC

M Goodyear: General Manager, Marriott hotel

Councillor R B Goodway: Leader, South Glamorgan county council

I Spence: Wales General Secretary, GMB Union

T Wilmore: Chief Executive, Barry College

Eligibility requirements for TEC board membership are that at least two thirds of the directors—exclusive of the chief executive of the TEC who is the sole executive director—must hold the office of chairman or chief executive of a company or top-level operational manager at local level of a company or senior partner of a professional partnership within, in each case, the private sector. The remaining directors are required to be chief executives or equivalent from education, economic development, trade unions, voluntary organisations or the public sector.

The directors of South Glamorgan TEC meet the above requirements and the chairman, Mr. Paul Rich, meets the additional requirement for chairing a TEC in that he is managing director of a large company of more than three years' standing.

As private companies, limited by guarantee, I do not approve appointments to the boards of TECs.

EMPLOYMENT

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now list the contractors to the South Thames TEC to whom letters of comfort have not been sent.

Mr. Paice: As the information is contained in a large list, I will write to the hon. Member with employer investment in people contractors who have been sent a letter of comfort and place a copy in the Library.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the Health and Safety Executive determined what part of the work of the field consultant groups was suitable for contracting out; and what factors made it possible to undertake this work separately from other duties at no extra cost to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive reviewed the range of work carried out by the field consultant groups to determine what part of the work was suitable for contracting out. An important factor was to identify what functions required the powers and discretion of an inspector. The process of tendering for the remaining functions will determine what level of savings can be achieved.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans exist for the Health and Safety Executive to cut clerical and administrative posts in the field operations division following the introduction of laptop computers for inspectorial staff.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive is now beginning the development of a project to equip field staff with portable computers and, as part of that development, will assess the scale of extra efficiencies which will be achieved.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of the Health and Safety Executive's staffing budget between 1 September 1993 and 1 September 1994.

Mr. Oppenheim: The amount spent on Health and Safety Executive staffing between 1 September 1993 and 1 September 1994 was £117.6 million.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work is currently done by the scientists who work within the Health and Safety Executive's field consultant groups; and if he will make a statement on the place of this work in the investigation of workplace ill health, accidents and incidents.

Mr. Oppenheim: Scientists in the Health and Safety Executive's field consultant groups are mainly concerned with chemical substance sampling and analysis, scientific measurements and surveys as a service to inspectors in HSE's field operations division who undertake the investigation of workplace ill health, accidents and incidents.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the Health and Safety Executive's professional and specialist staff have less than three years' service with the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Oppenheim: There are 1,857 professional and specialist staff in the Health and Safety Executive of whom 408 have less than three years service with HSE.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the Health and Safety Executive has found the need to consider an early retirement scheme for its specialists grades; how many posts it intends to lose by 1 April 1995; and how much money it expects to save on the payroll budget.

Mr. Oppenheim: The voluntary early retirement scheme for the Health and Safety Executive managed grades and scientists was introduced to help restructure HSE management. Eighty-five management posts will be lost by 1 April 1995 through this scheme.

The money from these posts will be used for a range of purposes including the recruitment of front-line inspectors. At this stage, it is impossible to predict what the net effect on payroll spend will be.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the total net savings in (a) costs and (b) staff years resulting from market-testing exercises in the Health and Safety Executive since April 1992.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive completed five market tests since April 1992. These have resulted in a net saving of 92 posts and a net cash saving of £560,000. The answer gives the number of posts saved rather than staff years as market tests are completed at various times in the year and the HSE does not record fractions of staff years.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what reviews of the Health and Safety Executive's national interest groups are currently under way; when these reviews expect to report; and when recommendations are likely to be implemented.

Mr. Oppenheim: A review of national interest groups in the Health and Safety Executive's field operations division began in autumn 1994. The review is examining the purpose and function of NIGs; their staffing and location and the allocation of industry or topic responsibilities between them. A report is due to be submitted to HSE senior management in July 1995. Any recommendations are likely to be implemented during the following two years.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what workload formulae are being used by the Health and Safety Executive and for what purposes; and if he will provide full details of how they were calculated.

Mr. Oppenheim: Workload formulae are used within the Health and Safety Executive as an aid to management judgments especially in deploying inspectors as between geographical areas, industrial sectors and types of risks.

Such formulae are used, for example, to take account of real and perceived risks in different sectors and to assess the relative priorities in inspections, technical and policy work. They are managerial tools to be employed with discretion and not fixed indicators, and I see no advantage in their publication.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff the Health and Safety Executive has lost, and expects to lose, as a result of public expenditure survey settlements in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1996–97.

Mr. Oppenheim: I am informed that the Health and Safety Executive made no changes to its staffing in 1993–94 because of the PES 1992 settlement, in which the Health and Safety Commission's bid for resources was met in full. The PES 1992 settlement provided for 4,661 staff in 1993–94. The PES 1993 settlement provided for 4,599 staff in 1994–95. Staffing levels for 1996–97 are currently being considered in the context of the forthcoming PES 1995 round.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what amounts of money the Health and Safety Executive has spent in employing consultants in relation to market-testing exercises since 1 April 1992.

Mr. Oppenheim: Since 1 April 1992, the Health and Safety Executive has spent a total of £199,000 on consultancy in relation to market-testing exercises.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current annual cost of employing scientists to work within the Health and Safety Executive's field consultant groups.

Mr. Oppenheim: The estimated current annual cost at 1994–95 prices to the Health and Safety Executive of employing scientists in its field consultant groups is £891,000.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has given to the Health and Safety Executive's director general on the subject of agency status for the Health and Safety Executive's health and safety laboratory.

Mr. Oppenhiem: I have written to the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission, on whose behalf the Health and Safety Executive acts, asking that work to make the health and safety laboratory an agency of the executive should be undertaken swiftly. The necessary work is in hand for the health and safety laboratory to become an agency from April 1995.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors employed in the Health and Safety Executive's field operations division have less than (a) three years' service and (b) five years' service for the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Oppenhiem: There are 914 inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive's field operation division. Of these inspectors, 153 have less than three years service and 336 less than five years' service in working for HSE.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work is undertaken by the specialist inspectors who work within the Health and Safety Executive's field consultant groups.

Mr. Oppenhiem: Specialist inspector work is regulatory in character and involves applying expert health and safety knowledge of engineering and occupational hygiene to inspection, accident and incident investigation, standard setting and enforcement.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the Health and Safety Executive's salary budget for each year since 1988–89; and what is the proposed figure for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97.

Mr. Oppenheim: The available information which relates to the civil service pay bill of the Health and Safety Executive is given in the table:

Year	Civil Service pay bill outturn £s millions
1988–89	70
1989–90	77
1990–91	86
1991–92	98
1992–93	112
1993–94	117

The final pay bill for 1994–95, and the pay bill for subsequent years, will depend among other things on the outcome of pay negotiations which have yet to be concluded.

Employment Medical Advisory Service

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many doctors the Health and Safety Executive plans to employ within the employment medical advisory service in 1995 and 1996.

Mr. Oppenheim: Plans for the staffing of the employment medical advisory service at 1 April 1995 were published in the Health and Safety Commission "Plan of Work 1994–95", which is available in the Library. Annexe 1, table 2 of the plan gives the figure of 90 staff for EMAS, of which 45 were doctors. The figure for 1 April 1996 will be set out in the Health and Safety Commission "Plan of Work 1995–96", due to be published in the early summer.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many nurses the Health and Safety Executive plans to employ within the employment medical advisory service in the years 1995 and 1996.

Mr. Oppenheim: Plans for the staffing of the employment medical advisory service at 1 April 1995 were published in the Health and Safety Commission "Plan of Work 1994–95", which is available in the Library. Annexe 1, table 2 of the plan gives the figure of 90 staff for EMAS, of which 45 were nurses. The figure for 1 April 1996 will be set out in the Health and Safety "Commission Plan of Work 1995–96", due to be published in the early summer.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposal he has to ensure that the training and enterprise councils swiftly conclude their contracts for the next financial year with AST training.

Mr. Paice: None. It is for individual training and enterprise councils to determine with whom they contract.

Health and Safety (Prosecutions)

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average fine imposed by magistrates courts as a consequence of prosecutions taken by the Health and Safety Executive under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Oppenheim: The provisional figure for average fines imposed in 1993–94 by magistrates courts following prosecutions taken by the field operations division inspectorates of the Health and Safety Executive is £1,874.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money was gathered in fines and costs, between 1 September 1993 and 1 September 1994 from cases taken by the Health and Safety Executive, as a result of the enforcement of health and safety law, in (a) magistrates courts and (b) Crown courts.

Mr. Oppenheim: Between 1 September 1993 and 31 August 1994, the Health and Safety Executive received a total of £818,162 in costs following prosecutions by HSE inspectorates. Of this £319,464 resulted from prosecutions taken in the Crown courts and £498,698 from magistrates courts. Information is not available on fines gathered as a result of prosecutions taken by HSE.

Work-related Illnesses

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives the Health and Safety Executive is currently taking to reduce the levels of occupational ill health.

Mr. Oppenheim: Much of the Health and Safety Executive's everyday activity, such as modernising the framework of health and safety law, inspection of workplaces, provision of advice and formal enforcement action is aimed at reducing occupational ill health. HSE is giving priority in 1994–95 to implementing a coherent programme of action based on the conclusions of its recent strategic review of the 10 main occupational health risks—toxic substances, biohazards, noise, vibration, ionising and non-ionising radiation, manual handling, upper limb disorders, sick building syndrome and stress. Action includes: obtaining better information on the scale and pattern of ill health; commissioning further research, for example on prevention techniques; and provision of practical guidance and publicity campaigns.

HSE is also now planning a major new campaign, "Good Health is Good Business", which will start in May and aims to encourage and help employers to act to manage health risks more effectively.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Health and Safety Executive's current estimate of the number of people whose health is affected by work activity.

Mr. Oppenheim: From the responses to a special set of questions in the 1990 labour force survey of 60,000 households, it can be estimated that in the 12 months prior to the survey 2.2 million people in England and Wales suffered from an illness which they believe had been caused or made worse by their work.

Construction Design and Management Regulations

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Health and Safety Commission first sent a draft of the Construction Design and Management Regulations to him; and what has been the reason for delay in their introduction.

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 24 January 1995, Official Report, column 184.

Focus Project

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current cost of the Health and Safety Executive's Focus project; what are the expected final costs; what was the original estimate for the cost of the project; and when it is expected to be fully implemented.

Mr. Oppenheim: The cost of the Focus project at 30 December 1994 was £6.221 million. The projected life cost is £9.758 million, compared with the original estimates of £10.026 million. The major part of the project is expected to be completed in late summer 1995. Further enhancements will be incorporated in the development of a project to equip staff with portable computers.

Staff Safety

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received regarding the safety of his Department's staff dealing with unemployment benefit claims, income support and the proposed jobseeker's allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 27 January 1995]: Representations on this issue have been made to the Employment Service central health committee, by its trade union members. Their views are being taken into account in a generic risk assessment of the effect of the proposed introduction of a jobseeker's allowance on the safety of people working in Employment Service local offices.

DEFENCE

UN Peacekeeping Force (Somalia)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to contribute to the operation to withdraw the UN peacekeeping force from Somalia.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom is contributing a Royal Navy ship to the UN operation to withdraw peacekeeping forces from Somalia. HMS Exeter will arrive in the area later this week and will operate as part of a task group led by the United States navy. A RN presence will continue to be available to the United Nations for this purpose until mid-March.

Bullying

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents involving allegations of bullying or brutality have been investigated in each of the armed forces in the last five years; how incidents were drawn to the attention of the authorities; and what was the result of the investigations.

Mr. Soames: Details of allegations of bullying or brutality which have been investigated in each of the armed forces in the last five years are not held in a readily available form. To obtain this information would require a search of records held by each ship and service establishment.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the representations he has received in the last two years regarding incidents of bullying in the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: No central record is maintained of representations regarding incidents of bullying in the armed forces and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what level in the armed forces investigations into complaints about bullying are held; what is the number of units at this level; and if his Department collates the information.

Mr. Soames: The level at which complaints of bullying are investigated by the services depends on the circumstances and seriousness of each case. Investigations may be undertaken at unit level or, in most cases, and always where a criminal offence is alleged, by the service police. Records are held centrally by the service police of all investigations undertaken by them.

Air Show (Bratislava)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1994, Official Report, column 907, what was the total number of RAF personnel present at the Bratislava airport display on 20 and 21 August 1994; and what payment was made by the organisers of the air show towards the costs of the outward and return transit flights by the aircraft from their bases to Slovakia.

Mr. Soames: Seventy-six RAF personnel were deployed to Bratislava for the whole or part of the display.

The costs of the outward flights were borne by my Department as the hours flown formed part of normal tasking. Fuel for the return flights was issued by the organisers without charge.

Mines, Firth of Clyde

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if all of the mines laid during recent mine-laying exercises in and nearby the Firth of Clyde have been recovered; if local fishermen have been made aware of the recovery programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Bad weather has delayed the recovery of exercise mines recently laid in and nearby the Firth of Clyde. Weather permitting, the mines will be recovered by mid-February. In accordance with normal procedures, local fishermen have been informed of planned recovery dates by means of a number of notices to fishermen.

"Competing for Quality"

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 109, if he will list those activities under the "Competing for Quality" programme for the period 1 April 1992 to 30 September 1994 which have been secured by (a) in-house bids and (b) private contractors; and if he will name the successful contractors.

Mr. Freeman: Listed are the activities which have been secured by (a) in-house bids and (b) private contractors, together with the names of the winning contractors, in the period April 1992 to September 1994.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Fatchett: To as the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of experiments involving animals at Ministry of Defence establishments in each year from 1989.

Mr. Freeman: Animal experiments are an essential but small part of my Department's research and development programme, and as such the costs of these experiments are not recorded separately.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 573, if he will identify the country of origin and commercial source of the rats, mice, guinea pigs, rabbits, sheep, goats, pigs, miniature pigs, marmosets and rhesus monkeys used in animal experiments at Ministry of Defence establishments; and if he will give the average cost of each animal by type.

Mr. Freeman: All experimental work carried out by the Department using animals is in accordance with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. Animals are used only when there is no acceptable alternative, and all the animals used are bred in the United Kingdom under conditions regulated by UK legislation. Animals are either bred on site, or purchased from suppliers at the prevailing commercial rate, and these costs are not separately recorded.

It is not in the public interest to disclose the identities of the specific suppliers.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State of Defence what consideration his Department has given to using alternatives to animal testing at Ministry of Defence establishments; how much is being spent on exploring these alternatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Freeman: All experimental work with animals at Ministry of Defence establishments is regulated by the Home Office under the conditions of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 and related legislation. Before any project involving animals is begun, a project licence must be granted by the Home Office. A critical part of the project licence application is a closely argued justification of the proposed use of animals considering the ethical and scientific issues. At each stage, the use of non-animal alternatives has to be considered and the licence is granted only where none is possible. In some cases, in vitro methods which do not use living animals are scientifically superior. Such methods have been developed by my Department, and the results of the research published in scientific literature. Costs are not separately identified and recorded.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will define the categories of experiments carried out on living animals at Ministry of Defence establishments in each year from 1989; if he will identify the animals involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Animal experiments are carried out within the overall categories as defined by the project licences which are issued in accordance with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The project licences currently in effect cover mild 7, moderate 15, substantial 4, and unclassified 1.

It would involve disproportionate cost to identify the animals involved and the categories of experiment in each year since 1989.

Equipment Exports (Human Rights)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 690–91, if he will list the equipment which he considers could be used to violate human rights.

Mr. Freeman: Part III, group 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 as amended is a list of those military, security and para-military goods and arms, ammunition and related material which require export licences. The possible use for human rights violations is taken into account when applications for export licences are considered.

Support Helicopters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what consideration he has made of the purchase of Chinook support helicopters for the RAF;

(2) how many support helicopters he expects to purchase to meet the RAF's requirements;

(3) when he expects to make a decision on the procurement of support helicopters for the Royal Air Force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As announced in the 1994 Statement on the Defence Estimates, we are considering the Boeing Chinook and Westland EH101 to meet our requirement for additional support helicopters. Price and performance data for the two aircraft have been received. Those data are currently being assessed. No decision has been taken as to how many helicopters or of what type to purchase. An announcement will be made as soon as our negotiations are complete.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his policy to possess a mixed fleet of utility support helicopters for the RAF; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We recognise the potential advantages of a mixed fleet. Price is also a key consideration. Negotiations with industry are still continuing. No decision has yet been made.

Training Exercises (Injuries)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces serving in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Royal Navy have been (i) killed and (ii) seriously injured while on training exercises (1) overseas and (2) in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: From the records available, it is not possible to differentiate between the seriousness of injuries. Numbers of service personnel killed and injured are as follows:

	RN		RAF		Army
	United Kingdom	Overseas	United Kingdom	Overseas	United Kingdom	Overseas
Killed
1989	1	—	3	—	6	13
1990	—	—	1	1	2	3
1991	1	—	—	—	4	4
1992	—	—	—	—	2	7
1993	2	4	—	—	1	1
Injured
1989	118	14	672	17	84	533
1990	90	3	636	12	106	376
1991	82	11	508	16	104	328
1992	88	18	381	7	51	117
1993	71	22	367	6	39	188

Notes:
1. The figures for the United Kingdom include Northern Ireland.
2. The figures for RN personnel injured in the United Kingdom include the north Atlantic.

Exports (Indonesia)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring of the levels of British exported military equipment is undertaken in Indonesia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add to the reply given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad), on 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 894.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 31 January 1995

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judicial Powers

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many times judges have used their power of arrest in cases of contempt of court in each of the last three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department does not collect data about arrests which are made under the Contempt of Court Act 1981. Such information for the last three years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and its accuracy could not be guaranteed.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There is no record that N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. has been involved in any privatisation programmes for the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As far as I am able to ascertain, no officials of the Lord Chancellor's Department met representatives of Ian Greer Associates on 26 January, either formally or informally, to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

TREASURY

Nirex

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor to the Exchequer what will be the effect on the public sector borrowing requirement of the expenditure on the Nirex rock characterisation facility.

Mr. Aitken: Nirex's estimate of the cost of constructing the rock characterisation facility is approximately £120 million at 1992 prices. This will be funded by Nirex's public sector shareholders, whose external financing requirements are included within the PSBR.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Sir George Young: The table lists the sales conducted by the Treasury in which N. M. Rothschild was appointed and the roles to which it was appointed. The fees paid to firms appointed within the privatisation programme are commercially confidential.

Public Expenditure Round

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the (a) exchange of letters between spending Departments and the Treasury, (b) official level bilateral meetings, (c) ministerial level bilateral meeting and (d) the EDX process—the Ministerial Committee on Public Expenditure—will take place during 1995 as part of the public expenditure round; and what part the representatives of local government will play in this public expenditure round.

Mr. Aitken: The detailed timetable for the 1995 public expenditure survey has not yet been set. The process starts in the spring, but Treasury and spending Departments are in regular contact throughout. Most of EDX's meetings take place in September and October.

Ministers from Departments with an interest in local government and their officials have regular discussions on service and expenditure issues with the local authority associations and individual authorities, and consider written representations from them. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and other interested Ministers meet the chairs of the local authority associations at the Central Council on Local Government Finance in July and October. Ministers take account of the views expressed by these means, along with those of other groups, in making public expenditure decisions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Howard: I will write to the hon. Member.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers employed in the Metropolitan police area have been sacked for sexual or racial discrimination in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: Sexual discrimination is not a specific disciplinary offence. One officer was dismissed in 1992 for discreditable conduct, following a series of allegations of sexual discrimination; there were no comparable cases in 1993 or 1994.

Racially discriminatory behaviour is an offence under paragraph 9 of schedule 1 to the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1985. No officers were dismissed on this ground in 1992, 1993 or 1994. From the information that has been collected, it is not possible to say whether an allegation of racially discriminatory behaviour may have been a contributory factor in some cases of dismissal on other grounds, such as discreditable conduct, misconduct towards a member of a police force, or abuse of authority.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the months of (a) October, (b) November and (c) December 1994 officers of the Metropolitan police have been unable to attend magistrates courts in order to give evidence against those charged with offences due to budget limitations of the force; and on how many occasions in each month the persons concerned were discharged and no further proceedings taken.

Mr. Maclean: None, in each case.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints of sexual or racial discrimination have been made against (a) policemen and (b) policewomen employed in the Metropolitan police area in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: The following figures refer to complaints for which investigations were completed. It is not possible to provide the information in the form requested during the year in question.

In 1992, 205 complaints of racially discriminating behaviour against Metropolitan police officers were investigated, and in 1993, 198 complaints. In some cases, the complaint may have involved more than one officer. It is not possible to identify the numbers of male and female officers involved.

In 1994, the latest figures available indicate that a total of 287 complaints of racially discriminating behaviour were the subject of completed investigations. These related to 315 officers, of whom 259 were male and 43 female. The sex of the remaining 13 officers has not been recorded.

Figures for complaints of sexually discriminating behaviour are not collected centrally.

Policing of Protests (Costs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what compensation is available from EEC funds for the policing costs of enforcing EEC regulations against the protests in the United Kingdom; and if he will request support from EEC funds for police action at British ports in respect of (a) live calf exports and (b) fishermen's protests.

Mr. Maclean: Law enforcement is an area where the Community rightly has no competence and there is therefore no provision in the Community budget for such expenditure.

Policing, Shoreham

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra funds he will be making available to the West Sussex police authority for the extra policing required at Shoreham port; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) on 19 January, Official Report, column 672.

Prison Sentences

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prison sentences given by the courts are of the statutory maximum.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Compensation Orders, Newcastle and Gateshead

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many compensation orders were made by (a) Gateshead magistrates court in 1993, (b) the Gateshead magistrates court in 1994, (c) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1993, (d) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1994, (e) the Newcastle Crown court in 1993 and (f) the Newcastle Crown court in 1994;

(2) what is the total value of compensation orders which remain unpaid made by (a) the Gateshead magistrates court in 1993, (b) the Gateshead magistrates court in 1994, (c) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1993, (d) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1994, (e) the Newcastle Crown court in 1993 and (f) the Newcastle Crown court in 1994;

(3) what was the total value of compensation orders made by (a) the Gateshead magistrates court in 1993, (b) the Gateshead magistrates court in 1994, (c) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1993, (d) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1994, (e) the Newcastle Crown court in 1993 and (f) the Newcastle Crown court in 1994;

(4) how many compensation orders remain unpaid made by (a) the Gateshead magistrates court in 1993, (b) the Gateshead magistrates court in 1994, (c) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1993, (d) the Central Newcastle magistrates court in 1994, (e) the Newcastle Crown court in 1993 and (f) the Newcastle Crown court in 1994.

Mr. Mclean: Information held centrally, which is given in the table, shows the number of compensation orders issued and the value of the amounts made for 1992 and 1993—the latest available figures. 1994 data will not be available until the autumn.

Information is not collected centrally on the number and amounts of compensation orders that remain unpaid. However, for further information I would refer the hon. Member to the footnotes of the table given in my reply on 17 January, column 377.

Compensation order data for Gateshead and Newcastle magistrates courts and Newcastle Crown court 1992 and 1993

Court/Year	Number of compensation orders	Amount issues £
Gateshead Magistrates court
1992	512	65,400
1993	467	63,600
Newcastle Magistrates court
1992	1,094	125,600
1993	1,078	124,000
Newcastle Crown court
1992	196	90,000
1993	136	99,700

Disabled People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the Departments and agencies for which he has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document "Focus on Ability".

Mr. Howard: On 25 January 1995, 229 members of staff in the Home Office and its agencies were registered disabled, representing 0.5 per cent. of all staff; a further 146—0.13 per cent. of staff—have declared themselves as disabled, but have not registered as such. There are likely to be others who have not responded to the Department's voluntary surveys.

Mr. Daya Pal Singh

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision is going to be made on the asylum application first lodged in October 1986 by Mr. Daya Pal Singh, ref: IMG/94 330/972/1(S); when Mr. Singh was last interviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Mr. Singh was last interviewed on 19 October 1994 and produced a number of additional documents which required translation before the application could be fully and properly considered. We expect to make a decision shortly. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as Mr. Singh has been notified.

National Missing Persons Bureau

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children under the age of 16 years have been registered with the National Missing Persons Bureau since its opening.

Mr. Maclean: Information is not held in the form requested. From the opening of the bureau on 18 March 1994 to 31 December 1994, a total of 2,363 persons under the age of 18 years were reported missing. Of these, 115 were still missing at 31 December.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. Howard: No work on a privatisation programme has been undertaken for the Home Office by N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Mahwood Hussein Mettan

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column, 695, relating to the papers relating to Mahmood Mettan's execution at Cardiff gaol in 1952, if he will give further consideration to the explanation given for the routine destruction of the relevant papers in 1986, having regard to the discovery of the papers in the Public Record Office; and if he will place a copy of those papers in the Library;

(2) if he will supply a copy of all or part of the papers relating to the trial and execution of Mahmood Mattan in 1952 to solicitors acting on the family's behalf in pursuit of their request for a posthumous pardon.

Mr. Howard: No. Further inquiries within my Department and the Public Record Office have confirmed the destruction of Home Office records of this case.

I understand that copies of documents from the Lord Chancellor's Department file at the Public Record Office were sent to the solicitors acting for Mr. Mattan's widow in September 1994.

Betting

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the law on betting licensing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have today issued a consultation document on possible changes to the law on betting permits and licences and track betting licences in Great Britain.

Subject to the consultation, the Government intend to make an order under section 1 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 to implement these changes. It is hoped to bring the draft order before Parliament in spring 1995.

The purpose of the consultation document is to give details of the proposed changes and to seek the views of interested parties. Briefly, it is proposed to:

extend the duration of bookmakers permits and betting office licences from one year to three years, simplify the procedure for renewal applications, and introduce a renewal procedure for the licensing of betting tracks.

Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Library.

Electro-shock Equipment

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 24 January,

Official Report, column 152, when a company was last granted authority specifically to possess electric shock weapons; if he will name the company or companies involved; and for how long that permission was given.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 30 January 1995]: No company has been granted authority specifically to possess electric shock weapons in the last three years. Information about the granting of authority for that purpose in earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Welsh: To aks the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what further steps he is taking to review the operation of guidelines relating to the manufacture, marketing and supply of (a) electro-shock weapons and (b) weapons of torture; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made that guidelines relating to the manufacture, marketing and supply of (a) electro-shock weapons and (b) instruments of torture are being fully complied with; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 30 January 1995]: Electric shock weapons are prohibited by section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968, and cannot be possessed, manufactured or sold without the authority of the Secretary of State. The procedures for granting or refusing authority to possess prohibited weapons are kept under regular review.

It is not practicable to control trade in the wide range of goods which could be misused for the purposes of torture. The Government are willing to look at any tangible evidence of British companies knowingly involved in supplying materials and expertise for the purposes of repression.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Mr. Newton: None.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ian Henderson

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the capacities in which Mr. Ian Henderson, currently head of Bahrain's security and intelligence services, has been employed by Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Ian Henderson served in the colonial police service in Kenya from 1948 until Kenyan independence in 1963. In that capacity, he was an employee of Her Majesty's overseas civil service.

Standard Chartered Bank

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met the chairman of the Standard Chartered bank; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The chairman of the Standard Chartered bank was present at a lunch given in honour of the Indian Prime Minister on 14 March 1994.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met the Prime Minister of India; and if he discussed the position of the Standard Chartered bank.

The Prime Minister: I last met the Prime Minister of India when he visited the United Kingdom from 13 to 16 March 1994. We did not discuss the Standard Chartered bank.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 31 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Parliamentary Salaries (Deductions)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will support a proposal that all remuneration received by hon. Members for parliamentary duties from outside sources should be deducted from parliamentary salary in the same way that deductions are made from income support.

The Prime Minister: Hon. Members are entitled to the parliamentary salary as the remuneration payable to them as Members of this House. There are well-established procedures for determining this.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

The Prime Minister: None.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his letter of 25 January, whether in order to honour Her Majesty's Government's commitment in the letter to obtain justice for all the victims of the Lockerbie crime, he will discuss with Chancellor Kohl the possibility of the Scottish police interviewing Hafey Dalkamoni before such time as he is released.

The Prime Minister: There is no need for me to have such a discussion with Chancellor Kohl. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has repeatedly stated that he cannot make public details of what inquiries, including interviews, have been or may be carried out in this case. It would be a matter for him to request legal assistance from the competent German authorities, if the Scottish police and Crown Office did indeed consider it necessary for any one in Germany to be interviewed or re-interviewed.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

The Prime Minister: None.

DEFENCE

Bosnia

14. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the present position in respect of the deployment of UN forces in and around Tuzla in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Rifkind: The headquarters of UNPROFOR's sector north-east is located in Tuzla and a mechanised infantry battalion of some 1,200 Swedish and Danish soldiers, together with a Jordanian mortar-locating unit, are based in and around the town.

Future Large Aircraft

15. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the development of the future large aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have discussed the future large aircraft with both British Aerospace and my French and German counterparts. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 16 December, Official Report, column 823, we will rejoin the FLA programme at the end of the feasibility phase provided that it is managed on a commercial basis under the umbrella of the Airbus consortium. Resources will need to be available and our requirements on price and performance must also be met. A programme of work with our partners is in progress.

17. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the prospect of his Department purchasing the future large aircraft consequent upon his decision to purchase Lockheed Hercules aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 16 December, Official Report, column 823, we will rejoin the FLA programme at the end of the feasibility phase provided that it is managed on a commercial basis under the umbrella of the Airbus consortium. Resources will need to be available and our requirements on price and performance must also be met. A programme of work with our partners is in progress.

Married Quarters Housing Stock

16. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how his Department's budget has been affected by the lack of sales of married quarters housing stock.

Mr. Soames: The defence budget continues to assume a substantial receipt from the sale of married quarters in Great Britain. Although the original plans for a housing trust have been dropped, other options are being pursued.

Inhumane Weapons Convention

18. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what new proposals he has to add new weapons to the inhumane weapons convention.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom has not proposed to add any weapons to the scope of the UN weaponry convention, but we are considering carefully those proposals made by others. Our main aim remains to strengthen restrictions on the use of anti-personnel land mines.

Attack Helicopters

19. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision on the purchase of attack helicopters for the RAF.

Mr. Freeman: Evaluation of the bids received under the attack helicopter competition is in progress and we expect to make a decision on the purchase of this equipment for use by the Army Air Corps later in the year. I am, of course, conscious of the importance to industry of an early decision.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will define the threat which he expects a new attack helicopter to meet or match.

Mr. Freeman: British defence policy, in common with that of our allies, is no longer based upon defending against a single specific threat or threats. Instead, we aim to provide forces with a flexible capability to undertake a range of operations, from general war to peace support operations, and to respond to the changing demands which may be placed upon them in the future. However, a fundamental part of our defence policy remains the ability of our armed forces to defend themselves against tanks and other armoured fighting vehicles.

We plan to procure an attack helicopter to replace Lynx in the anti-tank role for the early part of the next century. Its primary requirement will be to defeat any present and envisaged main battle tank which may be deployed against our armed forces. It will also be required to have a self-defence capability against enemy helicopters and ground to air threats.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review of capability requirements in respect of a new attack helicopter he has carried out to underpin the purchase together with what review of alternative investments he has made.

Mr. Freeman: We have a continuing requirement for a capability to engage in high-intensity conflict, including operations against armoured forces. A series of studies has been conducted to examine the relative cost and effectiveness of various weapon systems with an anti-tank capability. These included multiple-launched rocket systems, ground-launched missile systems, tanks, mines, fixed-wing aircraft and attack helicopters. The studies have shown that the most cost-effective mix of weapons to meet our anti-tank requirement entails the procurement of an attack helicopter.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to decide which attack helicopter to purchase; from which aircraft he intends to choose; what will be the relevant factors in order of importance which will guide his choice; how many he intends to purchase together with the estimated total cost; whether the alternatives have flown or expect to fly; and if he will make it his policy that the choice of machine will not be dominated by considerations of domestic employment.

Mr. Freeman: We expect to make a decision on the purchase of an attack helicopter later in the year. Bids were received from: Agusta—A129; Atlas Aviation—Rooivalk; Boeing-Sikorsky—Comanche; BAe/Eurocopter—Tiger; GEC/Bell-Textron—Cobra Venom; and Westland/McDonnell Douglas—Apache AH64/D. Tender assessment is based on four main parameters: operational effectiveness; life cycle costs; risk; and proposals for United Kingdom industrial participation. The precise number of helicopters to be procured will depend on affordability and on the solution chosen and, therefore, has yet to be determined. The estimated total cost of the programme is over £2 billion. Current versions of all the aircraft except Comanche have flown. It is our intention to equip the Army with the most cost-effective solution which fully meets its requirements. To that end, each bid will be considered on its merits.

Armed Forces (Injuries)

20. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have been disabled as a result of injury in the armed forces in each of the last three years.

Mr. Soames: There are varying degrees of disablement, not all of which are serious enough to cause the service man or woman to be medically discharged. Statistics are not maintained centrally of disabilities which do not result in discharge.

Falkland Islands

21. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Soames: The British Government are committed to defending the right of the Falkland Islanders to determine their own future. As long as Argentina maintains its claim to the Falkland Islands, the United Kingdom will keep forces there to deter, and if necessary counter, any possible aggression. Force levels are kept under review and, if the need arises, can be reinforced at very short notice using the airfield at Mount Pleasant.

Rescue Co-ordination

22. Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of rescue co-ordination facilities.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 January, Official Report, column 547.

European Army

23. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for a European army.

Mr. Soames: We have no plans for the creation of a European army.

Former Service Personnel

24. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to make it his policy to make a single Minister responsible for all ex-service men's affairs.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence is usually responsible for those issues relating to former service personnel with which the Department deals directly. The Government do not, however, propose to appoint a single Minister to co-ordinate matters concerning the ex-service community across the range of Government; I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 22 November 1994, Official Report, columns 461–62.

Bombs, Llandwrog Airfield

25. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made in the investigation being undertaken by his Department into potentially dangerous German chemical bombs which were buried at Llandwrog airfield, near Dinas Dinlle in Gwynedd after the second world war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State wrote to the hon. Member on 24 January.

Fishery Protection

26. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the adequacy of naval forces to carry out fishery protection duties.

Mr. Soames: The Royal Navy's Fishery Protection Squadron comprises nine vessels. The requirements for the provision of fishery protection services are reviewed annually with the fisheries Department. During this financial year, 1994–95, the squadron is contracted to provide these Departments with some 1,380 patrol days dedicated to fisheries work.

Aircraft Safety

27. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he had made of the current arrangements governing the separation of civilian helicopter and fixed-wing aircraft from low-flying military jets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department has a wide range of measures in place to minimise the risk of confliction between civil and military aircraft. These are kept under continuous review in consultation with the Civil Aviation Authority and civilian aircraft operators as part of an on-going programme of work to enhance flight safety.

Training Links

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to develop links between trainees in the armed services and other training initiatives outside the forces.

Mr. Soames: Whenever it is cost-effective and beneficial to do so, my Department is seeking to extend the close links which it already has with external training and education bodies and institutions. Unless there are operational reasons for retaining the work in-house, it is our aim to put as much of our training out to the private sector as is possible and draw on the considerable expertise which is available.

Fuel Servicing Trucks

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number, manufacturer, capacity and year of production of fuel servicing trucks currently held by (i) the RAF, (ii) the Royal Marines, (iii) the Army Air Corps and (iv) the Fleet Air Arm; what consideration he has given to (a) replacement of these vehicles and (b) leasing of commercial equipment; what factors led to the proposal to issue tenders for 12 fuel servicing trucks for the Royal Marines under tender No. SMC 31ARAF U15; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Service	Quantity	Capacity	Year of Manufacture	Manufacturer
Royal Air Force	176	18000 ltr	1987–1993	AEC,
	166	13000 ltr	1970–1982	Leyland/DAF,
	54	4500 ltr (Tactical)	1980–1989	Bedford,
	83	4500 ltr	1981–1991	Scammell
Royal Marines	12	9000 ltr	1987	Bedford
Army Air Corps	122	4500 ltr	1965–1985	Bedford
	6	4500 ltr	1987–1988	Leyland
Fleet Air Arm	33	9000 ltr	1988–1993	Leyland
	20	18000 ltr	1990	Leyland

The majority of fuel servicing vehicles in service will be considered for refurbishment or replacement—either by purchase of lease—over the next 10 years. The leasing of equipment is routinely considered as part of the replacement decision. In general, however, there is no commercial equipment which meets the specific requirements for military aircraft refuellers, and the leasing of purpose-built refuellers has been shown to be uneconomic.

The operational requirements for 12 fuel servicing trucks for the Royal Marines commando operations and support cell dictates that vehicles must be of a specialised type, particularly in respect of their ability to operate in such extremes of climate as the Arctic and the Gulf. Furthermore, the operational requirement includes provision of a high degree of corrosion protection. The specialist nature of these vehicles ruled out leasing of commercially available types, and the high cost of refurbishment of existing vehicles precluded that option. Purchase was assessed to be the most economic means of meeting this operational requirement.

Training (Sudanese Students)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) of 29 November 1994, Official Report, column 618, how many foreign students from Sudan who have visited the United Kingdom for military training, were sponsored (a) by the Sudanese Government or (b) by the rebel forces in that country.

Mr. Soames: The details of training provided for overseas military personnel, including numbers, are not normally disclosed as they are confidential between Governments. The inclusion of Sudan in the answer I gave the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 29 November 1994, Official Report, column 618, referred to two civilians who attended aviation medicine courses. Both students were sponsored by the Government of Sudan.

Tornado

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Tornado mid-life update will be complete.

Mr. Freeman: Delivery of the last aircraft to the upgraded standard is expected about the end of 2002.

Employees, Salisbury

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by establishment, including agencies, the numbers of (a) military and (b) civilian employees of his Department in the Salisbury constituency in (i) 1990, (ii) 1994 and (iii) an estimate for 1998.

Mr. Soames: It is not our normal policy to divulge the number of employees at individual Ministry of Defence establishments. Although my Department keeps no record of military and civilian employees by parliamentary constituency, we are able to provide the numbers of service and civilian personnel within the Salisbury local authority area. At 1 July 1990, there were 5,187 service and 3,765 full-time equivalent civilian personnel employed in the local authority area. The corresponding figures for 1 July 1994 were 4,923 service and 3,920 civilian personnel. It is too early to make accurate estimates of the corresponding figures for 1998.

Mess Costs

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated cost of messing for United Kingdom armed forces during the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: During the financial year 1993–94, some £142 million, inclusive of VAT, was spent feeding regular and reserve armed forces personnel in the United Kingdom and overseas. As well as food served in messes, this figure also includes operational ration packs and allowances paid to personnel who were not able to eat in messes owing to the nature of their duties.

Personnel (Civil Rights)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether service men and women and their families enjoy the same rights as other citizens to make representations during public consultations and public inquiries and to make complaints under the citizens charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The families of service personnel enjoy the same rights as other citizens to make representations during public consultations and public inquiries and to make complaints under the citizens charter. The same rights apply to service personnel provided that the impartiality of the armed forces is not compromised, and that such representations do not involve the disclosure, without permission, of information obtained in the course of their official duties.

Vehicles

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vehicles are owned by his Department for use by (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the Army and (c) the Royal Air Force and issued with (i) civil vehicle registration marks and (ii) service vehicle registration marks by the Directorate General (Supplies and Transport (Naval)) for the Royal Navy and by the Directorate of Supply Management (Army) for the Army and for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Soames: My Department owns 6,225 vehicles for use by the Royal Navy, 87,238 for use by the Army and 151,816 for use by the Royal Air Force. These figures include both operational and administrative vehicle types.

Both service and civilian vehicle registration marks are issued by the Army on behalf of all three services. Of the 19,279 vehicles owned, 11,365 show civilian registration markings; the remainder, service.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of defence nuclear material are stored in south Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The only nuclear material stored in south Wales is depleted uranium at the atomic weapons establishment, Cardiff.

Although it has not been the practice of this or previous Governments to reveal quantities of nuclear material stored at the AWE sites, in accordance with our policy of greater openness, my Department is seeking to revoke this restriction in respect of depleted uranium.

Details of the depleted uranium wastes arising at and discharged from AWE Cardiff are already in the public domain.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, to the hon. Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr Butler), Official Report, column 751, what are the principal details of the decision-making process relating to the decommissioning and subsequent disposal of the site of the atomic weapons establishment, Llanishen, Cardiff; what consultations he has had with the management of the Atomic Weapons Establishment in relation to this decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We are prepared to consider any proposal for the future use of the AWE Cardiff site. If no such acceptable proposal is received, and if there is no alternative defence use which arises in the period before then, the site will close in 1997 as soon as work on Trident components is completed. These proposals have been developed in close consultation between Hunting-BRAE Ltd. and the MOD.

The Ministry of Defence will then be responsible for the immediate decommissioning of the site and it will be disposed of in the normal way.

There is no statutory requirement fully to restore land offered for sale, but it is my Department's policy to seek to identify instances of contamination on sites allocated for disposal. This information is made available to prospective purchasers and taken into account in agreeing the sale price. Decontamination work is generally limited to the removal of ordnance and other contaminants such as explosives, radioactive and microbiological materials.

Sea King Helicopters

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Sea King helicopters will be in the search and rescue fleet in September 1996.

Mr. Soames: On present plans, there will be 25 RAF Sea King helicopters in the search and rescue role in September 1996. This includes two RAF Sea Kings based in the Falkland Islands. No Royal Navy Sea Kings are dedicated to search and rescue.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their client's interests.

Mr. Freeman: To the best of my knowledge, no officials from my Department met representatives of Ian Greer Associates on 26 January 1995 to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests, either formally or informally.

European Integration

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Britain's involvement in greater European defence integration.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom is fully involved in efforts to develop the Western European Union as the means to strengthen the European pillar of NATO and as the defence component of the European Union.

Army Base Repair Organisation

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he can report on the outcome of the consultation process for the Army Base Repair Organisation, Old Dalby.

Mr. Freeman: Following my 27 October 1994 announcement, Official Report, column 732, of plans to withdraw MOD activity from the Army Base Repair Organisation workshop at Old Dalby and to change the agency's market-testing programme to include tests for base and district workshops only after such reorganisation, I have received a wide range of comments from a number of MPs and local authorities. In addition, the trade union representatives of staff at the workshop have submitted detailed comments on the plans and provided counter-proposals with a view to continuing operations at the site.

The formal consultation period ended on 23 December. Since then, a detailed evaluation of the comments received and, in particular, the proposals from the workshop has been undertaken. In parallel, I have taken the opportunity to visit the workshop to understand better the local impact. I have also had discussions with representatives from the Donnington workshop, which would import the bulk of the work from Old Dalby.

As a result of the consultation period, changes have been made to assumptions used in the analysis of various options for the future of Old Dalby.

Having now considered all of the proposals, counter-proposals and their implications, I am convinced that the only viable option is to proceed with the withdrawal of MOD activity from the workshop and to implement the restructured market-testing programme which I announced on 27 October. None of the suggestions or counter-proposals resulting from the consultation process can deliver the necessary restructuring or offer of an equivalent level of savings to the taxpayer while preserving service to the Army. Any attempt to maintain MOD activity at the Old Dalby workshop would result in the Army continuing to have excess capacity beyond all foreseeable requirements. The resultant inefficiencies would inevitably be reflected in the costs passed on to the Army and ultimately to the taxpayer. Excess capacity would also disadvantage the agency teams in their attempts to prepare for the forthcoming market-testing process and could undermine their chances of making most cost-effective use of the facilities.

The final version of the analysis undertaken changed the net benefit of withdrawal from Old Dalby rather than Donnington, but did not change the preference for withdrawing from the former. I am accordingly instructing the agency to proceed with planning for the withdrawal of MOD work from the Old Dalby workshop. I must emphasise, however, that I recognise the skill and success of the Old Dalby work force and their interest in continuing to undertake ABRO work. Prior to the implementation of the planned move of MOD work later this year, I have asked that, for each discrete package of work at the Old Dalby workshop, an evaluation be undertaken to ascertain whether these should be placed with the private sector, using either their own facilities or by taking over the workshop facilities at Old Dalby, or with other MOD units. Any decision to place work with such facilities must, however, show an improvement over the savings which would be achieved by placing such work at ABRO Donnington. No irrevocable action will be taken by ABRO until at least July 1995 which would prevent the successful placement of such packages of work elsewhere than Donnington.

Representations made have clearly identified the potential effects of these changes on the local community and economy. Given that my Department is no longer able to make effective use of the modern, high-technology facilities at the site, every effort will be made to encourage the private sector to put forward innovative proposals for alternative uses which can capitalise on the skills and expertise of the work force. My Department intends to work closely on this with the local authorities and other employers in the area. An early start will be made to obtain appropriate advice within and outside the MOD to market the skills of the work force and the existing facilities for alternative private sector usage in parallel with the cost evaluation of the individual work packages referred to.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by them on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. Freeman: N. M. Rothschild and Sons provided advice to my Department in respect of the privatisation of Royal Ordnance, which was achieved in 1986 and 1987. The fees paid to firms appointed within the privatisation programme are commercially confidential.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he is taking in the current review of pay and grading in the Planning Inspectorate executive agency to ensure that he meets the requirement set out in the first report to him of the advisory panel on standards for the Planning Inspectorate executive agency in respect of the need for planning inspectors to be of the highest quality and drawn from a variety of appropriate professional backgrounds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many person-days of work were, or are planned to be carried out by (a) contract inspectors and (b) all consultant inspectors in the Planning Inspectorate executive agency in each year from 1993 to 1996; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many staff in the Planning Inspectorate executive agency he expects will be given early retirement (a) in 1995 and (b) in 1996; from what professional planning inspector or other grades they will be drawn; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have delegated responsibility for all these matters to the Planning Inspectorate executive agency. I have therefore asked Mr. Chris Shepley, the agency's chief executive, to reply.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 26 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to provide the replies to your Parliamentary Questions about:

the Planning Inspectorate's pay and grading review (PQ/903/94/95); work carried out by the Inspectorate's contract and consultant Inspectors (PQ/904/94/95); the number of staff expected to take early retirement in 1995 and 1996 (PQ/907/94/95); as these are all matters which have been delegated to the Executive Agency.

(903)

The purpose of our pay and grading review is to ensure that all staff are properly rewarded for their skills and their contributions to the work of the Agency. It is my intention to ensure the Agency will continue to employ Planning Inspectors of the highest quality and of appropriate backgrounds to meet its needs.

(904)

On the question of work carried out by contract and consultant Inspectors, records are not kept in a form that allows us to find the information in the precise form you request. The figures given below are estimates based on our financial records and include not only days employed on casework but also attendance at the office for training, etc.

	Contract Inspector days	Consultant Inspector days
1993–94	12,800	11,200
1994–95 (forecast)	11,100	8,750

The use we make of these resources in 1995–96 will depend on the financial allocation we receive and the targets we are set for the coming year.

(907)

We expect two Inspectors to leave the Agency in 1995 following approval of their applications under our 1994 Voluntary Early Retirement scheme. There may also be departures following applications for early retirement on medical grounds. Currently we have no plans to run any further early retirement schemes. No staff have been asked to leave the Agency.

Council Houses

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a league table of councils' efficiency in letting council houses.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: On 11 January, I said, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie), Official Report, column 134, that I was placing in the Library a list of local authorities ranked on the basis of numbers of management vacants as at 1 April 1994.

The Audit Commission for Local Authorities in England and Wales requires local authorities to publish information annually about the number and percentage of dwellings that are empty and the average time taken to relet dwellings available for letting or awaiting minor repairs. The commission will publish comparative data for 1993-1994 at the end of March this year.

Business Rates

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against business rates increases are outstanding at valuation offices in (a) Lancashire and (b) England.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Appeals may be made against the entries in the non-domestic rating list for a variety of reasons. As at 31 December 1994, there were 8,788 appeals outstanding in the offices which cover Lancashire and 293,644 in total in England. Only a small proportion of these will have resulted from an increase in the rateable value of a particular hereditament, and these figures are not collected separately.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail in the form of a table similar to that provided on 1 November 1994 to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-West, (Mr. Butcher) Official Report, columns 1005–6, showing the estimated increase or decrease in business rate bills for properties in each region in England between 1994–95 and 1995–96 as a result of the 1995 revaluation, in the absence of transitional relief.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I am placing this information in the Library of the House.

Common Land

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent consultations he has undertaken concerning common land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Over the last 18 months, officials of the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office have held informal discussions with the major bodies concerned with common land. Those discussions confirmed the Government's view that there was a need to investigate practical ways in which improvements in both the registration process and the management of common land might be achieved. Officials have since been looking at what needs to be done to achieve those objectives, and I hope to report our conclusions to the House shortly.

Footpaths

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent or grant aided, in each of the last three years for which figures are available, on the repair of eroded footpaths by the Countryside Commission for England.

Mr. Atkins: Repair of the surface of footpaths is the legal responsibility of the highway authority, the landowner or the occupier, depending on the cause of the damage to the path surface. The Countryside Commission does not contribute grant aid towards this statutory duty, except in the case of national trails.

In the last three years, the commission has spent the following on the surface restoration of trails:

Year	£
1991–92	700,000
1992–93	1,000,000
1993–94	850,000

These sums were spent mainly on restoring paths crossing peat in upland area, particularly the Cleveland and Pennine ways.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the areas in Great Britain most affected by the erosion of footpaths.

Mr. Atkins: In 1993–94, the Countryside Commission conducted a sample public rights of way condition survey in England. Walkers found that only 14 out of 11,847 links—a section of path between two junctions—surveyed were "impassable/unusable" on account of erosion. Some 103 links were "impassable/unusable" because they were muddy, boggy or flooded, but the causes for this will be varied. The full results of the survey are due to be published in the summer.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful bids for moneys from the single regeneration budget that exceeded in their submissions the recommended number of pages set out in the Department's bidding guidance; and if he will specify (i) the numbers of pages and (ii) the length of any appendices.

Mr. Curry: Guidance on the preparation of bids for single regeneration budget funding was contained in annexe B of the SRB bidding guidance issued in April 1994, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Access to the 469 individual bids, plus supporting material, is available from the relevant Government office for the region. Copies of individual bids are available at a charge. Information about the numbers of pages and length of appendices of bids is not held centrally, and could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to require local authorities and other bodies submitting second round bids for moneys from the single regeneration budget to indicate the cost or preparing the submission, the number of staff allocated to its preparation and the number of person hours involved.

Mr. Curry: No.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful bids for moneys from the single regeneration budget were (i) thematic in nature covering the entire area of the local authority and (ii) for a small area covering a discrete part of the local authority.

Mr. Curry: Guidance on the area coverage of bids for single regeneration budget resources was set out in paragraphs 15 to 25, annexe A and annexe B of the SRB bidding guidance issued in April 1994, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Information on the thematic coverage of bids by reference to geographical area is not held centrally. Of the 201 successful bids under the first bidding round, about 35 per cent. related to a small area—under 25,000 population—about 29 per cent. related to a local authority district, about 19 per cent. related to an area greater than a local authority district, about 10 per cent were county-wide and about 7 per cent. were region-wide. These figures are subject to the final agreement of delivery plans between the individual SRB partnerships and the Government offices for the regions.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 25 January, Official Report, column 206, if he will list the five local authorities which made unsuccessful bids for single regeneration budget moneys and the relevant regional offices.

Mr. Curry: The five local authorities are Cleethorpes, Great Grimsby, Halton, Nottingham and Pendle.

Local Authorities (Internal Markets)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Government policy with regard to internal markets for local authorities.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government welcome the focus on the efficient delivery of cost-effective services which stems from the creation of an internal market for local authority services. From 1995–96, local authorities will be required to prepare and publish a statement of support service costs, setting out the full cost of support services. Making costs transparent through the framework of this statement will further stimulate the development of internal markets.

Local Government, London

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the non-collection of service charges on ex-local authority properties in Westminster.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Representations have been received from Councillor Andrew Dismore, the leader of the opposition, Westminster city council.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the future of local government in London; and what plans he has for a London-wide elected authority.

Sir Paul Beresford: Londoners' responses to the consultation paper "London: Making the Best Better", published in November 1993, showed little support for a London-wide elected authority. I am unaware of any formal representations made since then. The Government have no plans for an additional elected authority for London.

Cabinet Sub-Committee for London

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will now make it his practice to give details of the agenda of meetings of the Cabinet Sub-Committee for London;

(2) if he will now make it his practice to give dates of the meetings of the Cabinet Sub-Committee.

Sir Paul Beresford: I do not propose to give details of the timing of meetings or the topics discussed by the Cabinet Sub-Committee for London. The Government will continue to make their decisions known to Parliament and the public in the usual ways.

Licensed Premises

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of licensed premises have smoking free areas; and what studies his Department is conducting into the benefits of such areas.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has no information on the numbers of licensed premises with smoking free areas. The benefits of smoking-free areas in public places, including licensed premises, are outlined in the Government's code of practice on smoking in public places.

Local Authorities (Social Index)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in rank order all English local authorities according to where they fall in the social index.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The requested information has been placed in the Library.

Nirex

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the appointment of an inspector for the public inquiry into the proposed Nirex rock characterisation facility in Cumbria; and what the terms of reference will be for the public inquiry.

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to make an announcement about these matters within the next two weeks.

Rates, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each property type in Nottinghamshire the percentage increase in rateable values as a result of the 1995 revaluation compared with the 1990 list.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Draft rateable values in Nottinghamshire have increased by 28 per cent. overall. The rateable value for shops has increased by 32 per cent., offices by 40 per cent., warehouses by 37 per cent., factories by 27 per cent., and other properties by 21 per cent.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce a table in the same form as provided to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-West (Mr. Butcher) on 1 November 1994, Official Report, columns 1005–6, showing the increase in rate bills for properties in Nottinghamshire between 1994–95 and 1995–96 as a result of the 1995 revaluation, in the absence of transitional relief.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Estimates for Nottinghamshire based on the draft 1995 rating lists are shown in the table. I have also given the change in bills once transitional relief has been taken into account.

Estimated increases or decrease in rate bills in England between 1994–95 and 1995–96 as a result of the 1995 revaluation in the absence of transitional relief—Nottinghamshire

Notes:

1. Totals may not sum due to rounding.
2. Small properties have a 1 April 1990 rateable value less than £10,000.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Commission for the New Towns

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the pension he has determined for the retiring chairman of the Commission for the New Towns.

Sir Paul Beresford: In accordance with the provisions of schedule 9 to the New Towns Act 1981, I am today placing a statement in the Library of the House.

Waterborne Viruses

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many coastal or estuarial sewage discharges under construction or planned include treatment to reduce or eliminate viral content;

(2) how many sewage discharges receive treatment to reduce or eliminate viruses; and what percentage that represents of the total coastal discharges.

Mr. Atkins: Sewage treatment which is at primary level or above will reduce the levels of viruses in discharges. The current and planned levels of treatment for sewage discharges into coastal and estuarial discharges under the urban waste water treatment directive are set out in the United Kingdom's report under article 17. A copy of this is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been carried out by his Department into the health impacts of viruses in sea and river water.

Mr. Atkins: The Government funded an extensive four year research programme into the health effects of sea-bathing, which was published in January 1994.

Copies of the full report have been placed in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial effect the inclusion of homelessness as an indicator has had on the grant settlement this year for (a) Coventry, (b) Wandsworth and (c) Westminster councils.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: There is no specific amount for homelessness within standard spending assessments. However, homelessness is one of a large number of general indicators that are included within composite indices in the personal social services and all other services service blocks. They serve as an adjustment to increase or reduce the SSA, depending on the position of the authority relative to the average for all authorities. For the specified authorities, these homelessness indicators contribute the following adjustment:

	£ million
Coventry City Council	-1,790
London Borough of Wandsworth	+1,684
Westminster City Council	+3,519

It is the overall value of an index which is important in determining an authority's SSA and not the value of an individual indicator within an index.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which 10 councils gained most in this year's grant distribution as a result of homelessness being a factor in the standard spending assessment system.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: There is no specific amount for homelessness within standard spending assessments. However, homelessness is one of a large number of general indicators that are included within composite indices in the personal social services and all other services service blocks. The 10 authorities which have the highest contribution from homelessness indicators are:

Birmingham City Council
Manchester City Council
London Borough of Lambeth
London Borough of Hackney
London Borough of Southwark
London Borough of Islington
London Borough of Walsall
Bradford City Council
London Borough of Haringey
London Borough of Westminster

It is the overall value of an index which is important in determining an authority's SSA and not the value of an individual indicator within an index.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those authorities which have made oral representations to Ministers as part of the consultation on his proposals for local government finance for 1995–96, showing in each case the Minister seen by the authority, the duration of the meeting and the main topics raised.

Mr. Gummer: The table lists authorities which made oral representations to myself and other Ministers in my Department on the proposed local government finance settlement for England for 1995–96. In addition, Home Office Ministers met a number of police authorities. The main topics raised in meetings with DOE Ministers are listed in the table. No note was made of the duration of meetings, but I and other Ministers have sought to make time available for the fullest consultation.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions Departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their client's interests.

Sir Paul Beresford: Central records are not kept of meetings between departmental officials and external organisations, and the information requested could not be collected without disproportionate cost.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 5 December, reference G/BE/P50/27077/94.

Sir Paul Beresford: I wrote to the hon. Member on 27 January.

Planning Application Fees

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decision he has reached on proposals to allow local planning authorities to set their own planning application fees; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: Last summer, we issued a consultation paper, "Planning Application Fees", which proposed giving local planning authorities the power to set their own fees for determining planning applications. Our intention was to enable authorities to recover the costs they incur in processing planning applications. We envisaged that fee increases would be subject to authorities meeting qualifying criteria—in relation to development plans and development control performance—and establishing, by 1996, an accounting system for identifying costs.

We received over 300 responses, all of which have been carefully considered. We have concluded that the particular package of proposals we put forward did not attract sufficient support to justify legislating now for the devolution of fee-setting responsibilities within the proposed time scale.

For the present, therefore, planning application fees will continue to be set centrally. However, we shall be giving further thought to refining the fees regime to see whether a better match can be achieved between the costs and price of the service provided by local planning authorities.

Council Tax

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in settling initial appeals against bandings for council tax in England; when he expects the remainder to be settled; and how quickly new appeals will be dealt with.

Mr. Curry: A year ago, my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) announced that we expected the Valuation Office agency and the valuation tribunals to have settled four out of five of the initial council tax appeals in England by the end of 1994, Official Report, column 154.

By 31 December last, 704,888 appeals had been settled—81.5 per cent. of those received during the initial period. The great majority of cases were resolved through discussion between the agency and the taxpayer.

Progress was commendably consistent across the country. The settlement rate had reached or exceeded 80 per cent. in over three quarters of all billing authority areas; only in 16 areas was the rate less than 75 per cent. I have today placed in the Library a list showing the numbers and proportions of initial appeals resolved in each billing authority area.

This has been an impressive achievement on the part of the agency, which has had other major tasks to carry out at the same time, including a rating revaluation of all non-domestic properties. The valuation tribunals have also had an important part to play. In the event, relatively few appeals have needed a tribunal hearing to resolve, but the readiness of tribunals to list cases for timely hearings has been invaluable in keeping up the pace of settlements. Tribunal members receive no payment for their services, and I am extremely grateful to them and, above all, to their chairmen and presidents for their preparedness to give up so much of their time to help deal with this exceptional case load.

Future progress is harder to predict, since the proportion of cases still outstanding that are likely to be resolved in discussion is lower than before. However, I very much hope that around 90 per cent. of initial appeals will have been settled by the end of March, and the remainder, or all but a handful, by the summer.

Appeals can still be made in certain circumstances, for example following a change of taxpayer or a material reduction in the value of the dwelling. Once the bulk of the initial appeals have been disposed of, we expect that any such new appeals will generally be settled within 12 months from the date of the taxpayer's proposal.

Waste Strategy

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been with the plans for a waste strategy for England and Wales which he announced in July 1994 in response to the Royal Commission on environmental pollution report on incineration of waste.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are today issuing for public consultation a draft waste strategy for England and Wales. The strategy aims to use the principles of sustainable development to provide a coherent framework for waste management policy and practice throughout England and Wales. Copies of the document have been placed in the Library of the House.

However well managed, waste always has the potential to cause harm to the environment. We must give priority to reducing the amount we produce, and to adopting better waste management practices. Much can be done harnessing the power of the market to encourage more environmentally friendly waste management. The Chancellor's announcement in his Budget statement of the introduction of a landfill tax is one, very important, development in this direction.

Industry can do a great deal, and has a good incentive to do so because, as a number of demonstration projects have shown, better waste management frequently results in reduced operating costs. Good waste management practice is a competitiveness opportunity. Householders also have a major role to play by choosing not to buy over-packaged goods, by reusing goods and materials within the household, and by using the recycling facilities provided by their local councils.

We hope that this draft strategy will start a wide debate about future aims and direction of waste management policy, and the role of industry, the public sector, consumers and householders in achieving those objectives. We are allowing an extended consultation period until 28 April 1995 to enable proper consideration of the many significant issues which the strategy raises.

Property Holdings

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the establishment of the agency to be derived from Property Holdings when Departments take responsibility in 1996.

Mr. Gummer: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced on 26 May 1994, Property Holdings is to be replaced by a new next steps agency, Official Report, column 225. The agency to be established from 1 April 1996, will be known as Property Advisers to the Civil Estate—PACE. It will be responsible for co-ordinating the Government's market activity on the civil estate; for promoting its rationalisation; and for providing Departments with advice and support in the management of their estates. It will be organised in accordance with the principles set out in the civil service White Paper—Cm 2627—with a flexible and non-hierarchical management structure, and with responsibility devolved to the lowest possible level. Its chief executive will be Mr. Neil Borrett, who has been director of Property Holdings since 1990. It will have a complement of about 200 staff, spread between six regional offices in London, Edinburgh, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds and Bristol, through which it will help keep in close touch with developments in local property markets.

Police Budgets

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the police authorities' base budgets for 1995–96.

Mr. Curry: The basis of comparison used for police authorities' 1995–96 budget requirements is the sum of their budget requirements and police specific grants for 1994–95. These figures are set out in the table.

National Parks

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make available the national parks circular which he has undertaken to issue in connection with the national parks provisions in the Environment Bill.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has today issued for consultation a national parks circular which contains guidance on matters which have arisen in the context of the Government's proposals for the future of the national parks. Copies of the draft circular have been placed in the Library.

Step-up Programme

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if new moneys will be found to ensure the step-up programme is available to people in the London borough of Lewisham from January 1995.

Mr. Curry [holding answer Friday 27 January 1995]: The step-up programme in South Thames training and enterprise council was funded from the business start-up scheme which has been incorporated into the single regeneration budget from 1 April 1994. All forward commitments arising from BSUS will be met, but funds for new start ups will depend on the implementation of successful SRB bids.

In preparation for these new arrangements, some TECs in London, including South Thames, have ceased recruitment to BSUS-funded schemes because allocated funds had been fully committed.

Arrangements to support future enterprise activity in the South Thames TEC area are currently under consideration.

Coventry Airport

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 98, what assessment he has made of whether the arrangements for airports to consult nearby local authorities about matters relating to noise and nuisance are operating satisfactorily; and what representations he has received asking for the arrangements to be strengthened.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

The power to require local consultation at aerodromes designated for the purposes of section 35 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 was included in the review of powers to control aircraft noise in 1991. It was found to be working well and, after consultation, no changes were proposed when the Government announced their conclusions from the review in March 1993. We do not believe the position to have changed since then.

TRANSPORT

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the absenteeism rate for (a) his Department, (b) HM Coastguard, (c) the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, (d) the Driving Standards Authority, (e) the Highways Agency, (f) the Marine Safety Agency, (g) the Transport Research Laboratory, (h) the Vehicle Certification Agency and (i) the Vehicle Inspectorate in each year since 1991.

Mr. Norris: The table shows for each year the number of days lost through sick absence per member of staff and the percentage of the working days in the year which the days of absence represent.

Notes:

(1) = Not an agency at this time. Figures included within Central Transport Group.

The figures are based upon data available to the Department's personnel information system at 26 January 1995 and relate only to staff currently employed by the Department. Information for staff who have left the Department during the period is not readily available.

Lifeguards

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the annual public expenditure for coastal lifeguards in the United Kingdom; what certification and training qualification are required by coastal lifeguards; and how many bathing beaches in the United Kingdom (a) possess and (b) do not possess trained lifeguards.

Mr. Norris: This is not a matter for the Department of Transport. The Royal Life Saving Society (UK), a registered charity, is responsible for the training of lifeguards.

Stagecoach

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the operations of Stagecoach in east London.

Mr. Norris: None.

Bull Bars

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now state the conclusions of the Transport Research Laboratory study into additional injuries in accidents to pedestrians and cyclists caused by bull and roo bars on motor vehicles referred to in his answer of 26 May 1993, Official Report, column 568; and what action he intends to take in response to the conclusions of the study.

Mr. Norris: The Transport Research Laboratory study was a general study of pedestrian accidents, the sample for which contained insufficient data for any firm conclusions to be drawn about bull bars. However, impact tests using an instrumented child-size headform on a bull bar have shown that the severity of an impact on a bull bar appears significantly greater than on a flexible bonnet.

Pedestrian injury accidents involving bull bars are currently being identified by the police for investigation by the Transport Research Laboratory. We will have a fuller picture when the reports of these accidents have been analysed.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of state for Transport what current proposals he has to restrict the use of bull bars; and what reports he has received of fatal accidents attributed to bull bars.

Mr. Norris: Pedestrian injury accidents involving bull bars are currently being identified by the police for investigation by the Transport Research Laboratory. We will have a fuller picture when the reports of these accidents have been analysed.

Drivers (Eyesight)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the British Medical Association about driving, glaucoma and the law; what response he has given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: None.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to review the effectiveness of the number plate test in the context of implementing the second driving licence directive of the European Union.

Mr. Norris: We will shortly be proposing regulations to implement the second driving licence directive, including the provisions on eyesight standards. These are unlikely to affect the number plate test.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what survey his Department has conducted of research which indicates poor vision as a causative factor or road accidents.

Mr. Norris: We know of no survey where research has established poor driver vision as a systematic causative factor in accidents.

Advertisements

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions and in what circumstances in the last five years advertisements have been placed in newspapers or periodicals which have been described as being issued by or on behalf of Ministers in his Department rather than on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Norris: There is no practical distinction between publicity described as being issued by a single Minister or Her Majesty's Government.

Many Government advertisements do not identify the sponsor but, whether explicit or implicit, all advertising is placed on behalf of a Secretary of State in pursuance of his or her powers on behalf of the Queen. The subject matter of the advertisement will determine which, if any, phrase is used.

Most Department of Transport advertisements in this category are for road improvement schemes.

Cradlewell Bypass

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reply has been given by him to representations to him on the accuracy and validity of cost benefit calculations on the Cradlewell bypass, Newcastle.

Mr. Norris: My predecessor, the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), answered a number of questions on this topic in the last Session of Parliament, 19 January 1994, Official Report, columns 593–94.

It is not practicable for the Department of Transport to verify in detail the accuracy and validity of all the supporting documentation prepared by local authorities seeking financial support for their transport proposals. The system relies on good practice by local authorities and the detailed scrutiny afforded by audit and public inquiries. The cost-benefit analysis that Newcastle city council submitted for Cradlewell bypass gave an indication of the scheme's value for money that was within the normal parameters for schemes of this type.

Coaches

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many lives annually he estimates will be saved if coaches are banned from the right-hand lane of carriageways with more than two lanes.

Mr. Norris: We shall be able to make a full assessment of the safety benefits of the coach outside lane ban at the end of the two-year trial period when accident data are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has a been published on the risks related to coaches in the right-hand lane of three and four lane carriageways.

Mr. Norris: A report by Wootton Jeffreys Consultants Ltd. commissioned by the Confederation of Passenger Transport UK and submitted to the Department, concluded that exposure to risk might be reduced because there would be fewer lane changes and cases of harsh braking.

London Bus Timetables

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that arrangements for the free supply of London bus timetables will remain in place.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for London Transport. I understand that it has no plans to introduce charges for bus timetables.

Cyclists

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of (a) fatal and (b) non-fatal accidents to cyclists in each police authority area in 1983; and what is the latest available information.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the table.

Barking to Gospel Oak Line

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has formulated since his visit to the Barking to Gospel Oak line in December to improve the service to passengers on that line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The provision of services on the Barking to Gospel Oak line is a matter for North London Railways, one of British Rail's train operating units. I have agreed supplementary credit approvals through the transport policies programme towards a joint bid by local London boroughs for selective station improvements along the line.

Rail Franchises

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of state for Transport when the franchising director is going to publish his proposals for the first passenger service requirements for franchises; and if these will be subject to consultation.

Dr. Mawhinney: The franchising director is today publishing for consultation his proposals for passenger service requirement for the Gatwick Express, South West Trains, Great Western Trains and London, Tilbury and Southend Franchises. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings; and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chief executives of each of the Department's agencies have written to the right hon. Member with the specific information for each agency. In 1987–88, before the first departmental agency was established, the total number of staff in the Department was 15,286. In 1994–95 the equivalent figure for the Department, including agencies, is 13,755. Further reductions in staff are planned for 1995-96. The creation of agencies in the Department has led to improved performance through better targeting and clarification of responsibilities.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as this question deals with an operational matter, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

The answers to the questions raised are as follows:

(1) The Coastguard Agency (TCA) HQ is located in Spring Place, Southampton. This property is shared with the Marine Safety Agency (MSA) HQ and the Southampton Marine Office. The move to this building has nothing to do with agency status. The Marine Emergencies Organisation (now TCA) HQ, the Surveyor General's Organisation (now MSA) HQ and the Southampton Marine Office were relocated from London to Southampton in May 1993 prior to Agency status. The annual rent on this property is £1.2 million, a saving of some £0.74 million on rented costs of previous accommodation.

(2) The Coastguard Agency has recruited 3 permanent and one temporary member of staff to deal with the additional requirements of Agency status.

(3) The Agency publishes a quarterly magazine "The Coastguard Magazine". This periodical predates the Agency having been published in a similar format for many years, and first produced in 1946. The current cost is £48,000 per annum.

(4) No fleets of executive cars or single executive cars have been purchased by the Agency.

(5) The costs of preparing a specially designed logo was £7,285.

(6) Her Majesty's Coastguard which is part of the Agency has 473 staff who have been in uniform for many years. The 12 Marine Pollution Control Unit staff who may have to attend the scene of an oil spill are provided with protective clothing. No other agency staff wear corporate clothing.

(7) Previous stocks of stationery were run down so that no additional costs were incurred for the design and printing of corporate stationery.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to provide details for the Marine Safety Agency (MSA) in response to your Question about Next Steps Agencies.

Headquarters building

The MSA Headquarters is co-located in Spring Place Southampton with the Coastguard Agency Headquarters. Spring Place is a leased property and is part of the Coastguard Agency estate and costs are borne on their budget.

Support staff

The Surveyor General's Organisation (from which MSA was formed) took over most of its own support function (personnel, finance, IT, etc) in 1991. There have been no changes in support staff as a result of the move to Agency status.

Periodical journals

The MSA issues a staff newsletter six times a year. The cost is small as it is copied and distributed in-house.

Cars

The MSA has no official vehicles and does not provide cars for any of its staff.

Logo

The MSA logo was designed in-house at no cost.

Corporate clothing

The only "corporate" clothing used by MSA is high visibility protective clothing for use by operational surveyors which incorporates the MSA logo. This cost £27k in 1993–94 and replaced previous protective clothing allowance.

MSA stationery

The MSA corporate stationery was designed in house by the Department's drawing office team and has replaced the Departmental stationery used by the SGO. The printing of the MSA stationery costs no more than the original DOT corporate printed stationery.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

With reference to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State of Transport about Next Steps Agencies in his Department the information requested in relation to the Highways Agency is as follows:

(i) The headquarters of this Agency has been brought together in St. Christopher House, Southwark Street, London, a building already on the Government's Common User Estate.

(ii) In general the staff of the Agency are those who were previously carrying out its functions in the Department of Transport. Two senior staff have been recruited from the private sector following open competitions, the Chief Executive and the Finance Director. The arrival of the latter will be offset by the departure of one of the original directors who will leave the Agency later in the year. Since the establishment of the Agency in April 1994 staff numbers have reduced and this will continue.

(iii) The Highways Agency has not instituted publication of a periodical journal.

(iv) The Highways Agency has not acquired any executive cars not has it provided corporate clothing.

(v) Revised stationery using Agency headings was introduced under standard supply and usage contracts.

(vi) The fee paid for the design of the Agency's logo was £1,250.

Letter from John Wootton to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question on the cost of the change to Agency status. The answers to the points raised in your question are set out below:

The setting up of TRL as an executive agency did not require the acquisition of new HQ buildings.

TRL does not have any executive cars nor does it supply staff with specific corporate clothing. Some work and protective clothing has had the TRL logo applied to it a minimal cost.

TRL publishes its research and findings widely as part of its dissemination role. Since becoming an agency these publications have been revised to include another, "TRL News", which costs £9,200 annually to produce.

Prior to establishment as an executive agency TRL was required to increase its Personnel section competence. One member of staff was seconded to TRL for approximately 6 months. Since then the number of support staff has been reduced in all areas of TRL operation in accordance with its published business plan.

TRL, formerly TRRL, commissioned a revision of its old logo and the production of a design manual at the cost of £9,000.

Letter from L. Manley to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about certain operational matters concerning the Driving Standards Agency (DSA).

The information you requested is provided below:

HQ building: The annual rental for Stanley House, Nottingham is £341,614. This replaced existing accommodation at 2 Marsham Street, London. The cost of providing in–going services at Stanley House was £712,000. An evaluation carried out after DSA relocated showed a benefit in net present value terms of nearly £3 million over 10 years, with payback occurring within 3 years of the move. Payback has been achieved.

Support staff: DSA recruited 13 new staff to run the new building on relocation (including typists, support grades, office manager and deputy and administrative support). The costs were fully offset by a reduction in the charges made to DSA by Department of Transport (Central).

Periodical journal: DSA does not publish any periodical journals.

Executive cars: DSA does not have any executive cars.

Corporate logo: The DSA logo was chosen from suggestions put forward by staff.

Corporate clothing: DSA does not have corporate clothing.

Stationery: Over the last 12 months the cost of DSA stationery for use in HQ and DSA's Regional Offices was £5,357. This replaced previous use of Department of Transport paper.

Overall, there has been a substantial reduction in the level of on–costs paid to DOT(C) by DSA for services now provided in–house.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

Next Steps Agencies—Vehicle Inspectorate

Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question on Executive Agencies, on matters relating to the Vehicle Inspectorate (VI). Taking your points in turn:

(i) VI has 2 sites which are occupied by staff undertaking HQ or support-type services. Both of these properties were occupied prior to the Agency being set up and were purchased, or rental contracts entered into, when VI was within the Department.

(ii) The number of staff involved in support services has remained largely static since before the Agency was set up, though the activities undertaken have changed. Prior to its becoming an Agency, the Inspectorate had well-developed 'in house' Finance and Personnel functions.

(iii) The actual number of VI employees (calculated in whole staff years) has reduced from 1,869 in 1988/89 (this figure has been adjusted to include the Traffic Examiner organisation which merged with VI in 1992/93) to a figure of 1,618 currently.

(iv) VI does not publish periodical journals to customers, or to any other body, but does publish staff newsletters. These newsletters have an annual cost of approximately £10,000.

(v) VI does not have any "executive" cars but does have a fleet of 43 "pool" cars for use by all staff. Of these, 6 are based at the HQ offices and the remaining 37 are located at our enforcement offices across the country. Some vehicles were also provided prior to the Agency being set up.

(vi) The VI logo was modified at the time the Agency was established to incorporate the words "Executive Agency". This was undertaken at minimal cost.

(vii) VI does not provide corporate clothing. However the Inspectorate does provide, and did provide prior to the Agency's establishment, protective clothing to staff.

(viii) VI does use headed stationery incorporating the VI logo. This replaced the previous headed paper used by the Inspectorate prior to the Agency being set up.

Please contact me if you need further information.

Letter from Dr. S. J. Ford to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1993:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question on Executive Agencies, on matters relating to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA). Taking your points in turn:

(i) DVLA has not acquired its own HQ building as a consequence of becoming an agency.

(ii) Annual cost—not applicable.

(iii) No additional support staff have been required since becoming an agency: DVL Directorate already exercised a considerable degree of delegated authority before agency status.

(iv) DVLA publishes twice a year 'DVL Today' mainly to inform corporate customers such as the motor trade, the police and the courts about key developments and changes. Annual cost £35,000. DVLA also publishes a monthly staff journal "LICENCE" at an annual cost of £40,000. This was published before DVLA became an agency.

(v) DVLA now operates 1 official car compared with 2 before becoming an agency, and is about to surrender the remaining vehicle.

(vi) The DVLA logo was produced by a member of staff in an internal competition with professional assistance at a total cost of £1,000 for the final product.

(vii) The design of existing official clothing for messengers was changed and now costs £1,000 a year less than before agency.

(viii) There was no extra cost in incorporating the DVLA logo on specially designed and printed corporate stationery as existing stocks of stationery had to be replenished.

Letter from Peter Nicholl to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 30 January 1995:

In the absence of the Chief Executive on Agency business, I have been asked by the Secretary of State to reply to the questions you raised insofar as they relate to the Vehicle Certification Agency (VCA).

Taking your questions in order:

1. In April 1990, some 3 weeks after its establishment as an executive agency, VCA moved from a shared Government building in central Bristol to a new headquarters in rented single-occupier offices 2 miles from the centre. A study carried out at the time indicated that the move represented value for money. The current annual rent is £156,007.32.

2. VCA now has 11 staff providing support services which were previously provided centrally. (VCA's staff numbers were 73 in the year immediately prior to its establishment as an agency, 80 in its first year, and 75 by its fourth year 1993–94).

3. VCA does not publish any periodical journals.

4. VCA does not have a fleet of executive cars nor any single executive cars.

5. VCA's logo initially derived from an in-house competition. Its design was improved last year at relatively low cost. (Please see item 7 below).

6. VCA's staff do not have corporate clothing.

7. VCA's stationery was originally designed by HMSO at a cost which cannot now easily be traced. The design of the logo and stationery was upgraded last year at a cost of £1,163.25. Supplies of stationery in this form are obtained when needed at the most economical cost that can be found.

I would be happy to answer any other questions you may have about VCA's operations.

Road Schemes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has reviewed cost-benefit analysis procedures on road schemes; if conclusions have been reached; and if he will place a copy of any new guidance on such analysis in the Library.

Mr. Watts: Cost-benefit analysis procedures for road schemes are kept constantly under review. I refer the hon. Member also to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Mr. Brandreth) on 19 December 1994, Official Report, columns 880–81.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to its clients' interests.

Mr. Norris: (a) Once. I met with London Taxis International and one representative of Ian Greer Associates, to discuss taxi issues. Three officials of my Department were present.

(b) None.

Kent Coast Line

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet seen the British Railways Board's business case for the replacement, or otherwise, of rolling stock for the Kent coast line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: Establishing the business case for this investment is a matter for the British Railways Board. My Department has been sent, for information, some of the material on the basis of which BR made its decision not to accept the offer made last year by ABB Transportation.

Subsequently, BR has indicated a willingness to re-examine the commercial case if an improved offer were received from ABB.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Oil and Gas Development

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to ensure that floating production facilities for oil and gas developments are built in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The industrial research and technology unit of the Department of Economic Development is in discussion with Harland and Wolff about possible Government support for the development of a floating production storage and offloading unit for the deep-water offshore oil industry. The company has been invited to submit a formal application to IRTU which will be subject to the normal rigours of a technical and financial appraisal.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Sir John Wheeler: From the information available in Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office, £1,142,112 was spent during 1994 in recruiting, 1,910 staff.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. John Wheeler: N. M. Rothschild and Sons has been employed on only one privatisation programme—Northern Ireland Electricity. Details of the fees and expenses paid in respect of this contract cannot be released as it would breach commercial confidentiality.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Sir John Wheeler: None.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

The Attorney-General: None of the Departments for which I am responsible has made payments to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any such work.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions Departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

The Attorney-General: (a) None: (b) None.

EMPLOYMENT

Work-related Illnesses

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Health and Safety Executive's estimate of the number of people who die each year as a result of ill health induced by work activity.

Mr. Oppenheim: It is not possible to state accurately the number of premature deaths which are the result of ill health cased by work. It is estimated there are at least 2,500 such deaths in Great Britain annually. Figures have been published in "Health and Safety Statistics: Statistical Supplement to the 1993–94 Annual Report of the Health and Safety Commission", a copy of which is in the Library.

Business Start-up Scheme

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which TEC areas (a) will and (b) will not provide business start-up programme type support in 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: A list of training and enterprise council areas where there will be direct business start-up support in 1995–96 from the single regeneration budget is shown in the table.

Start-up support will also be available through the training for work programme, from TECs' own reserves and from the Prince's Youth Business Trust which receives funding from the Department, but the TEC areas concerned cannot readily be identified. For this reason, it is not possible to supply a list of any areas which may be entirely without such support.

The Areas with direct business start-up support from the single regeneration budget, 1995–96

Avon TEC
AZTEC (Kingston upon Thames)
Barnsley/Doncaster TEC
Bedfordshire TEC

Wolverhampton TEC

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has for ensuring that unemployed people who wish to start their own businesses have an equal opportunity to do so following the placing of the business start-up scheme in the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Paice: Support for unemployed people who wish to start their own business will continue. The single regeneration budget projects recently approved will provide over 18,000 start-up opportunities. Training and enterprise councils are being encouraged to take advantage of arrangements which allow people in training for work to pursue self-employment and TECs may fund further start-up help through their own reserves. We also continue to contribute to the work of the Prince's Youth Business Trust which helps young people set up in business through the provision of grants and/or loans.

Liquefied Petroleum Gas

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what powers are available to local authorities and to other agencies to regulate the storage, use and installation of liquefied petroleum gas cylinders (a) generally and (b) for use in permanent domestic central heating.

Mr. Oppenheim: The storage of 25 tonnes or more of liquefied petroleum gas requires consent from the hazardous substances authority—usually the local planning authority—under the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990.

By virtue of its powers under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, the Health and Safety Commission has introduced the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1994 to control, among other things, the storage, use and installation of liquefied petroleum gas, both generally, and for use in permanent domestic central heating.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what responsibility suppliers of liquefied petroleum gas have towards purchasers of the product concerning its safe installation and use.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1994 place duties on a gas supplier. Duties under the regulations include a requirement that liquefied petroleum gas storage tanks be sited in such a manner that they can be safely used, filled and refilled.

Health and Safety

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if Health and Safety Executive guidance note CS4 applies only to safety at work.

Mr. Oppenheim: No. Advice given in guidance note CS4 is to safeguard both people at work and members of the general public.

National Development Agenda

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress there has been with the national development agenda; how much money out of the total budget for 1994–95 has been spent; and if he will make a statement on its evaluation and plans for the future.

Mr. Paice: The 1994 national development agenda described key objectives towards which the Department's support for the development of the vocational education and training system is being directed. Examples include the standards programme, and action to encourage employers to see training as an investment.

There is no single budget for national development. The work is funded from a range of individual budgets voted for particular purposes. At 31 December 1994 £15.6 million had been spent out of available funds of £40.2 million for the current financial year.

Progress is being made in all the areas covered by the national development agenda, with a wide range of projects contracted.

It is a requirement that all projects are evaluated, and that where appropriate there should be evaluation of the performance of linked groups of projects.

The results of evaluation form an important part of the Department's dissemination activity for national development work. Project outputs are disseminated widely to relevant audiences through conferences, seminars, publicity and promotional events, reports and other publications.

For the future, a second edition of the national development agenda is planned for publication in February, taking account of the developments announced in the 1994 White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win".

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the range of likely costs to public funds which will result from closure of and redundancies of providers at South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: I do not expect that any closures or redundancies will lead directly to costs to public funds. Consequential costs, for example any calls upon the national insurance fund, are not possible to estimate.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he intends shall succeed South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: It is urgent to settle the arrangements for training and enterprise council coverage in London for 1995–96. I have today invited CENTEC to put proposals to me on how it would exercise the full range of TEC responsibilities in the London boroughs of Lambeth and Southwark, and SOLOTEC in the London boroughs of Greenwich and Lewisham, from the start of the 1995–96 contract. In the light of the views expressed about the future arrangements in the South Thames area, I expect this to lead to calls for a wider review of London TEC boundaries, and in particular to consideration of a central London TEC covering a broader area. I look forward to hearing the views of London TECs and other London interests on those issues in due course.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Government take priority over training provider creditors for cash from the receivers of South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: Yes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is a secured creditor by virtue of a debenture held with the training and enterprise council.

Jobcentres

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing for each region in the united Kingdom the number of vacancies in jobcentres that were (a) temporary and (b) permanent in each quarter since December 1990.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information requested is available monthly, but only for filled vacancies, from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Job Advertisements (European Commission)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 24 January Official Report, column 184, if the recruitment process for United Kingdom-based European Commission staff, including job advertisements, is subject to (a) the Race Relations Act 1974 and (b) the Sex Discrimination Acts.

Mr. Oppenheim: No. The staff regulations of officials of the European Communities, which form part of a regulation made by the Council of the European Communities under the EC treaties, provide that an official may be appointed only if he or she is a national of a member state. However, the regulations also require that, subject to the nationality condition, officials be selected without reference to race, sex or creed.

Credit Guarantee Insurance

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he offers credit guarantee insurance to TEC training providers.

Mr. Paice: No.

Unemployment (Derbyshire)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of unemployment in Derbyshire in February 1986; and what is the latest figure.

Mr. Oppenheim: Unadjusted claimant unemployment in Derbyshire stood at 37,310 in December 1994 compared with 50,068 in February 1986. This represents a fall of 25 per cent.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people and what percentage of the labour force in each region for the United Kingdom as a whole were classified as being in temporary employment in each year since 1979.

Mr. Oppenheim: This information is not available as a consistent series from 1979. However, a consistent series for 1984 onwards is available from the labour force survey and can be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Food Service Industry

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what number of students work (a) full-time and (b) part-time in the food service industry; and what were the comparable figures for each year since 1989.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is given in the table:

Number of students[1] working in the food service industry (000's) in Great Britain

	Full-time	Part-time
Spring 1989	—	82
Spring 1990	—	104
Spring 1991	—	100
Spring 1992	—	118
Spring 1993	—	112
Spring 1994	—	132
Summer 1994	—	119

Source:
Labour force survey—not seasonally adjusted.
Notes:
—Less than 10,000 in cell; estimate not shown.
[1] Includes full-time students only.

Pneumoconiosis

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of the total sum of money paid out under the provisions of the Pneumoconiosis etc. (Workers' Compensation) Act 1979; and what has been the number of beneficiaries.

Mr. Oppenheim: As at 31 December 1994, total expenditure under the Pneumoconiosis etc. (Workers' Compensation) Act 1979 amounted to around £38.1 million. Some 5,700 people have received a payment under the Act.

Work Permits

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the issuing of work permits to Japanese nationals, and on complaints made by employees of Quick Corp., London branch, 65 Clifton street, London EC2, about the overseas labour service section at his Department.

Mr. Oppenheim: Work permits are issued to Japanese nationals on the same basis as those issued to other nationalities.

The Department has not received complaints from employees of Quick Corp., London branch about the overseas labour service. OLS officials are considering representations from former employees of Quick Corp. about work permits issued to Japanese nationals employed by the company.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Miss Widdecombe: N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. has not been employed to undertake any work on the Department's privatisation programmes.

Employment Service

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will make a statement about the inspection service in the London and south-east region of the Employment Service;

(2) if he will make a statement about the financial status of the London and south-east region of the Employment Service;

(3) if he will make a statement about the London and south-east region of the Employment Service;

(4) if he will make a statement about the level of achievement in the inspection service of the London and south-east region of the Employment Service in relation to its annual performance agreement;

(5) if he will make a statement about redeployment of staff across the London and south-east region of the Employment Service and the reasons for it;

(6) if he will make a statement about staffing in the London and south-east region of the Employment Service.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Grover to Ms Harriet Harman, dated 31 January 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence on leave of the Chief Executive, to reply to your questions about the London and South East Region (Region) of the Employment Service (ES).

Unemployment within the Region has fallen by almost 15% during the twelve months to December 1994. Indeed, in some locations such as Andover in Hampshire, the fall has been almost 35% Such falls indicate that the economy is in much better shape and, in part, reflect the success of ES initiatives to help people back into employment.

Falling unemployment means that the ES, whose staff deal directly with the payment of benefits as well as offering job and other opportunities, has experienced a fall in the number of people using its services. ES managers have reacted swiftly to these changes to ensure that they are staffed to meet need and that taxpayers' money is not wasted. Inevitably, at a time of falling unemployment, this has led to a reduction in staffing levels.

As regards staffing, you will appreciate that the ES receives funding for staffing on the basis of need, i.e. the level of unemployment. Falling unemployment means that we now need less staff and can anticipate lower staffing levels for the financial year ahead. We need to manage our budgets and staffing levels to meet this new need. There are over 300 Jobcentres across the Region and unemployment is falling at differing rates at particular locations, so balancing staffing levels to need is a particularly challenging task. It has been necessary to redeploy staff between offices and between functions to ensure that a balance is maintained between staffing levels and the needs of our clients. Inevitably, staff have undertaken work in different areas of ES activity in the short term to meet short term need.

The response to these changing needs from ES staff has been commendably high, as you will note from our continuing performance in the delivery of services to our customers. As regards finances, in the nine month period from April to December 1994, the Region had spent £267.1 million or 73.8% of its annual budget.

Performance across all areas of our business is strong. The help offered to unemployed people continues to increase; the Region has placed almost 380,000 people in employment (April–December 1994) and I estimate that this figure will have increased to approaching 500,000 people by the end of March. Over one in three of these placings are long-term unemployed clients. At this point in time, the Region are 12% above their unemployed placings target in this area. Indeed, in almost every area of work, the Region are ahead of their targets and continue to offer an improved service to jobseekers.

As regards the Inspection Service in the Region, as at December 1994 its targets for the full operational year (to April) for authorised prosecutions and claimants withdrawing claims had already been almost matched or exceeded.

I hope this is helpful.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Miss Widdecombe: I have no knowledge of any such meetings.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Consultants

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many relatives of serving diplomats are currently employed by the Overseas Development Administration as consultants.

Mr. Baldry: We would not normally ask potential consultants about the occupation of their relatives. However, we are aware of two who are currently employed.

Recruitment

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many positions in the United Kingdom's overseas aid programme were filled from the Overseas Development Administration's own register of available personnel for each year since 1979; how many were advertised in the media; and how many were filled by outside recruitment agencies and consultancies.

Mr. Baldry: Information about the method of recruitment of the many thousands of overseas aid personnel appointed since 1979 is not available centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by his Department or agency.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer to the hon. Member to the answer given on 23 January 1995, Official Report, columns 25–26.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N.M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Nil.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Officials in the Department for which I am responsible did not meet representatives of Ian Greer Associates either formally or informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 17 January, Official Report, column 400. Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the chief executives of the nine agencies for which my Department is responsible. I have therefore asked Mr. John Hobday of the Account Services Agency; Mr. David Durham of Companies House; Mr. Peter Joyce of the Insolvency Service; Dr. Richard Worswick of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist; Mr. William Edgar of the National Engineering Laboratory; Dr. Peter Clapham of the National Physical Laboratory; Dr. Seton Bennett of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory; Dr. Paul Hartnack of the Patent Office; and Mr. Jim Norton of the Radiocommunications Agency to arrange for answers to be given.

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 31 January 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION No. 180

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question relating to various items of expenditure incurred by NEL as a Next Steps Agency. NEL has not acquired its headquarters building. Since achieving agency status it has reduced from 13 to 5 the number of principal buildings it uses. Since achieving agency status NEL has reduced its support staff by about 43%. The only periodical journal published by NEL is its annual report which, unlike its pre-agency status annual report, is also used as a marketing document. Pre-agency there were two vehicles which could have been described as executive cars now there are three, the additional annual cost being £7900 per annum. All of the vehicles are available for general laboratory duties as required. NEL uses the same logo as it has had for almost 40 years. The number of staff issued with corporate clothing has been reduced from 7 to 2 since NEL became an agency. There have been no costs incurred in the special design of stationery. As is normally the case, the stationery has been updated from time to time to add the symbols associated with the additional quality accreditations obtained by the establishment, no special design costs were incurred in incorporating these additions.

I trust you will find the above information to be satisfactory for your purposes.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 31 January 1995:

AGENCY MATTERS

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about certain Agency expenditure and resource requirements.

The Agency has not acquired a new headquarters building as a result of becoming an Agency. The Agency will be moving to a new building in Docklands later this year since the lease on Waterloo Bridge House is about to expire.

The Agency has 15 staff carrying out support functions which have been delegated to the Agency by the Department.

The Agency issues a number of periodical publications, including the Annual Report, at a total annual cost of £120k.

The Agency does not have any executive cars.

The design of the Agency corporate logo cost £5k.

The cost of corporate clothing is £12k per annum.

The cost of Agency stationery in 1994/95 will be around £80k. However this is no increase on the equivalent DTI stationery.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 31 January 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Question about the costs of a number of Insolvency Service operational matters.

The Service has not acquired any separate headquarters buildings since it was established as an agency in March 1990: both its London and Birmingham headquarters share buildings with Official Receivers' offices; its Edinburgh Disqualification Unit, set up prior to March 1990, shares a building with the Scottish Office.

There has been a continuing process of delegation of support functions previously undertaken by central divisions of the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI): the effect on overall resources, so far as I have been informed, has been neutral—any additional resources have been at least matched by reductions in central divisions' staffing.

The Service is required to publish an Agency Annual Report: the publication cost for the last Report (1993–94) was some £13,000. It does not have or use executive cars. Its logo was designed in-house using ideas from staff; the cost was negligible. It does not have corporate clothing for any of its staff. It does not use specially designed and printed stationery beyond the incorporation of its logo on its letters etc, which is automatically produced by the word processing software, and where appropriate its corporate colour on its publications, replacing the DTI logo and colour.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 31 January 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about expenditure in Next Steps agencies.

Buildings

Prior to becoming an agency, NWML occupied a single building, part of DTI's estate, for which rent was paid. These arrangement were not been affected by NWML becoming an agency in 1989. The annual rent for the building is £239,000.

Support Staff

NWML currently has the same number of support staff as it had before it became an agency. The additional administrative duties associated with being an agency have been absorbed within the existing allocation of staff.

Journals

Between 1 April 1993 and 31 March 1994, NWML spent £8245.67 on publications distributed to UK industry and Local Authorities.

Executive Cars

No NWML staff have executive cars. Prior to becoming an agency, NWML owned one pool car. Since becoming an agency it has disposed of the car and replaced it with a lease arrangement for a smaller car.

Logos

The agency has not spent any money on logo design.

Clothing

The agency has spent £1414.52 on corporate clothing (150 ties, 50 scarves and umbrellas) since 1989.

Corporate Stationery

NWML has not changed the design of letterheads, compliment slips or business cards as a result of becoming an agency. Its expenditure on these items in 1993–94 was £2,310.58 which is approximately the same annual expenditure as before becoming an agency.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply in respect of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist (LGC) to your Parliamentary Question (No. 180) about certain costs incurred by Next Steps Agencies in the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI).

The position on the points you raise is as follows:

(i) LGC has not acquired any of its buildings. It has occupied premises, including its main laboratory, which form part of the DTI's estate at Teddington since 1988 (when it relocated from central London) and pays an annual rental to Property Holdings;

(ii) as a result of organisational and operational changes which have affected LGC since it became an Executive Agency in 1989 it is not possible to give a precise response to the changing requirements for support staff over the past five years or so. The Laboratory's total support staff has risen from a complement of 64 in 1989/90 to a total of 67 in the current financial year. This increase reflects the considerable additional administrative responsibilities which the Laboratory undertakes. A range of tasks previously carried out by DTI centrally are now covered by LGC's Human Resources, Accounts and Finance and IT Groups and a Business Development Group has been set up during this period. A Strategic Research Unit (five staff) to support our scientific activity has recently been created but this is not included in the figures for support staff above;

(iii) the Laboratory publishes an Annual Report and Accounts, and produces on average two issues of the Government Chemist bulletin a year. The cost of these in 1993/94 was approximately £30k;

(iv) the Laboratory has no executive cars;

(v) the Laboratory first used a logo in 1978/79 on headed stationery, publicity material etc. The design work was carried out within DTI;

(vi) the Laboratory has a long standing policy of issuing clothing to staff primarily for health and safety reasons (in some instances as a statutory requirement) e.g. laboratory coats and gloves, external site working equipment such as helmets, boots and overalls. In addition staff in the Laboratory's Post Room are issued with uniforms including safety shoes. The total cost of these items in 1993/94 was approximately £7k;

(vii) the cost of stationery (including letterheaded paper which incorporates an LGC logo) to the Laboratory in 1993/94 was approximately £4k.

I hope this meets with your requirements.

Letter from Dr. Peter Clapham to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 31 January 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Question concerning the cost of building etc., used by Next Step Agencies. This reply concerns the National Physical Laboratory.

Taking each of your questions in turn:

Headquarters Building: NPL has not acquired any additional buildings to those occupied prior to becoming an Agency.

Support Staff: While the balance of our support specialisms has changed, NPL has not acquired any net additional support staff since becoming an Agency. Such additional tasks as have been delegated to the Agency, eg wider personnel responsibilities, have been absorbed by existing staff.

Periodical Journals: NPL has continued to publish NPL News once or twice a year—there has been no significant change in cost since becoming an Agency.

Cars: NPL does not operate any executive cars.

Logos: NPL has always maintained its own 'house style' and has revised it from time to time for promotional reasons. The last occasion was just prior to becoming an Agency, and the design cost was borne by the Department (about £3,000).

Clothing: NPL has introduced no new corporate clothing, but a number of industrial staff now wear overalls bearing the current logo at negligible additional cost.

Stationery: NPL has its own printing facilities for technical reports etc, and most corporate stationery is printed in-house at marginal cost. The Agency's total stationery costs are about £25k per annum.

I hope this provides the information you were seeking.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 31 January 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to respond to your Question about costs incurred by Next Steps agencies in his Department.

The Patent Office became an executive agency in March 1990 and over the following two years we relocated from London to a new building in Newport, South Wales. In October 1991 we became a trading fund and acquired title to the new building at a cost of £17 million.

Over the last five years we have reduced our cost base by about £7 million a year, partly because of lower accommodation costs, partly by efficiency savings, and partly because staff numbers have reduced in line with a long-standing decline in demand for our services following the establishment of a European Patent Office in Munich in 1978. We currently have 963 staff in post including 218 support staff (ie staff who are in support of our core functions of granting patents and registering trade marks and designs) compared with 1179 staff in post, including 285 support staff, on 1 March 1990.

We publish a number of journals in line with statutory obligations: the Official Journal (Patents) at an annual cost of £77,890; the Trade Mark Journal at an annual cost of £78,528; and Reports of Patents, Design and Trade Mark Cases at an annual cost of £8,580. The cost of our Annual Report to Parliament for 1993–94 was £18,000. Non-statutory publications centre on free information about how to go about obtaining patents, trade marks and registered designs and we send out a total of nearly 250,000 information packs each year at a printing cost of £130,000. We also publish occasional material such as monographs on patent trends. Our total statutory and non-statutory printing costs are around £600,000 a year.

We have no fleet of executive cars, and we have no single executive cars.

Our logo (see heading of this letter) was created in 1986 by the DTI's Information Division at no cost to the Patent Office. The cost of overprinting standard stationery with the logo (1,500,000 sheets a year) is £4,000. We have a flag incorporating the logo which cost £268.

We have no corporate clothing and we do not have corporate stationery other than that described above.

Letter from John Hobday to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 27 January 1995:

Your recent Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade asked a number of questions about the costs incurred by Next Steps Agencies in his Department in introducing their own corporate identities.

The Accounts Services Agency was created in October 1991. Since when:

(i) the Agency has acquired its one and only operational centre the rental for which for 1994–95 was £135,125

(ii) it has not been necessary to increase the number of support staff

(iii) ASA has not published any periodical journals other than its three Annual Reports the cost of which were £6,410.10 in total

(iv) the Agency does not possess any official cars

(v) the Agency's logo was designed at a cost of £100—the prize for an in-house staff competition

(vi) no corporate clothing is used

(vii) the costs of specially designed and printed corporate stationery was £19,147.15

The costs quoted include VAT. Some of these costs would be matched by savings on the equivalent Departmental budgets.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 31 January 1995:

You asked the President of the Board of Trade the following question: (PQ180)

"To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will set out for each of the Next Steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery."

I have been asked to respond direct to you as Chief Executive of Companies House Executive Agency.

Headquarters Building

Companies House headquarters occupies a property in Cardiff that has been a crown freehold since it was built in 1975. No change in ownership has occurred as a consequence of CH becoming an executive agency. The property's book value in CH's balance sheet for 31 March 1994 was £13.8 million.

Support Staff

It is now over 6 years since CH became an executive agency, and the many changes in the nature of our operations make comparisons between staff functions over this period of time difficult. The total number of staff in post (measured as full-time equivalents) has fallen from 1081 on 3 October 1988 (Agency Day) to 1006 at 31 December 1994. Of these, 156 were classified as "support staff" in October 1988, compared with 184 in December 1994. However the term "support" staff includes computer, accounting, and building service staff as well as other functions such as personnel, typing, training and customer service. The largest single category of support staff are computer staff, whose numbers increased from 43 to 58, reflecting the much greater use of information technology to deliver CH's services.

Periodicals

Companies House publishes a periodical called "The Register", which is used to disseminate information about changes in company law, current prices for our services and details of new services, and information about our performance against published targets. It is distributed free to anyone who wishes to receive it, and published four times a year. The present annual cost of publication, including postage, is approximately £70,000 for a circulation of 22,000 per issue.

Executive Cars

There are no cars provided for staff, executive or otherwise. The costs of official travel by car are reimbursed by means of Treasury and Inland Revenue approved mileage rates. In certain cases, involving longer journeys, staff are encouraged to use hire cars where this is cheaper than standard mileage rates.

Specially Designed Logos and Stationery

The present CH logo was part of a single, integrated corporate design exercise undertaken in 1990, which included corporate stationery designs as well as the logo itself. It is not possible to separate out the design cost of the logo alone. The total design cost was £30,000.

The great bulk of our stationery costs arise from the printing and distribution of statutory forms and notes for guidance for companies. To try to answer your question, we have looked at our costs for standard A4 corporate letterhead stationery. We presently pay £320 per 10,000 sheets of 80gm 1 side, 2 colour paper. We understand that this is in fact less than that paid for comparable items by our parent Department, DTI.

Corporate Clothing

CH provides uniform clothing for all staff working in areas open to the public. Clothing is provided for 64 staff at an average cost per person of £105.

Small Businesses

Mr. Shersby: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those Government measures of particular help for small businesses introduced since May 1992.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Government measures introduced since May 1992 focus on the establishment of a network of Business Links, to bring together in partnership and in one location, all the key local business support providers.

Business Links will provide a range of integrated support services including advice on exports, innovation and technology and design. Sixty-nine Business Links are now open, with around 200 planned by the end of 1995.

Other measures include:

A new consultancy service which will offer both a diagnostic and consultancy service and a consultancy brokerage service for smaller firms.

The small firms training loans scheme, launched in June 1994, will help very small businesses pay for both training consultancy and training related to business objectives. The training initiative for small firms, which will start in April this year will enable businesses to develop, in house, the training skills of key workers.

Budget measures over successive years have encouraged both investment through the enterprise investment scheme and venture capital and trusts, and re-investment, changes to capital gains tax in businesses.

The issue of late payment of debt has been addressed in a variety of ways including the development of proposals for a British standard for prompt payment and further prompt payment requirements on Government Departments and their agencies.

Changes were introduced to the small firms loan guarantee scheme in 1993 to improve access to finance. These included offering established businesses 85 per cent. guarantee on loans up to £250,000 and reducing the premiums paid by borrowers.

Many of the reforms introduced under the deregulation initiative—for example, the small firms litmus test to assess the impact of any legislative proposals on the sector—are of particular benefit to small firms.

A new three-year programme for the small firms merit award for research and technology programme, which provides grants to small firms to help them with the development of new innovative products was announced this month. The related support for products under research programme continues to be available.

Regional Electricity Companies

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what meetings he has had with the regional electricity companies to discuss regional investment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: DTI Ministers meet representatives of the regional electricity companies from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to meet the Director General of the Office of Electricity Regulation to discuss proposals for the regulation of foreign owned the regional electricity companies.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My colleagues and I discuss a wide range of issues with the Director General of the Office of Electricity Regulation from time to time.

Arms Exhibitions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 593, to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel), if he will list for each overseas defence exhibition listed, the number of export licences granted to British firms to permit the temporary export of military technology for display.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information requested could be extracted only by examining the original licence application papers for all the relevant countries of destination for the periods in question; and this could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what steps are being taken to quantify the market price of electricity to which renewables are expected to converge under the NFFO programme;

(2) what steps are being taken to ensure that projects which are offered power purchase agreements under the NFFO programme have had cash flow forecasts certified as financeable by a reputable organisation;

(3) what steps are being taken under the NFFO programme, to provide an initial market for new and renewable technologies awaiting demonstration in Britain;

(4) what steps are being taken to provide wood with a separate technology band within which to bid under the NFFO programme.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Renewable energy non-fossil fuel obligation orders for England and Wales have been laid before Parliament in 1990, 1991 and 1994, in order to facilitate an initial market for those renewable energy technologies which are both technically robust and can be deployed at a cost which, with the benefits of experience under successive NFFO orders, can be expected to converge towards the market price for electricity. The obligations under these NFFO orders were set at 103 MW, 457 MW and 627 MW respectively, that is, a total of 1186 MW, convering hydro, large and small-scale wind projects, sewage gas, landfill gas, municipal and industrial waste, energy crops and agricultural and forestry wastes.

However, a proportion of the contracts made to meet the obligations under the orders are not expected to go forward to commissioning, for reasons such as failure to secure planning permission or project finance. As a consequence, the level of the relevant obligation will be reduced by an amount corresponding to the capacity of the projects terminated.

The Government are working towards 1,500 MW of new renewables-based generation capacity in the UK by 2000, mainly through NFFO-type arrangements.

Specific provision was made under the third renewables order, requiring the regional electricity companies in England and Wales to secure capacity based on gasification by partial combustion of energy crops and agriculture waste. Three projects with an aggregate capacity of 19 MW were awarded contracts, each of which is expected to use wood grown specifically as a fuel.

Over the next few months, the Government will be considering the possible size, shape and timing of the prospective fourth renewables order for England and Wales, taking account of representations made to them, including those on the market price for electricity from renewable sources, technology banding and the specific issue of an obligation for wood grown as a fuel. That fourth renewables order would be expected to be laid before Parliament in 1996, with a fifth order in prospect for 1998.

Judgment of the commercial viability of individual projects is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Sizewell

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with Nuclear Electric about the construction of a gas station at Sizewell C.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My Department has had no such discussions with the company.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the nuclear installations inspectorate will be publishing the results of the long-term safety review on Sizewell A.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that the Health and Safety Executive expects to publish the findings of the nuclear installations inspectorate's assessment of the Sizewell A long-term safety review in early April 1995.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what timetable he set for the construction of Sizewell B.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The CEGB's committed programme envisaged commencement of fuel loading 72 months after first permanent structural concrete. This was achieved within 73 months, on 17 September 1994. The committed programme envisaged full commercial power six months after completion of fuel loading.

Nuclear Waste Shipments

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the number of shipments of high-level waste from the United Kingdom if the current proposal for substitutions (a) is and (b) is not adopted.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is a matter for the management of British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Konver Funds

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made on the distribution of Konver funds.

Mr. Eggar: Konver I grants worth £17.9 million were allocated in 1993 to projects across the country. The introduction of Konver II, intended to cover the period 1994 to 1997, has, however, been delayed throughout the EU.

On 1 July 1994 the European Commission published a notice on Konver II asking member states to send by 1 August lists of areas eligible according to stated job loss criteria; it would then issue a list for the whole EU by 1 October. The Government and other member states duly sent their lists; but the Commission, finding them too long, decided to modify the criteria. I wrote to Commissioner Millan complaining about this procedure on 21 November.

Eventually, on 21 December, the Commission drew up a "provisional" list of eligible areas and invited member states to propose additional ones. A revised provisional list is expected to be published in the Official Journal shortly.

Also on 21 December, the Commission announced that the United Kingdom would receive £79 million from Konver II.

Member states' programmes for the use of Konver II, including their proposals for additional areas, are now to be sent to the Commission by 1 March. The first applications cannot be considered until programmes have been agreed with the Commission, probably in the summer of 1995. Allocations and payments will follow thereafter.

Electricity

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the ratio of United Kingdom imports to exports of electricity supply via the electricity supply link between the United Kingdom and France for the four quarters of 1994; and what were the amounts involved expressed in gigajoules.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Imports of electricity from France, expressed in gigawatt hours and gigajoules, for the four quarters of 1994 are as follows:

	Gigawatt hours	Gigajoules[1]
Q1	4,252	15,307,200
Q2	3,981	14,331,600
Q3	4,313	15,526,800
Q4	4,394	15,818,400
Total	16,940	60,984,000

[1] Assumes 1 gigawatt hour = 3,600 gigajoules.

There were no exports of electricity to France during 1994.

Conference

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has yet finalised plans for the British Government's contribution to the February G7 conference on the information society.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I shall be attending the G7 ministerial conference on the Information Society in Brussels on 24 to 26 February. Ministers will hold discussions on three broad themes: the regulatory framework and competition policy; development of information infrastructure; and social, societal and cultural aspects of the information society. The conference will also launch a number of pilot projects to demonstrate the scope for international collaboration in different areas of the information society. In my discussions I shall in particular be emphasising the importance of liberalisation of infrastructure in reducing prices, in order to encourage a wider range of services to be provided.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department, and the Department of Energy, has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. Eggar: The following table lists the sales conducted by my Department, and the former Department of Energy, in which N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. were appointed and the roles to which they were appointed. The fees paid to firms appointed within the privatisation programme are commercially confidential.

Table of appointments (year of sale in brackets)

Adviser to the Department of Trade and Industry:

Cable and Wireless—feasibility study (1981)

British Coal (1994)

Adviser to the former Department of Energy:

Amersham International Ltd. (1982)

British Gas Corporation (1986)

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many contracts involving Taylor Woodrow International Ltd. were supported by export credits guarantee between 1 August 1983 and December 1988; and what was their total value;

(2) how many contracts involving British Aerospace plc were supported by export credits guarantee between 1 August 1988 and December 1992; and what was their total value;

(3) how many contracts involving (a) Kleinwort Benson Group, (b) N. M. Rothschild and Sons, (c) TSB Group, (d) Balfour Beatty Ltd, (e) the Weir Group plc and (f) National Westminster bank were supported by export credits guarantee since 1991; and what was their total value for each company;

(4) how many contracts involving Trafalgar House plc were supported by export credits guarantee between 1 February 1988 and December 1994; and what was their total value;

(5) how many contracts involving (a) Hiscox Syndicates Ltd., (b) J. Henry Schroder Wagg and Co., (c) Foster Wheeler Ltd., (d) Bovis Construction Group and (e) GEC were supported by export credits guarantee since July 1993; and what was their total value for each company;

(6) how many contracts involving Hawker Siddeley Group were supported by export credits guarantee between 1 April and December 1990; and what was their total value.

Mr. Needham: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose information about commercial relations between ECGD and individual companies unless the relevant parties have agreed to this.

Exports

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of United Kingdom exports, including services and invisibles, was exported to (a) Germany, (b) France, (c) Belgium, (d) Denmark, (e) Austria, (f) Holland and (g) Luxembourg in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Needham: The available information is given in the table.

Share of UK visible exports and invisible credits

Radioactive Wastes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide a list of the proposals put forward by British Nuclear Fuels plc to manage radioactive wastes in the United States.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 30 January 1995]: Proposals to manage radioactive waste in the United States are a commercial matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc and the other companies concerned.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if BNFL is negotiating for radioactive waste management services, including reprocessing contracts, with India.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 30 January 1995]: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what date Scottish Nuclear and Nuclear Electric have to finalise their reprocessing contracts with BNFL.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 30 January 1995]: This is a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Patent Office

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will allow Patent Office staff to bid for the marketing services of the Patent Office on equal terms with private firms; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will allow Patent Office staff to bid for the information technology services of the Patent Office on equal terms with private firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answers 30 January 1995]: As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Mr. Trend) on 14 December 1994, Official Report, columns 657–58, when he confirmed executive agency status for the Patent Office, new targets will encourage the office to contract out activities wherever this is compatible with its statutory role and good value for money. In areas identified as candidates for contractorisation, bids for managing contracted-out services will be evaluated against benchmarks for the forecast cost and quality of service from in-house provision. In principle, management and staff bids could be allowable, although not on the basis that management and staff would remain civil servants if their bid was successful.

Security Equipment

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the companies to which export licences were granted for the export of electronic batons in the last five years; what assistance his Department is giving to British firms selling security and paramilitary products to Peru, Colombia and other countries in south America in 1995; and if British Aerospace was assisted in the sale of electro-shock batons to Saudi Arabia in the mid-1980s.

Mr. Needham: The first part of this question could be answered only at disproportionate cost. British firms selling to south American countries are eligible for the DTI's range of export services, but it is not possible to isolate those operating in the general areas identified. British Aerospace has denied both publicly and to my officials that electro-batons have been supplied by the company to Saudi Arabia.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for further regulating the sale of equipment which can be used for and has been designed for use against persons in repressive conditions.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: I have no such proposals.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what evidence he has received that Hiatts equipment, manufactured in the United Kingdom, restricting body movements has been sold by United Kingdom companies and used by countries in the middle east;

(2) what evidence the Government have that oversize handcuffs manufactured in Birmingham by Hiatts and modified at a later stage have been used in conditions of torture.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answers 24 January 1995]: I am aware of the allegations made in the Channel 4 television programme "Dispatches", screened on 11 January. Hiatts of Birmingham has denied such practices, both publicly and to my officials.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he intends to promote legislation for the regulation of the co-ordinated purchase of sensitive military equipment throughout the world by United Kingdom registered companies.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: No.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions Ministers and civil servants have visited the covert and operational procurement exhibition, held annually in Esher, Surrey.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: Officials from my Department have visited the COPEX exhibition although precise figures on the number of visits are not available.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total annual value of exports which can be used as shackles and leg restraints.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: There is a wide variety of equipment that could theoretically be used as shackles and leg restraints and it is not possible to answer the question as posed. My Department would not issue export licences for leg-irons.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions officials from his Department met that person calling himself John Clarkson or that person calling himself Frank Davies to discuss matters relating to defence equipment exports.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: The persons referred to in this question are fictitious names used by journalists appearing on the Channel 4 "Dispatches" programme on 11 January 1995. The makers of the programme did not contact my Department before transmission and a statement was provided.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions he has acted to prevent the export of equipment that can be used in torture in each of the last 18 months.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: None. I have not received any information about any such proposed exports.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions representatives of his Department have met representatives of IPS and CAZ in the last five years.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: It is not possible to answer this question on the information provided.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial support was given to Mr. Frank Scott to enable him to visit the far east for the purpose of selling electro-shock equipment.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: There is no evidence of ICL Technical Plastics Ltd., or Mr. Frank Stott of that company, receiving financial support for this purpose.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the British Overseas Trade Board has used public money to subsidise covert and operational procurement exhibitions related exhibitions overseas in each of the last five years.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: Over the last five years contributions towards exhibitors' costs have been made under the DTI's trade fairs support scheme in respect of six COPEX exhibitions in the United States of America.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions in the last 10 years trade and investment representations of SAS have met officials or Ministers from his Department.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 24 January 1995]: It is not possible to answer this question on the information provided.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Dorrell: As indicated in the respective agency framework documents, it is for the chief executives to respond on operational and managerial matters and their respective replies are reproduced.

In 1993–94, Historic Royal Palaces met or exceeded all its key performance targets including achieving a 2 per cent. target for an efficiency gain on running costs. For the same year, Royal Parks met all but one of its key performance targets, including achieving a 1.5 per cent. target for an efficiency gain on running costs. The one missed target was due to circumstances beyond the Royal Parks' control.

Prior to the creation of these two agencies, central functions were provided by the Department of the Environment. In view of the expenditure transfers between Departments when my Department was established in April 1992 and the provision of some central services on an allied basis without repayment, details of these could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Letter from David Welsh to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your Question about the changes in the operations and costs of managing the Royal Parks that have become necessary since we became a Next Steps Agency.

The Agency moved into the Police Station in Hyde Park. Since this building belongs to the Royal Parks, no rental is involved.

We required eight staff to provide personnel, registry and reception functions that were previously provided by the Department of Environment.

The Agency's logo cost £16,000 to design, and we spend £7,500 on supplying stationery for a year. We produce a brochure each year informing the public of the programme of free entertainment available in the Royal Parks. This cost £9,000 to produce and is available free to the public.

The Agency has no corporate clothing and has no executive cars.

Letter from David Beeton to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 26 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your question about the changes in the operation and costs of managing the Historic Royal Palaces that have become necessary since we became a Next Steps Agency.

We have not acquired any headquarters building and have not acquired any additional support staff. We do not publish periodical journals and have no executive cars.

Our identities for each palace are based on a relevant Royal Coat of Arms.

Staff uniforms cost £150,000 a year (including Yeoman Warders, Jewel House Warders at Hampton Court and Kensington Palace and shop and ticketing staff).

The annual cost of specially designed stationery is £17,000.

Disabled People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the departments and agencies for which he has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document "Forces and Ability".

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available figures show that 17 non-industrial staff employed by my Department and associated agencies identified themselves as disabled. This represents 1.6 per cent. of all staff. Of this total, three are registered disabled and 14 are not registered.

Electricity Companies (Sponsorship)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had (a) with Northern Electric and (b) with the other regional electricity companies about their sponsorship of regional arts and sporting events.

Mr. Dorrell: I have had no discussions with either Northern Electric or any other regional electricity company regarding its sponsorship of regional arts and sporting events.

Library and Information Commission

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress he has made towards creating the new Library and Information Commission.

Mr. Dorrell: The reaction since my predecessor announced in July 1993 his intention to draw up proposals for a co-ordinating body to advise Government on library and information issues has been very positive. Responses to the consultation document issued in February 1994 showed broad support for the proposals in the library and information community. Having regard to this, I announced in October 1994 that the Government would be proceeding with the establishment of the Library and Information Commission.

I have now appointed as the commission's first chairman, Mr. Matthew Evans, chairman of Faber and Faber Ltd. His appointment will run for three years until 31 December 1997 and will be renewable by mutual consent. Among many other qualities, Mr. Evans combines the cultural and economic awareness the library and information sector must encompass if it is, as the Government intend, to make a significant contribution to the success of organisations and individuals as the United Kingdom moves into the next century.

After further consultation with my ministerial colleagues and with Mr. Evans, I shall in due course announce to the House the remainder of my appointments to the commission, which I envisage will number around a dozen.

I can now confirm the formal terms of reference for the new commission, which state that it will:

> advise Government Departments representing the United Kingdom in European Union and other international policy-making bodies on the implications of their activities for library and information services;
> develop, in association with the relevant Government Departments as far as necessary to achieve consonance with Government policy, a strategy for research and development requirements in the library and information field, having regard to the needs and interests of all areas of library and information activity and of all parts of the United Kingdom, and secure the disbursement of the available funds in accordance with that strategy;
> advise on, and where necessary to draw the Government's attention to, the implications for library and information services, including the commercial information sector, of particular policy or technological developments;
> as necessary advise on and assist the Government in developing and keeping up-to-date library and information policies and support activity which gives effect to such policies;
> provide independent expert advice as necessary on specific issues referred to it by Government Departments or other relevant bodies;
> advise Government Departments which so request on co-ordinating, and avoiding unnecessary duplication between, information services of different types and assume such executive activities in support of this aim as the Government may specify and resources permit; and > co-operate as it and the Government see fit with other relevant bodies.

The Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland have carefully considered the proposals to establish a new body. My colleagues in Scotland and Wales have concluded that, in view of the different traditions, statutory provisions, where appropriate, and the present organisational arrangements applying to Scotland and Wales, as well as existing mechanisms for co-operation, the remit of the new commission should not for most purposes extend to those countries. In the areas of international representation and research strategy, however, the commission's remit will be United Kingdom-wide. For each of these functions, the commission will operate primarily through sub-committees. The arrangements for these sub-committees, including their terms of reference and their representation of Scottish and Welsh interests, will be determined in consultation with my right hon. friends.

I shall, as proposed in the consultation document, shortly wind up the existing Library and Information Services Council (England). At the same time, in close co-operation with the local authorities, I shall be establishing a new advisory council to advise me on my responsibilities under the terms of the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964 and in particular on public libraries in England.

Welsh Rock and Folk Music Council

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, columns 115-16, if he will place in the Library a copy of his report from the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts on the circumstances of the award to the Welsh Rock and Folk Music Council.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 January 1995]: No. The report was prepared for the use of my Department. Its conclusions will be taken into account by the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts in determining its response to the matters under review.

Arts Grants, Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list those cultural organisations which have received grants from the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts in Wales under the business sponsorship incentive scheme, which also received a grant from the sponsorship scheme run by the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority, S4C, and the Independent Television Producers Association, TAC.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 January 1995]: The information requested is as follows:

Theatre Bara Caws
Y Faner
Dalier Sylw
Ewrosgol
Creu Cof
Cwmni Dawns Camre Cain
Welsh International Film Festival
Wales Actors Company
Arad Goch
Hwyl a Fflag
National Film and Video Archive of Wales
Clwyd Arts and Exhibition Service
Taliesin Trust
Theatr Gorllewin Morgannwg
Barddas: y Gymdeithas Gerdd Dafod
Theatr Had
Model House Llantrisant
Rhiniog

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority concerning the issuing of a new guidelines on the channel's relationship with the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 January 1995]: Any guidelines governing the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority's relationship with the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts are a matter for the authority in the first instance. My Department will be discussing this however in the light of my consideration of the reports to which I referred in my answer of 24 January 1995, Official Report, column 115–16.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority and of the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts concerning the grant given by the authority to the Celtic Film Festival, Zeitgeist Film Productions and the Society of Independent Television Producers of Wales.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 January 1995]: My Department is in touch with both organisations on matters relating to the operation of the business sponsorship incentive scheme in Wales.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

World Summit for Social Development

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the final preparatory committee for the world summit for social development which ended in New York on 27 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The final preparatory committee of the world summit for social development took place in New York from 16 to 18 January. It made considerable progress on the draft declaration and programme of action covering the three core issues of the summit: (a) the enhancement of social integration; (b) alleviation and reduction of poverty; (c) generation of productive employment. The draft texts will be finalised at the summit in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March.

Chechnya

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Russian Government concerning the invasion of Chechnya; what consideration he has given to suspension of economic aid and trade contracts with Russia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Russians are well are of our concerns about their handling of the intervention in Chechnya and, in particular, at the appalling civilian casualties. Most recently, on 24 January, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister wrote to President Yeltsin recognising that there are no easy answers to this deep-rooted problem, but pressing President Yeltsin to put an early end to the fighting; allow humanitarian relief; and work for a political agreement which allows the Chechen people to express their identity within the Russian Federation.

We have encouraged Russia to assist the Organisation on Security and Co-operation in Europe in its efforts to help find a solution to this tragic conflict. We fully support the OSCE's involvement. A senior British official was a member of the OSCE team which has just visited Chechnya. We are also assisting humanitarian relief efforts. The ODA has committed £1 million.

Our aim remains to support democratic reform in Russia. At present, we believe it would be counterproductive to suspend our assistance programmes. Those that would be the most affected are reformers who are feeling most beleaguered at present.

United Nations

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given by his Department to structural changes in the UN, including the Security Council, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In our continuing efforts to improve the performance of the UN, we look at all aspects of the organisation, including structures. For example, we have played a leading role in the restructuring of the UN's peacekeeping and humanitarian efforts. We support the proposed enlargement of the UN Security Council and are playing an active role in the debate in New York.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. Goodlad: No payments have been made to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. by my Department for privatisation programmes since 1979.

Burma

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his current policy towards Burma.

Mr. Goodlad: The situation in Burma remains of great concern. Our policy and that of our European Union partners is one of critical dialogue with the State Law and Order Restoration Council. We have made it clear that normalisation of our relations depends on progress in key areas, including human rights and political and economic reform.

Algeria

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current establishment of the United Kingdom embassy in Algeria; and what safety precautions have been taken.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are currently four diplomats at the embassy in Algiers. The staffing situation is kept under regular review in the light of the security situation there. The diplomats are protected by a team of nine Royal Military police. Major improvements have been made to the physical security of the embassy and staff accommodation.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about his current policy towards Algeria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We deplore the escalating violence on both sides. We call for a wider dialogue involving all those who reject violence with a view to holding genuine elections during the course of this year. We call on the Algerian Government to continue implementing its International Monetary Fund—approved programme of economic reforms.

Lockerbie

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek information from the US Government about the reason why the US air force intelligence document relating to Pan Am 103 produced in 1991 was provided to the parties in a legal dispute relating to the destruction of the aircraft.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the document was released following a request under the United States Freedom of Information Act.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations have been made to the Government of Iran to seek information about Ali Akbar Mohtashemi following the production of the US air force intelligence document relating to Pan Am 103 in 1991;

(2) what representations were made to the Government of the Republic of Syria to seek information about terrorist groups following the production of the US air force intelligence document relating to Pan Am 103 in 1991.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. As I indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend of 26 January, Official Report, column 332, the allegation contained in the document was first made at an early stage in the Lockerbie investigation, was examined at the time, but no evidence has been found to substantiate it.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Edwin Bollier of the Swiss Company Mebo sought the opportunity to see the circuit board relating to the timing device in Pan Am 103; and whether permission has been given.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has repeatedly made it clear that it would not be proper to discuss communications between the prosecuting authorities and a potential witness in pending criminal proceedings.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Mr.Goodlad: To my knowledge, there have been none.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Hague: The Department of Social Security has six next steps agencies: the Benefits, Contributions, Resettlement, War Pensions, Information Technology Services and Child Support Agencies. Each agency is set demanding annual targets for efficiency and quality of service, and running cost budgets are tightly controlled and subject to specific efficiency savings targets. Direct comparisons between pre and post-agency performance are difficult to make because of change in work loads and the introduction of new work such as that of the Child Support Agency. It is, however, clear that there have been significant improvements as illustrated, for example, in the published evaluation reports on the Resettlement and Contributions Agencies.

Because of changes in work loads and work organisations, it is not possible directly to compare the numbers of support staff before and after the establishment of agencies. The other information requested on agencies' expenditure is in the table.

[5] Figure given is expenditure to date in the current financial year.

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 December, Official Report, columns 929–30, which posts were filled as a result of the employment of executive search agencies; which executive search companies were involved in this exercise; and what were the values of the individual contracts involved.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Name of post	Name of Executive search Agency involved
Pensions Ombudsman	Price Waterhouse
Director of Resource Management and Planning	Price Waterhouse
Director of Procurement (not yet finalised)	Purchasing and Materials Management Services [PMMS]

The value of individual contracts is confidential.

Civil Servants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the departments and agencies for which he has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document "Focus on Ability."

Mr. Hague: On 1 July 1994, the number of registered disabled people in the Department was 1,574. This represented 1.8 per cent. of all staff. Figures for the number and proportion of all disabled people employed in the Department are not yet available. We are still conducting surveys, but indications at this stage are that there are at least as many non-registered disabled people in the Department as there are registered.

Child Support Agency

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints have been received by the Child Support Agency since its inception; how many complaints have resulted in financial redress; on what basis financial redress has been made; and if he will give details of the individual and total payments that have been made.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Dr. Tony Wright, dated 31 January 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on complaints about the Child Support Agency.

From 5 April 1993 to 30 November 1994 the Agency recorded 29,621 complaints. No distinction is made between complaints against the operations of the Agency and those concerning child support legislation.

A special payment will be considered where a clear and unambiguous error by the Agency has resulted in an actual financial loss to the client. To the end of November, 16 such payments had been paid, totalling £1,148.46. This figure includes single payments of £310.00, £300.00, £172.39, £105.91, £100.00, £65.80, £25.00; two payments of £15.00, and six payments for various amounts less than £10.00.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Pensioners

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's estimate of the number of women aged (a) 60 to 65, (b) 65 to 70, (c) 70 to 75, (d) 75 to 80 and (e) over 80 years who have access to (i) only state benefits, (ii) state benefits and state earnings-related pension scheme, (iii) own occupational pensions, (iv) own private pensions and (v) benefits from deceased partners.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The available information is in the tables.

Table 1: Numbers of women pensioners with only state benefits, by age

Age	60 to 64	65 to 74	75 to 79	80 and over
Number	200,000	300,000	200,000	250,000

N.B: these figures are for benefit units so that the husband's income is taken into account for married women.

Table 2: Numbers of women pensioners with an Occupational Pension, by age

Age	60–64	65–69	70–74	75 and over
Number	500,000	650,000	600,000	550,000

Notes:

1. Due to sample sizes it has been necessary to merge age ranges from those requested.
2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 50,000, they are based on small sample sizes and should be treated with caution.
3. Estimates are derived from the 1992 family expenditure survey and the 1991 GAD survey of occupational pensions.
4. SERPS is a state benefit and is therefore included in table 1.
5. Information on the numbers of women receiving private pensions is not available.
6. Separate figures for women receiving occupational pensions and benefits by virtue of their deceased husbands are not available. They are included in the information in table 2.

Privatisation Programmes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which his Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. Hague: The Department of Social Security has not engaged N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. in any capacity.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to its clients' interests.

Mr. Hague: To my knowledge, there have been no such meetings.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 24 November, reference 5/3644/109.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I wrote to the hon. Member on Friday 27 January 1995.

Appeal Tribunal Cases

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Liverpool area have appealed to a social security appeal tribunal against a decision that they have been found fit for work or work within limits; what percentage of appellants was successful; and if he will give the figures for those who were represented and those who were not with the corresponding success rates.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information is in the table.

Appeals on invalidity benefit in the North West Region Year ending 1993

Lodged	3,775
Heard and Decided	1,754
In Appellant's Favour	56 per cent.
Representative and/or Representative and Appellant Present	882
In Appellant's Favour	76 per cent.
No Representative Present	872
In Appellant's Favour	36 per cent.

Government Actuary's Report

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has received the report by the Government Actuary on the operation of the Social Security Acts since 1985.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have today laid before the House a report that the Government Actuary has made on the operation of Social Security Acts between April 1985 and April 1990 in accordance with section 137 of the Social Security Act 1975. The report provides a detailed forward look into the next century of the possible future costs of benefits paid out of the national insurance fund and the contributions likely to be needed to pay for them. The report also takes account of proposals in the Pensions Bill and I welcome the extra information it provides to the debate.

HEALTH

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order a public inquiry into improper payments made to chief executives and senior managers of NHS trusts in the last three years.

Mr. Malone: No. National health service trusts have powers under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 to determine the terms of their staffs' employment contracts. However, the Department has issued guidance to trusts—TEL(94)3—which makes it clear that they are expected to use these powers responsibly with regard to probity and value for money. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Surgical Procedures

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the number of surgical procedures carried out by persons not legally qualified to operate on patients in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to require all meetings of NHS trusts to discuss tendering to be fully minuted; and what assessment she has made of NHS trusts' compliance with European Community tendering regulations.

Mr. Sackville: No. Paragraph 8 of section 10 of the Public Supply Contracts Regulations 1991 already requires national health service trusts to prepare a record in relation to the award of all contracts and sets out the information to be recorded. We are satisfied that NHS trusts are fully aware of their statutory obligations under those regulations.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the mental hospitals in the northern region in which there are patients suffering from involuntary tranquilliser addiction.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Waiting Times

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will carry out a study to determine the influence that private practice in the same unit or speciality has on the waiting list and waiting time for treatment in the NHS.

Mr. Malone: We have no plans for such a study.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those NHS trusts where, over the past 12 months, waiting times in accident and emergency departments have been reported as being longer than five minutes for an initial assessment and longer than two hours for treatment.

Mr. Malone: Information on the percentage of patients at national health service trusts who are seen and assessed within five minutes of arrival and accident and emergency departments for the three months ended March 1994 was published in "The Patients Charter Hospital and Ambulance Services Comparative Performance Guide 1993–94", copies of which are available in the Library.

Information on patients waiting longer than two hours for treatment in accident and emergency departments is not available centrally.

Herbal Remedies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what restrictions she proposes on the sale to members of the public of herbal remedies and other products currently available without restriction in health shops.

Mr. Sackville: The existing Medicines Act 1968 provisions governing the sale and supply of herbal remedies will continue to apply.

Herbal products not covered by medicines controls may fall under the provisions of food safety legislation; there are no plans to change this position.

Private Health Care

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many beds there are in private hospitals;

(2) how many people are currently employed in the private health sector;

(3) how many beds there are in private nursing homes;

(4) how many people are currently employed in private nursing homes.

Mr. Sackville: On 31 March 1994, there were 11,371 beds in private hospitals and 165,021 in private nursing homes. Figures are not available for the total number of people employed in the private health care sector and in private nursing homes, but the number of nursing staff in private nursing homes was 154,688—Source K036 returns.

Disabled People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the Departments and agencies for which she has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document "Focus on Ability".

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 5 December 1994, Official Report, columns 85–87. No single definition of disability is given in the Cabinet Office document "Focus On Ability".

Asthma, Rotherham

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current incidence of asthma amongst children under 10 years of age in the Rotherham district health authority; and what the figures were (a) in 1985 and (b) in 1975.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. John Neill, chairman of Rotherham health authority, for details.

Special Transitional Grant

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those local authorities which have failed to meet the requirement to spend 85 per cent. of the transfer element of the special transitional grant in the independent sector.

Mr. Bowis: Audited returns detailing community care spending in the independent sector by local authorities in 1993–94 were due to be submitted to the Department by 31 December 1994. Some returns are still outstanding and are being followed up through the Audit Commission.

Trade Union-financed Facilities

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many beds there are in the trade union-financed hospitals;

(2) how many beds there are in trade union-financed nursing homes.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected by the Department.

Consultants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of whether consultants are complying with their NHS contracts and whether private practice interferes with the function of the NHS or disadvantage non-paying patients.

Mr. Malone: National health service consultants are able to undertake private practice work as well as NHS work provided that it is not to the disadvantage of the NHS or NHS patients. NHS employers are responsible for ensuring that consultants are fulfilling their contractual commitments.

Care Workers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she intends to implement a compulsory register for all paid care workers.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) on 25 January, Official Report, column 254.

Operations (Cancellations)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which NHS trusts, over the past 12 months, it has been reported that operations have been cancelled on the day they were due to take place; and where, in such circumstances, patients have not been readmitted within one month.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of patients at national health service trusts who, having suffered two last minute cancellations, were not admitted within a month thereafter, is published, for the three months ended March 1994, in "The Patient's Charter Hospital and Ambulance Services Comparative Performance Guide 1993–1994", copies of which are available in the Library.

Single-sex Wards

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which NHS trusts do not currently admit patients to single-sex wards if that is their wish.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answers of 21 November to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshaw (Mr. Morris), Official Report, column 29, and of 11 January to the hon. Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Mr. Trend), Official Report, column 145, how haemophiliacs who may have received blood contaminated with hepatitis C will be traced for counselling and treatment if information is not centrally available to identify them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Blood products used in the treatment of haemophilia patients have been virally inactivated since 1985. Doctors treating these patients are aware that prior to this date blood products carried the risk of transmission of hepatitis C. We understand that the majority of haemophilia patients have been counselled and tested as part of the management of their condition.

Nurses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of whether a sufficient number of people are qualifying as nurses and of the Royal College of Nursing report "Opening the Door".

Mr. Sackville: The number of training commissions required to supply an adequate number of newly qualified staff is determined by local employers, to ensure a good balance between demand and supply of highly qualified trained nurses. Regional plans to commission training places are monitored and overseen by the national health service executive.

We welcome the publication of the Royal College of Nursing report "Opening the Door" as it shows a healthy majority of both newly qualified and experienced nurses gain considerable job satisfaction from their posts and do not wish to work outside nursing.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses were trained in 1994; how many are expected to be trained in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In 1993–94 22,829 students started courses of nurse education. Confirmed figures are not yet available for 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97. Final figures for these years will be provided in due course in the annual reports of the English National Board of Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total number of recorded cot deaths in England and Wales for each of the past five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table:

Cot deaths to infants and children aged under 5, England and Wales 1989–3[3]

Year	SIDS[1]	Sudden infant deaths[2]
1989	1,261	1,367
1990	1,156	1,246
1991	935	1,051
1992	515	579
1993 (provisional)	422	457

[1] Deaths where sudden infant death syndrome—International classification of Diseases 9th Revision 798.0—is the only cause mentioned on the death certificate.

[2] Deaths where "SIDS", "Cot Death", or similar terms, was mentioned with other causes on the certificate.

[3] The figures for 1989–92 are based on annual registrations. The figures for 1993 are based on occurrences.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of all recorded cot deaths in England and Wales in the last five years were attributable to (a) colds and bronchial conditions, (b) emissions from plastic bedding and (c) urine and its reaction with bedding.

Mr. Sackville: The causes of sudden infant death syndrome remain unknown and substantial Government-funded and voluntary sector research continues in this area. It is not possible to attribute incidence by the categories mentioned.

Camden and Islington Health Authority

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to reduce waiting lists for elective surgery in Camden and Islington health authority.

Mr. Malone: It is for Camden and Islington health authority to ensure that the shortest possible waiting times are available to its resident population from the hospitals with which it has contracts, and to ensure that at the very least the maximum waits guaranteed under the patients charter are not exceeded.

Under the new patients charter which comes into effect in April we have reduced the maximum time patients will have to wait for elective surgery from two years to 18 months from the date of their going on to a waiting list.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conclusions she has reached on the use of cannabis under the Medicines Acts for the relief of pain for sufferers of multiple sclerosis or glaucoma.

Mr. Bowis: None, but I have seen and heard representations on this issue.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which her Department has engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. Sackville: There are no such sums to report.

Royal Northern Hospital

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what future plans her Department has for the Royal Northern hospital, Holloway road, N7; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: None. The hon. Member may wish to approach Sir William Staveley, chairman of North Thames regional health authority, for information about the future of this site.

Reversal of Status Forms

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in each regional health authority in each of the past three years are recorded as having signed reversal of status forms from (a) private to NHS and (b) NHS to private.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 14, on capital allocations, if she will set out the undershoot on external financing limits at November 1994 by region.

Mr. Sackville: The external financing limits set for each trust are annual targets. Performance against them is measured at the year end and reported in trust annual accounts. External financing limits are equivalent to a cash limit on both revenue and capital expenditure by trusts. There is therefore no direct relationship between under or overshooting the limit and capital expenditure.

Young Carers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the number of children and young persons who are currently providing a substantial amount of remedial care to a sick, elderly or disabled relative.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) on 17 January Official Report, column 387.

Patient Anonymity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for health (1) what arrangements she has made to protect patient anonymity in the collection of medical records for statistical purposes in the area of (a) mental health, (b) cancer and (c) other categories;

(2) what consultations she has had with the Data Protection Registrar concerning the future protection of patient anonymity in the collection of data from medical records for statistical purposes in the area of (a) mental health, (b) cancer and (c) other categories.

Mr. Sackville: Patient information is confidential.

Information given by patients concerning their health and treatment is protected by the common law, the Data Protection Act 1984 and the ethical responsibilities of health professionals. This applies even when the information is anonymised and aggregated.

We have recently consulted on draft guidance for the national health service on "Confidentiality, Use and Disclosure of Personal Health Information" which includes advice on the use of anonymised/aggregated information. Prior to the consultation we had a number of meetings and discussions with the Data Protection Registrar.

We have since received comments from the Data Protection Registrar on the use and disclosure of personal health information, which are being considered.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) Informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Mr. Sackville: Officials receive representations about a wide range of matters. Central records are not kept of meetings with external organisations, and to the best of our knowledge no such meetings have taken place.

Waterborne Viruses

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out by her Department into the health impacts of viruses in sea and river water.

Mr Sackville: The Government funded an extensive four-year research programme into the health effects of sea-bathing, which was published in January 1994.

The study concluded that bathing in water that met the current bathing water directive standards was not associated with overt infection or serious illness.

Capital Schemes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date each individual capital scheme received external financing limit approval; on what date it received final approval after being tested for private finance initiative funding; and what was its value for each region since April 1994.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a list of capital schemes that received initial external financing limit approval but were rejected for final approval after failing to achieve private funding under the private finance initiative in each region since April 1994, indicating the value of each scheme.

Mr. Sackville: No capital schemes have been rejected for failing to secure funding under the private finance initiative.

Long-term Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has received to the draft guidance on long-term care; when she expects to issue new guidance; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 10 January, Official Report, column 118, and to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 26 January, Official Report, column 343.

Children (Residential Care)

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by the support force for children's residential care since September 1993; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The support force for children's residential care has recently reported on its progress in its first year. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

This report demonstrates the significant progress made by the support force in its first year. It has worked in partnership with over 50 authorities and independent sector providers to help bring about improvements in residential care for children and young people.

Private Dental and Medical Insurance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's estimate of the number of people with the cover of private dental insurance, and of private medical insurance.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply, 20 January 1995, c. 765]: I regret that my previous reply is incorrect. It should read:

"Information on the number of people with private dental insurance and medical insurance is not collected by the Department."

Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the length of time allowed for general practitioners to obtain adequate training to judge on applications under the chronic bronchitis and emphysema regulations, and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: I have been asked to reply.

This Department has no responsibility for the training of general practitioners.

Assessments of disablement for prescribed disease D12—chronic bronchitis and emphysema—are made by independent adjudicating medical practitioners, all of whom are fully registered medical practitioners.

Prior to the introduction of PD D12 on 13 September 1993, the AMPs were given a training package approved by the DSS's senior medical advisers.

The training package consisted of:

(1) an introductory course of one day given by an expert in respiratory medicine;

(2) half-day refresher training in spirometry—FEV1 test;

(3) training in reading X-rays over a four-month period;

(4) training manuals taking six hours to assimilate the information.

The AMPs who assess PD D12 all have considerable prior experience in the examination and assessment procedures for industrial injuries and prescribed diseases.

EDUCATION

Public Bodies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 722, if she will list the 28 boards, authorities, committees and other public bodies and the total amount of public spending relevant to each body.

Mr. Boswell: The information given is the latest available.

[1] In addition to the DFE grant, CILT will receive grant of over £100,000 from other government departments.
[2] The further education unit and the Further Education staff college ceased to be supported by the Department for Education after the end of the 1992–93 financial year, Government funding now falls under the FEFC budget.
[3] Government funding for the Further Education Development Association falls under the FEFC budget.
[4] The expenditure total of £2 million includes a small amount—£68,000—of preparatory expenditure prior to the establishment of the agency.
[5] The university commissioners ceased to be supported by the Department for Education after the end of the 1993–94 financial year. In the 1994–95 financial year provision of £25,000 was made in the Department's running costs for the residual work of the commissioners.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 722, if she will list the appointees of each of the 28 boards, authorities, committees and other public bodies, and what the remuneration was of the appointees.

Mr. Boswell: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will provide estimates for the total amount that has been paid to N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. with respect to any work undertaken by it on privatisation programmes in which her Department has been engaged since 1979 after taking account of inflation.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has not commissioned N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd. to undertake any work on privatisation.

Postgraduate Support Scheme

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which institutions or students are to lose funding as a consequence of the reduction in the postgraduate support scheme funding; what the level of the reduction is in total; and how much will be lost by each institution or student affected.

Mr. Boswell: Provision for the Department's postgraduate awards scheme will be reduced by 10 per cent. from 1995–96 to a total of £4.3 million.

From the academic year 1995–96, bursary support will be withdrawn from postgraduate courses as follows:

Journalism
University College, Cardiff
City University

Tourism
University of Surrey

Language studies
University of Bath
University of Bradford
University of Kent
University of Westminster

Art gallery and museum studies
University of Manchester
University of Leicester

The number of bursaries for postgraduate studies in librarianship and information studies in the academic year 1995–96 will be reduced by 10 per cent. at the following institutions:

University College Wales Aberystwyth
University of Central England
Thames Valley University
Leeds Metropolitan University
Liverpool John Moores University
Loughborough University
Manchester Metropolitan University University College London
University of Northumbria
University of North London.

Students already on courses will not be affected.

It is not possible to give figures in respect of the financial effect on individual institutions or students since bursaries are means-tested and the circumstances of individuals vary significantly.

Lay School Inspectors

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what vocational training grants are available to individuals following lay school inspector courses;

(2) what expenses may be claimed by individuals training to be lay school inspectors.

(3) how many individuals have undertaken training to be lay school inspectors in England and Wales.

Mr. Forth: These are matters for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Mr. Boswell: There were no meetings between departmental staff and representatives of Ian Greer Associates on 26 January.
